HOW TO MAINTAIN Asian Recorder FILE:

ASIAN RECORDER news sheets are issued weekly. They are numbered consecutively from the first issue in January, 1955.

Events in all the countries of Asia are listed under each country, arranged alphabetically, with a summary for each if necessary.

Events about Asia happening outside Asia are listed under a separate heading —ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA.

Sport is listed at the end, without regard to country.

Each item is acknowledged to the source from which it is taken—newspaper, periodical, Radio, Embassy or Government Department—to give it authority.

Every three months, these news-sheets are accompanied by an INDEX. Each year, the Annual INDEX will incorporate all the three previous quarterly indices. An explanation of the INDEX is given on the back cover.

To insert news-sheets in the cover-binder, open the binder by the back-flap, unscrew the nuts, raise the flat rod and insert the news-sheets : thereafter, let the flat rod rest on the sheets, press the flat rod firmly and screw down the nuts.

CHINA

SUMMARY: Soviet Move For Normalization Of Relations: Economic Difficulties; New Role For Philosophers; Wheat Deals.

A. Soviet Move For Normalization Of Relations: Mr. Nikolai Podgorny, a member of the Communist Party Presidium, told the October Revolution Day rally in the Kremlin on November 6, 1963 that the Soviet Union "sincerely wishes to normalise relations with the People's Republic of China."

He said: "There are no objective reasons to prevent restoration of the good relations which existed between USSR and the People's Republic of China in the past."

Mr. Podgorny, giving the traditional "state of the nation" speech in the Kremlin Palace of Congresses, added that the Soviet party was not responsible for the "differences of opinion". He said polemical methods, "impermissible between comrades", were "distracting attention from the struggle with imperialism and colonialism". He urged solidarity in the struggle against "the common enemy... imperialism and colonialism".

He said that world developments bore out "the outstanding importance and correctness of Lenin's idea of the peaceful co-existence of States with different social systems...." He added that a German peace settlement "remains one of the most important problems in the world today" in any future moves to relax international tension.

The Soviet Premier, Mr. Khruschev said the same day (November 6) that Russia was trying its best to remove the friction with China, and told Americans to keep their noses out of eventual Sino-Soviet discussions for which a method would be found.

Questioned at an interview in his Kremlin office with 21 leading American businessmen about the state of relations between China and Russia, he said: "...The friction that we have with China...is something that causes us deep concern and we are doing our utmost to remove that friction and restore the good and friendly relations between our communist parties and peoples. But the friction we have with China merely causes joy on your part and you would like that friction to become even greater and to be even more profound..."

He added: "So let's take the whole matter off the agenda, because it is one that concerns only ourselves and China. We will find a method to discuss this with China and I do not think your nose would be quite in place in such a discussion."

Chinese Reaction:

By November 15, it was known that Mr. Khruschev's appeal to China to discontinue open polemics was not cutting much ice in Peking, because it was regarded there as "nothing but a trick" to cover up Russia's "more frenzied anti-China activities."

China's answer to Mr. Khruschev's appeal came on November 15 in the form of a Hsinhua despatch, prominently reported in the Peking Press, which accused the Soviet Union of "vigorously keeping up" its anti-China campaign.

Hsinhua said that over 2,000 articles and other items had been published by the Soviet Press since the July 14 open letter of the Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee in maintaining the anti-China campaign.

Ridiculing Mr. Khruschev's appeal, Hsinhua charged that the Soviet papers' "wanton attacks on China had continued as usual, after the so-called appeal was made." The People's Daily, organ of the Chinese Communist Party, described the appeal as "nothing but a cover for their wanton attacks on China."

Hsinhua accused the articles in the Soviet Press of "distorting" and "slandering" China's stand on international issues, and its line for building socialism and other policies and "even hurling abuse" at Mao Tse-tung. "The Soviet Press would not interrupt its anti-China campaign even during the celebrations of the 46th anniversary of the October Revolution."

B. Economic Difficulties: A statement issued to the Press on December 3 at the end of the 1963 session of the National People's Congress after more than two weeks of secret debate claimed that China had overcome the economic difficulties caused by three successive years of serious natural calamities and by the "perfidious action of those who unilaterally tore up agreements and withdrew experts."

The statement said that the deputies had debated a resolution on the economic plans and Budget for 1963 and 1964 and various other reports.

It said: "China is now capable of designing quite a number of big, modern, industrial enterprises, including iron and steel plants, coal mines and oil refineries each with an annual capacity of more than a million tons, hydro-electric power stations of more than 600,000 kw, chemical fertilizer plants with an annual output of 100,000 tons of nitrogenous fertilizer, etc."

The agricultural situation had improved for the third year in succession. This year's harvest had been "relatively good" with a new increase in foodgrain output and a fairly big growth in "major industrial crops".

This year's plans for industrial production would be fulfilled in all major respects while capital construction had increased compared with 1962.

Both the plan for the total retail sales of commodities and the foreign trade plan would be over-fulfilled. "There had been a wage increase of 40 per cent for the workers and staff in 1963 and the money paid as awards had also increased."

China had continued to pay the debts and the interest owed to the Soviet Union. All would be cleared by the end of 1965.

The main task for China in 1964 was to try for a still better harvest. The second task was to "strive for a continued steady rise in industrial production on the basis of raising the technical level including quality and increasing variety".

Other tasks included strengthening the construction of basic industry, farm irrigation products, and the national defence industries.

On international affairs, the statement said that Chinese international prestige and influence continued to expand. "US imperialism, the reactionaries, and the modern revisionists had become increasingly isolated. The unity of the Chinese people with the people of other socialist countries grew ever closer."

According to observers, the National People's Congress produced little that was really new in Chinese policy either in politics or economics. The one new feature was that the next Congress, to be elected before September, 1964, would have twice as many deputies.

The general tenor of the meeting was that the country would continue to develop along the paths which it had followed since the beginning of 1961, at which time the Great Leap Forward was declared officially over. There is, however, more emphasis on industrial production. This, taken with reports of moderate successes in agriculture, may be taken to indicate greater optimism by China's leaders. The economic situation has undoubtedly improved in the past year.

Heavy industry is probably still recovering from the effects of the Great Leap Forward, and claims for increases in total production of commodities like steel and oil must be viewed with doubt unless the increase is allowed to be a small one. One of the difficulties, which the Chinese have in building up a solid base for industry is the lack of skilled men, and though they claim that "an army of technicians is coming into being", the fact is that if a new plant is opened all its skilled labour must be brought from some other plant which suffers correspondingly.

The Congress statement modestly claimed a relatively good harvest, which is probably fair, but "with a new increase in the output of foodgrains", rather surprising in view of the drought disaster which affected this year's rice crop. Experts in Peking believe that there is not likely to have been any increase in grain, though they are inclined to accept that there has been an improvement in the industrial crops.

"People's Daily" Comment:

Commenting on the Congress session, a People's Daily editorial discussed on December 3 how the withdrawal of Soviet aid and experts had created economic difficulties for China.

The paper admitted that "for a period in recent years, because of lack of experience in construction work and absence of a complete and perfect set of policies on certain specific practical questions and because some of the work was not done in conformity with the spirit of the general line for socialist construction, some shortcomings and mistakes occurred in practical work resulting in difficulties in economic construction."

It also accused the Soviet Union of perfidy in its relations with China. "In this period we also encountered an unexpected difficulty. This was caused by the Soviet authorities who in July, 1960 seized the opportunity to bring pressure to bear upon us and extend the ideological differences between the Chinese and the Soviet parties to the sphere of State relations.

"They (the Soviet authorities) suddenly and unilaterally decided to withdraw all their experts totalling 1,390, who were assisting China in its work, tore up 343 contracts and supplementary provisions concerning the experts and annulled 257 items of scientific and technical cooperation. After that they heavily slashed supply of whole sets of equipment and crucial parts of installations.

"This caused heavy losses to China's work of construction and dislocated its original plan for the development of national economy, greatly aggravating our difficulties."

The National People's Congress—judging from the communique—had not touched upon the problem of the Nationalist Chinese stronghold of Formosa and the Sino-Indian border question.

Peking's preoccupation, therefore, is primarily with its relations with the Soviet Union and internal difficulties.

China is now having yearly plans and not five-year plans because it is not in a position to look that far ahead. While the communique referred to the 1964 Plan, it has not given the slightest hint as to what it is like.

C. New Role For Philosophers: Newspapers in China reported on November 25, 1963 that a conference called by the Chinese Academy of Sciences had urged philosophers and social scientists to play an active part in the Communist party struggle against modern revisionism in the international Communist movement.

The report, which appeared across the front pages of all newspapers under the headline "Oppose Modern Revisionism; Study Contemporary Revolutionary Questions", said the questions discussed at the conference were: "The active struggle against modern revisionism in the sphere of philosophy and social science, another drive to study Marxism-Leninism and a study of Mao Tse-tung's thinking."

It said: "A great debate of tremendous historical importance is being waged... in the present day international communist movement." Modern revisionists had "completely altered the revolutionary line and fundamental theories of Marxism-Leninism. They were challenging all the basic principles of Marxism in philosophy, political economy, the theories of socialism and communism, history, the theories of literature and art and in other fields".

Philosophers and social scientists "could not steel themselves as worthy revolutionaries and militant Marxists" unless they took an active part in the struggle against modern revisionism.

The report said the conference agreed to continue the policy of "letting a hundred schools of thought" contend in the academic field—but only so long as none of the hundred schools contained liberal, revisionist or anti-Marxist ideas and so long as all based themselves on Mao Tse-tung's thinking.

D. Wheat From Australia: The Australian Wheat Board has made a further bulk sale of about 41 million bushels of wheat valued at more than £A30 million to China.

The Board said on November 22, 1963 that China had bought more than 260 million bushels valued at almost £A200 million at regular intervals during the past three years and was regarded as an established and potential long-term market.

Wheat sold under the latest contract would be shipped from the 1963-64 crop, deliveries of which had already begun in some States. The Board said that in recent weeks it could have sold forward more wheat than it was at present in a position to offer. Practically no surplus stocks were in sight in Australia to offer for sale to other than established customers until the prospects of the 1964-65 harvest took shape.

Canadian Wheat:

The Canadian Wheat Board announced on December 4, 1963 that China had made a second 18,700,000-bushel wheat purchase under the long-term Agreement signed last April.

Worth about $35 million, the wheat will be shipped from Pacific ports between February 1 and June 30, 1964.

China has agreed to take a minimum of 112 million bushels of wheat and a maximum of 187,600,000 bushels in a three-year period starting August 1.

The payment terms are 25 per cent cash when the wheat is loaded into a vessel bound for China, and the balance within 18 months.

E. Trade Fact With Finland: China and Finland have agreed to exchange goods up to the value of 8.5 million roubles each way.

Among commodities to be exported from Finland to China in 1963 were: chemical pulp, mechanical pulp, bare and insulated wire, steel-cored aluminium conductors, machinery and equipment for wood-working industries, ships and equipment for ships, excavators and spare parts, tractors and spare parts, trucks and buses and spare parts, saw-blades, and electrical machines.

F. Irrigation System: A giant irrigation system between the Yangtze and Huai Rivers is being extended to irrigate nearly 200,000 hectares —50,000 hectares more than was irrigated in 1962.

INDIA

SUMMARY: UN Observer's Verdict On Pakistan's Violation Of Cease-fire In Chaknot; King Hussein's Visit; Japanese Reparations; Effects Of 1963 Taxes.

A. Pakistan's Violation Of Cease-fire Agreement In Chaknot —Chief UN Observer's Verdict: The Minister of State for External Affairs, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon disclosed in the Lok Sabha on December 9, 1963 that the Chief UN Military Observer in Kashmir had given a clear verdict that it was Pakistan and not India which violated the Cease-fire Agreement by concentrating troops in the Chaknot area.

After drawing attention to the "fuss" made recently by Pakistan over Chaknot, Mrs. Menon pointed out that the UN Observers' report had demonstrated the extent to which the Pakistani authorities could go "in their crusade of hatred against India, and in their determination to mislead the world about Indo-Pakistan relations".

She added: "It is not our policy to hold out threats of force, although we shall naturally defend ourselves, if attacked. At the same time, as we believe in solving difficulties by peaceful methods, we will give every assistance to the UN Observers to preserve and maintain the inviolability of the cease-fire."

In the same statement she disclosed that Pakistan was known to have distributed arms to the civilian population in "Azad Kashmir" and that there were authoritative reports in Pakistan about the training of guerrillas although, naturally, it was not possible to get precise information on this point.

But she added emphatically that Pakistan's allegation that the civilian population was being armed to "resist Indian troops raiding villages in Pakistan to lift cattle and molest women" was "completely false, baseless and malicious".

When Members inquired if India was adequately prepared to meet the threat of Pakistani guerrillas, the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru intervened to say that that was so.

B. King Hussein's Visit: Warm greetings were exchanged between the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan and King Hussein of Jordan when the King arrived in New Delhi on December 3, 1963 on a 12-day State visit.

Welcoming the King, Dr. Radhakrishnan thanked him for being the first to express his sympathies "unequivocally" with India during the Chinese aggression.

He congratulated him for the many improvements he had introduced in his country. Describing him as perhaps the youngest ruler in the world, he said that a youthful mind with a spirit of adventure was best suited to the changing conditions in the world.

The King, in his reply, said that they were proud to have "the best of relations" with India—a country with which they shared "the same principles and the same ideals of freedom, love of peace and dignity."

He expressed the hope that he and members of his party would benefit from this visit as Jordan was a small country with a small population and they were trying their utmost to build it as "an example to others around us". In this respect "you have a lead over us".

The Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain, the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, Central Ministers, the Mayor of Delhi and diplomats were among those who received the King at the airport. On his arrival he was given an inter-Services guard of honour and a 21-gun salute.

The King's party included Mr. Bahjat al-Talhouni, Chief of the Royal Court and a former Prime Minister, Dr. Hazim Nusseibeh, Minister for the Royal Court; Mr. Amin Younis al-Husseini, Minister for Social Welfare and Mr. Nassouh al-Taher, Vice-Chairman of the Development Board.

State Banquet:

At a State banquet on December 3, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan and King Hussein stressed the need for further strengthening the friendly ties between India and Jordan.

Dr. Radhakrishnan said: "Our relations with you in trade and culture are increasing steadily and your visit will strengthen the bonds which already bind our two countries.

"When we had this trouble with China, you were among the first to declare unequivocally your sympathies with the Indian people and you gave us courage and cheer at a time when we felt rather depressed. I thank you for that.

"War is our greatest enemy. We must all become partners in the quest for peace, stand by one another, not in enmity, not in arming ourselves but in trying to protect the vital interests of humanity."

King Hussein in his reply said: "As for our stand during the crisis which this great country and nation faced, we were not alone. Millions of people all over the world who share our beliefs and share our pride in being free and have the same ideals and cherish them, were worried and were anxious at that time when they felt that force, brute force, and aggression cannot alter or affect what this country stands for and what this country inspires others through its stand.

"We were worried and we stood by you, but we were only part of a larger family—a family that is in all the free world, the family to which we belong, those who believe in our principles and cherish our ideals and are free.

"We are also proud of the friendly ties that exist between us and the good relations that exist between us. We know that these relations will grow stronger with the passage of time."

Civic Reception:

At a civic reception on December 4, King Hussein re-iterated his country's "unwavering and unflinching" pledge to stand by India in the "just and righteous cause" of defending her freedom and integrity.

He was cheered by Delhi's "good and friendly citizens" as he called them when he made this declaration in a rich and resonant voice in reply to an address presented to him on the flood-lit lawns of Red Fort.

He did not mention China by name, but the inference was clear in his reference to the aggression on India's northern borders. He drew loud applause, when he declared that Jordan's spontaneous support for India at the time of the aggression sprang from the firm conviction that "any loss India may suffer will be a loss to us."

He referred to the "free, tolerant and democratic way of life" which both Jordan and India held sacred and to the ever-growing bonds of friendship and co-operation between the two countries.

Jordan's relations with India were as old as time, he said, and expressed the hope that his visit would solidify them to meet the challenges of the modern world.

A similar hope was expressed earlier by the Mayor, Mr. Nur-ud-Din Ahmed, in the civic address. Since the dawn of history, he said, India had had intimate contacts with the Arab world.

"We have had mutually profitable exchanges in art and culture, philosophical thought and language with Arab countries during the past many centuries".

The relations between Jordan and India had been most cordial and friendly. "The most recent manifestation of solid Indo-Jordanian friendship was provided by the spontaneous support extended to us last year by Your Majesty's Government at the time of our great national crisis when we were the victims of naked aggression on our northern borders."

The Mayor presented to the King on behalf of Delhi citizens an ivory souvenir made by the skilled craftsmen of the Capital.

Reception By Jamiat And Indo-Arab Society:

On December 5, at a reception by the Jamiat Ulema-e-Hind and the Indo-Arab Society, King Hussein said that the people of Jordan appreciated India's efforts to promote world peace.

He said that he was impressed by the efforts of the people and the Government of India for the development of the country.

He thanked the Jamiat and the Indo-Arab Society for organizing the reception and assured them that he would do his best to strengthen the ties of friendship between India and his country.

Mufti Atiq-ur-Rehman, working president of the Jamiat, presenting an address of welcome to King Hussein, praised him for the progress made by his country. It was only his sincerity and dedication which had accelerated the pace of development in Jordan.

Dr. Syed Mahmud, who welcomed the King on behalf of the Indo-Arab Society, said that India was keen to maintain the old ties of friendship with the Arab world and wanted an Arab federation to be formed soon.

Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, Minister of State for External Affairs, who also spoke, paid a tribute to King Hussein for his dedication to his people.

King Hussein also visited the National Physical Laboratory, the Indian Agricultural Research Institute and the IARI dairy.

Giving his impressions of the Laboratory, the King said: "I am most impressed with whatever I have seen." Work was going on in different fields all over India and he was sure that the country had a very bright future.

In the afternoon, the King witnessed an exhibition polo match.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Dinesh Singh, Deputy Minister for External Affairs, called on the King. He was with him for about an hour.

A group of Jordanian students at present studying in Indian universities met the King in the morning.

On December 6, King Hussein left New Delhi on a tour of the country. Among the places he visited were Agra, Dehra Dun, Ambala, Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Madras, Hyderabad and Bombay. He left India on December 16.

Joint Communique:

In a joint communique issued on December 16, King Hussein and Mr. Nehru expressed the hope that there would be increasing co-operation between the two countries in the cultural, economic and technical fields.

Mr. Nehru assured India's continued readiness to co-operate in Jordan's development.

The communique contained two significant points. The King supported India's stand in relation to Chinese aggression, while Mr. Nehru "expressed understanding and appreciation of the Palestine problem".

They found "similarity of approach" in regard to many issues of international concern as "both countries are vitally interested in the maintenance of peace in the world".

They welcomed the agreement on the partial nuclear test ban Treaty as a first step towards the relaxation of international tension and further agreement on questions relating to general disarmament.

Dr. Radhakrishnan and Mr. Nehru accepted the King's invitation to visit Jordan.

C. Canadian Loans: On December 4, 1963, Canada made long-term loans to India of $8,000,000 for locomotives, $8,000,000 for a hydro-electric station and $1,000,000 towards an aluminium smelter being built by a private company in Kerala.

Agreements on the loans, backed by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, were signed in Ottawa by the Trade Minister, Mr. Mitchell Sharp, and the Indian High Commissioner, Mr. C. S. Jha.

The $1 million loan is part of a joint financing transaction to supply foreign exchange for a $12 million expansion of the Kerala smelter and a foil mill being built in the Bombay area for Indian Aluminium Company Limited.

Another $2,700,000 will come from the Aluminium Company of Canada Limited in Montreal. Its parent, Aluminium Limited, has a 60 per cent interest in the Indian company. The Canadian company will act as general contractor to co-ordinate purchases from various Canadian suppliers.

The $8 million loan for locomotives will cover the purchase of 37 diesels and spares from the Montreal Locomotive Works. The order is expected to provide 700,000 man-hours of work in Canada. The locomotives will go to the Indian Railways.

The other $8 million loan is to cover the purchase of Canadian power plant and sub-station equipment, and Canadian engineering services by Rajasthan for use at one of three dams on a $40 million power and irrigation project. All three Government loans are at 6 per cent interest.

The locomotives loan calls for repayment to start after three years and continue for 12-1|2 years. The Rajasthan loan is repayable over 20 years, starting four years after it is made. The smelter loan repayments will start in the fourth year and continue for 15 years.

D. Atomic Loan Agreement With USA: India took a major step into the atomic age by signing in New Delhi on December 7, 1963 with USA a Rs. 38.1-crore Loan Agreement to construct its first atomic power plant at Tarapur, near Bombay.

Mr. Nehru, who was present at the signing ceremony, hailed the occasion as one of "considerable importance and significance." He re-iterated India's resolve not to use atomic energy for "any warlike purposes".

The Agreement was signed by Mr. Chester Bowles, the US Ambassador, Dr. H. J. Bhabha, Secretary of the Department of Atomic Energy and Mr. L. K. Jha, Secretary of the Department of Economic Affairs.

The 300-mw power plant at Tarapur will be among the largest atomic stations in the world.

While USA will give the foreign exchange component of the project under the Loan Agreement, India will finance the local costs estimated at Rs. 16.1 crores.

The US Atomic Energy Commission will sell India enriched uranium for the plant under a contract being negotiated to cover both the initial and continuing requirements for fuel.

The Tarapur plant will go a long way towards attaining India's high priority goal of raising power production from 5,700 mw at the start of the Third Plan to 12,700 mw by 1966. Over half of the foreign exchange required for this scheme is being met by US long-term credits.

The plant will be operated by the Tarapur Atomic Power Project authority under the Department of Atomic Energy. There are already three nuclear reactors, including one of the largest research reactors of its kind in the world, in operation at the Atomic Energy Establishment at Trombay besides over 1,400 nuclear scientists and engineers, over 100 of whom have received training in USA since 1955 under the AID and the Atoms-for-Peace programmes of USA.

The loan is repayable in dollars over 40 years, with no payments on the principal over the first 10 years, and a credit fee of ¾ of 1 per cent per year.

Mr. Bowles said the Agreement would project India further into the nuclear age. "At a time when most of the world was seeking to reduce the danger of a continuing nuclear arms race, we see here a practical example of a great nation which has given its highest priority to the cause of peace. It is an example that will be noted and applauded around the world."

Those present at the signing ceremony included the Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari and Mr. C. Tyler Wood, Minister-Director of the US Agency for International Development Mission.

E. Japanese Reparations: Japan agreed on December 14, 1963 to pay India $25,000 for damages sustained by Indian nationals during the Sino-Japanese War.

The Agreement completed settlement of all claims against Japan under the Peace Treaty ending World War II. It was signed by the Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, and the Indian Ambassador in Tokyo, Mr. Lalji Mehrotra.

India's World War II claims against Japan have already been settled.

Under the Agreement—signed by the Austrian Foreign Minister, Dr. Bruno Kreisky, and the Indian Charge d'Affaires, Mr. P. Dasgupta—the credit bears interest of 5½ per cent and the money is to be spent by the end of 1964.

The credit is repayable in ten years starting from 1967.

I. State Of Economy—Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari's Statement: In a statement on the state of the economy in the country made in the Lok Sabha on December 16, 1963, the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari disclosed that the exemption limit both for industrial licensing and issues control had been raised from Rs. 10,00,000 to Rs. 25,00,000.

Simultaneously, as a first step in the gradual and orderly relaxation of some of the more onerous controls, it had been decided to end price control in respect of 16 items principally of industrial use.

The list consists of rayon yarn, staple fibre, caustic soda, soda ash, hydrochloric acid, chlorine calcium carbide, bleaching powder, chilean nitrate, muriate of potash, sulphate of potash, washing soap, tyres and tubes, sheet glass, paper board (but not paper) and natural rubber.

He also announced suspension of the premium collections under the emergency risks insurance scheme for the next quarter. This had been decided to afford some relief to the hard-pressed business community and had become possible because a substantial amount had already been collected under this head and the generally easy revenue position. But, of course, this was not to be construed as an end to the scheme.

Owing to the continuing demands of defence and development, he said, the budgetary outlay in 1964 was likely to be even higher than during the current 12-month period. Non-Plan expenditure too was likely to go up in pursuance of the Government's anxiety to extend its social security measures "to the maximum extent possible."

Though small savings might turn out to be a little better than anticipated, market borrowings were not expected to register significant increases. Since deficit financing was ruled out in the present context of a pressure on prices—particularly of rice and sugar—and since taxation had attained substantial proportions, the only avenue left was to rationalise and modify the tax structure so as to improve the performance of the economy. The changes should stimulate savings, investment and production and thus heighten the present buoyance of public revenues.

He said the hopeful trend noticed earlier in the returns of indirect taxes was unlikely to be maintained, though in the end the Budget estimate was likely to be fulfilled. Indirect taxes were expected to do better than anticipated. Altogether, the budgetary deficit might turn out in the end to be smaller than the Rs. 181 crores envisaged at the beginning of the financial year.

Astute and stringent measures were necessary to put an end to large-scale tax evasion, which not only robbed the Exchequer of a sizable slab of revenue but also drove ill-gotten gains underground and thus out of productive economy.

Referring to the desirability of maximising the surpluses of public sector undertakings, he said that over the years more reliance would have to be put on this source than on taxation and it appeared that at least part of the increase could be achieved only through an adjustment in the pricing policy.

This is the context in which he brought up the issue of relaxation of price control generally. In a planned economy, a modicum of control was essential, particularly in regard to scarce items, but it often happened that the actual working of controls hampered those very forces which might eliminate shortages and introduce some measure of competition.

He made it clear that though curbs on consumption had a definite place in a developing economy, in the Indian context, where a majority of the people lived at sub-marginal levels of existence, the solution was to tackle any imbalances or shortages at higher levels of supplies.

With regard to the foreign exchange situation, he said this could be viewed with cautious optimism. Export earnings were on the increase though the drop in invisibles indicated that some of the export incentives were being abused.

J. Steps To Check Corruption, Public Grievances And Administrative Inefficiency: The Central Home Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, announced in New Delhi on December 7, 1963 that three high-power bodies would be set up to deal with corruption, public grievances and administrative inefficiency.

These, he said, would include an "independent" central vigilance commission on the lines of the Union Public Service Commission, a central agency to deal with public grievances and a Union Department of Administrative Reforms.

Mr. Nanda, who was addressing Parliament's Informal Consultative Committee for his Ministry, said that the Vigilance Commission would have extensive functions, so that it could take prompt and effective action against corrupt officials. The Commission would submit an annual report which would be placed before Parliament. It would mention all cases where its advice had not been accepted by the Government.

He was confident that a visible and striking change would be achieved within two years through this measure. The Commission would function with the help of the Special Police Establishment, commissioners for departmental inquiries and departments.

The States, he hoped, would adopt the anti-corruption measures taken by the Centre with suitable modifications. A district-level set-up would also have to be evolved to check corruption.

The public grievances agency would deal with citizens' complaints of administrative malpractices, unsound procedures, wrong though not necessarily dishonest exercise of discretion, delays and lack of courtesy in governmental activity.

The Department of Administrative Reforms would aim at adapting the administrative set-up to changing conditions. It would take action on the recommendations of various committees on the subject and might also make a new study of the governmental structure.

Some members at the meeting suggested greater powers for the Vigilance Commission and stressed the need for care in the selection of its members.

K. Effects Of 1963 Taxes—ACCI's View: The 1963 taxes have undermined confidence and investment in new projects has been retarded. This was the view expressed in a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of India (ACCI) in Calcutta on December 9, 1963.

In another resolution the Chambers stated that the inability to achieve a substantial increase in agricultural output constituted the greatest single obstacle to the country's economic advancement.

The resolution on power suggested that expansion of generating capacity should continue to receive a high priority in the Government's investment programme.

The resolution on prices stated that controls were ineffective and that the only lasting solution to the problem was increased productivity. ACCI adopted three other resolutions: on food and agriculture, export and industry and defence production.

The resolution on taxation pointed out that because of the tax measures, particularly the Super-Profits Tax, the cash resources of companies were being eroded to an extent that must force recourse to bank borrowing to meet commitments.

As the total tax collections had been substantially greater than was expected there was a case for re-examination of the current structure of taxation.

The Chambers stressed the need for certain concessions in the matter of tax on inter-corporate dividends and bonus shares, and the abrogation of the provision for disallowance of remuneration of Indian nationals in excess of Rs. 5,000 a month. Personal taxation, the resolution said, was unreasonably high in its incidence, constituted a severe disincentive to extra effort, saving and investment and would increasingly hamper the creation and retention of high-calibre administrative and technical staff.

On power, the Chambers stated that the shortage continued to be a major obstacle to industrial production.

Experience in certain areas emphasized the need to supplement the existing hydro-electric sources by thermal generating stations and to speed the development of State and regional grids. The resolution suggested that power development plans should be the subject of centralized and high-level study and agreement.

The Chambers' resolution on prices recognized that the price problem presented peculiar difficulties at the present time because of the need for combating inflationary pressure arising from the strain of a developing economy coupled with the demands of defence, while at the same time providing incentives which would encourage increased production. Stating that the only solution to the problem was increased production, the resolution advocated an adequate return on capital to finance expansion and attract fresh investment. It urged that where the Government did not find it possible to abolish controlled prices for industrial products, those prices should be realistically fixed, taking full account of increased manufacturing costs.

L. Social Security Scheme For Central Government Employees: A new social security scheme for the families of Central Government employees was announced in the Lok Sabha on December 13, 1963 by the Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari. It came into force on January 1, 1964.

It will ensure a life pension of between Rs. 25 and Rs. 150 a month to the widow of an employee who has completed only one year's service. It also provides for payment of allowances to minor children if the widow dies.

The employee will, however, be required to surrender a small portion of the death-cum-retirement gratuity due to him, equal to two months' emoluments as a token contribution.

The scheme will also apply to Railway employees who opt for or are already on a pension scheme. In regard to Defence Services personnel, the scheme will practically be non-contributory, because no gratuity is payable to them in addition to the service pension.

In cases where the minimum pension admissible at present is lower than Rs. 25, it will be brought on a par with the minimum under the new scheme.

Mr. Krishnamachari said that while the Government was examining the broader question of providing social security to the weaker sections of the population, it considered it necessary and desirable to make a beginning with its own employees by revising "very substantially" the existing Family Pension Scheme.

Under this scheme an officer normally has to complete 20 years' service before his widow becomes entitled to a pension, which is for a maximum of 10 years.

Mr. Krishnamachari said that the existing Extraordinary Pension Scheme would be suitably revised to provide for "somewhat higher benefits" to bring it in line with the new scheme.

He explained that the annual funded cost of the new scheme in about 25 years was estimated at Rs. 12.15 crores on the civil side and Rs. 5 crores on the defence side.

M. Scope Of Indigenous Supply Of Equipment For Bokaro Steel Plant: A Technical Committee, which has been considering the scope of indigenous supply of equipment for the first stage of the Bokaro Steel Plant, has expressed the view that in terms of weight, between 50 and 66 per cent of the machinery needed can be built in India.

This was disclosed by the Central Minister of Steel, Mines and Heavy Engineering, Mr. C. Subramaniam at a meeting of the Informal Consultative Committee of Parliament in New Delhi on December 11, 1963.

He said that the technical committee was of the opinion that in raw material stocking and handling systems, about 75 per cent of the equipment required could be made in the country; in coke ovens, about 66 per cent; in by-product plants, 60 per cent; in blast furnaces, 60 per cent; in steel melting shops, 20 per cent; and in mills, 10 to 20 per cent.

Besides, almost all the electrical equipment required could be built indigenously, with an import content of 30 to 35 per cent. All cranes below 100 tonnes could also be made in the country, while in maintenance shops and foundries, about 50 per cent machinery could be locally made. In structurals, about 90,000 tonnes out of 140,000 tonnes required for Bokaro could be fabricated in the country.

He said that the expert team, now examining the Bokaro project report submitted by Dastur and Co., would submit its conclusions before the end of December. Detailed specifications of all plant and equipment might be ready within six months. Global tenders for items required from abroad were likely to be floated by the middle of 1964.

N. Company Law Amendment Bill: According to the Company Law Amendment Bill, which was introduced in the Lok Sabha in December, 1963, a board will be set up for better and convenient administration of companies by the Government.

The board, according to provisions in the amending Bill, will exercise and discharge such powers and functions of the Government conferred on it by the Companies Act.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The board will consist of a maximum of five members, all to be appointed by the Central Government by notification in the Gazette.

The Bill also provides that no act done by the board shall be called in question on the ground only of any defect in the constitution of, or the existence of any vacancy in the company law board.

This step has been taken by the Government in order to facilitate quick action against persons involved in cases of fraud, misfeasance and other such malpractices and irregularities in the management of companies.

Such action will be taken by a tribunal to be appointed by the Central Government.

The tribunal will hear applications under Sections 203, 397 and 398 of the Companies Act and in this respect will be empowered to exercise the powers and functions of the court.

In order to prevent the use of voting rights attached to shares held by trusts for the advancement of personal interests of donors, it is proposed to empower the Central Government to appoint a person to exercise voting rights in respect of trusts with significant shareholding, when necessary, with a view to securing proper management of the company in the interests of shareholders.

The Bill also empowers the Government to direct the conversion of loans advanced by it to a company into shares of that company on fair and equitable terms without going through the procedure prescribed in the Companies Act in regard to such conversion.

Bill Passed:

The Bill was adopted by the Lok Sabha on December 16 with an official amendment reversing the Select Committee's suggestion to limit the scope of converting Government loans to joint stock companies into shares.

The effect of this is that past loans can also be covered, contrary to the Select Committee's majority view. Its further suggestion that conversion need take place only in case of default of repayment of loans or interest on them even after a three-month notice was deleted by the official amendment.

The Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, however, agreed through another amendment to lay a copy of every order proposed to be issued in regard to such conversion before both the Houses of Parliament for a period of 30 days. That should enable Members to scrutinize the orders and make any suggestions to alter or amend them.

Otherwise the Bill as reported by the Select Committee was approved after a division on the official amendment to the loans conversion clause which resulted in 147 voting for and 15 against it.

The Swatantra and Jan Sangh groups opposed tooth and nail the changes made by the Government in the Select Committee report. They were also against the provision which would take away voting rights of trustees.

The Rajya Sabha passed it on December 19.

O. Productivity Waste In Textile Industry: Installed spinning and weaving capacity, costing about Rs. 460 crores, is being wasted in the third shift by the textile industry, according to a recent estimate made by some productivity experts in Bombay on December 11, 1963.

It was stated that no country crying for scarce capital resources can afford the luxury of allowing installed capacity to remain unutilised on such a huge scale. It was considered surprising why no determined efforts are being made even by the Government to maximize the utilization of the existing capacity for increasing production of cloth which is actually falling.

The output of cotton cloth by textile mills in the first 10 months of 1963 has been lower around 3,977 million yards against 4,157 million yards in the corresponding period in 1962.

It was pointed out that out of 14.3 million installed spindles, 12.4 million spindles work in the first shift, 12.4 million in the second shift and 7.9 million in the third shift. This comes to an approximate utilization of 86 per cent of the installed capacity in the first shift, 85 per cent in the second and 55 per cent in the third shift. Similarly, out of about 2,00,000 looms, 1,80,000 (90 per cent) work in the first shift, 1,74,000 (87 per cent) in the second and only about 50,000 (25 per cent) in the third shift.

It was argued that it would require about Rs. 190 crores to instal 4.5 million spindles and Rs. 270 crores to instal 1,50,000 looms which at present remain unutilized in the third shift alone. In other words, machinery costing over Rs. 460 crores (at the present prices) is allowed to remain idle in the industry.

The present position in regard to under-utilization of capacity should induce the Government to impress upon the industry the necessity of operating at least 90 per cent of the spindle capacity in all the three shifts.

It may be that in the third shift, the utilization of spindles can be up to 80 per cent instead of 90 per cent, but there is considerable scope of increasing the use of the loomage capacity in the third shift.

P. Increase In Dearness Allowance And Bonus—National Campaign Launched: The All-India Dearness Allowance and Bonus Conference launched on January 1, 1964 a country-wide campaign in support of demands set out in an 11-point charter.

The AITUC-sponsored Conference in Bombay on December 13, 1963 appointed a national campaign committee, including Mr. S. A. Dange, Mr. S. S. Mirajkar and Mr. Datta Deshmukh.

It expressed the view that the rising prices of food and essential commodities was basically "man-made" and that the Government had contributed "massively" to this by its inflationary budgets and "its deliberate policies of adding to the crushing burden of indirect taxes which directly affect the common man's pocket."

The Conference adopted several resolutions on a national campaign for reduction in prices, increase in wages, dearness allowance and bonus.

The charter of demands consisted of the following points: (1) A 25 per cent reduction in prices, especially in foodgrains and essential commodities; (2) An all-round 25 per cent increase in wages; (3) Linking of dearness allowance with the consumer price indices on a sliding scale; (4) A cent per cent neutralization for every rise in the cost of living through a sliding-scale dearness allowance; (5) Correction of the fraudulent index numbers; (6) Immediate fixation and wherever necessary, revision of minimum wages for industries and trade covered by the Minimum Wages Act, and immediate implementation of wages already fixed thereunder; (7) Publication of the Bonus Commission's report by the end of 1963 and announcement of the Government's decision on the same within a month; (8) Acceptance and implementation of the minimum guaranteed bonus in both private and public sectors; (9) Introduction of State trading in foodgrains and wholesale business; (10) Fixation of minimum prices for agricultural produce and supply; and (11) Nationalization of banks, export-import trade and the oil and sugar industries.

R. Kerala Land Reforms Bill Passed: The Kerala Land Reforms Bill was passed by 58 votes to 27 in the State Assembly in Trivandrum on December 4, 1963 amid cheers from Congress members and cries of "shame" from Communists.

Three Praja-Socialists voted with the Communists. No Muslim League member was present.

The Bill will replace the Agrarian Relations Act which was put on the statute book by a former Communist Ministry.

The leader of the Communist group, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, described the Bill as "a big leap forward for landlords." It was a "big leap backward" for the tenants and the landless.

He said his party would use the earliest opportunity to amend the Bill and make it "peasant-oriented." He warned the Government that there would be agrarian unrest if the Bill was enacted. The Communist Party would be wholeheartedly with the peasants in their struggle for a better deal.

Mr. P. T. Chacko, the State Home Minister, said that speedy action would be taken to prepare a record of rights of undocumented tenants and to keep a register of kudikidappukars.

He added that the State Government was consulting the Kerala High Court about the feasibility of appointing land tribunals to re-adjust landlord-tenant relations in the State quickly.

He said the Government would have to adopt more legislative measures to "implement fully our aspirations to make the tiller a peasant-proprietor and to prevent the concentration of land in the hands of a few."

The Kerala Land Reform Act prohibits the eviction of tenants and limits the size of the family holding to 12 standard acres.

The Act also provides for resumption of land by the landlord, prescribes a uniform fair rent and enables the cultivator to purchase the land.

In drafting the Bill the Government accepted the "broad objectives of land reform as laid down by the Planning Commission." The basic aims of the Agrarian Relations Act have also been incorporated.

The Act, it was stated, "is fair and equitable to the various interests on land." It is capable of smooth implementation without any undue financial burden on the State. The Government may have to spend about Rs. 5,00,000 annually for the first five years to implement the legislation. It justifies the new measure on the ground that a mere amending legislation to the Agrarian Relations Act would not have been sufficient.

The Land Reform Act provides for the constitution of land tribunals and courts. These tribunals and courts will help the tenants purchase the land they cultivate and also assign the excess land surrendered to the Government to landless peasants.

Compensation for the excess land will be paid at the rate of 8-1/3 times the net annual income from the land. The right of resumption of land by a landlord is limited to cases where the tenants enjoyed the fixity of tenure before January 21, 1961. He has also the right to sue for eviction in default of payment of the rent for two consecutive years. The Kudikidappukaran (hut-dweller) can be made to vacate only after providing an alternative site to build a hut.

The purchase price of land by the tenant is fixed at 16 times the fair rent. The fair rent will be roughly 17½ per cent of the value of the gross produce.

Religious, charitable and educational institutions need not give the ownership right of their land to tenants. In such cases, the right of land will vest in the Government which will pay them a perpetual annuity, totalling about Rs. 50,00,000, from the rent payable by tenants.

The tenant of an individual landlord can purchase the land direct from the landlord by applying to a land tribunal.

A. Formation Of Arab Common Market—Proposal Referred To States' Chambers: The 21st session of the Council of the Arab Federation of Chambers of Commerce, Industry and Agriculture has decided to refer the draft proposal on the Arab Common Market to the Arab Chambers for their comments.

The conference, which began on November 8, ended on November 11, 1963 after taking a number of unimportant administrative and economic decisions. It was attended by Syria, Jordan, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, Kuwait, UAR, Qatar and Lebanon.

The creation of the Arab Common Market was the most important issue before the meeting. The permanent office of the Council, in compliance with instructions given at the last meeting of the Council, had prepared a draft proposal for the Common Market.

The Council decided that various Arab Chambers be given three months time of study and comment on the draft. It also appointed a Technical Committee to study both the original draft and comments of the Arab Chambers and to compile them into one report to be placed before the Council for consideration.

The decision to study the feasibility of a Common Market, on the pattern of the European Common Market had been taken by the general body meeting of the Federation held in Tunis in 1962. The Council was directed to submit concrete recommendations on the subject to the next general body meeting of the Federation.

Many Arab countries have put forward plans and all of them call for an initial trial period during which tariff barriers will be gradually lowered, allowing ultimately a greater freedom in exchange of goods between the Arab countries. This would create a vast economic unit stretching from North Africa to the Southern Arabian Sheikhdoms.

The Federation will also submit a detailed report to the Arab League which is also discussing the question during the meetings of its Economic Council.

The Council also studied a plan for economic co-operation between Arab States as agreed upon by the last meeting and industrial co-ordination among Arab countries with a view to avoid unhealthy competition.

The Council approved the 1964 budget of the permanent office authorising it to receive revenue and incur expenses. The permanent office was instructed to publish in 1964 three issues of the Arab economic report and from the beginning of 1965 four issues every year. The permanent office was also entrusted with the task of fixing the time and place of the next meeting.

Among other things, the Council also discussed the construction of an inland route between the Arab Gulf (Persian Gulf) and the rest of the Arab countries. It further reviewed the development of Arab economies during 1962.

PAKISTAN

A. CENTO Exercises Off Karachi: Two American servicemen were killed on November 15, 1963 during "Midlink Six"—the biggest CENTO air-sea exercises undertaken so far in Pakistan. But news of the exercises was blacked out in Pakistan.

Power failure struck a helicopter from the aircraft-carrier USS Essex and it plummeted into the north Arabian Sea. Two of the five aboard were killed and one critically injured. Identification of the dead and injured was to be disclosed by the Defence Department in Washington.

The accident was not reported in Pakistan, nor the massing of aircraft carriers, jet fighters, submarines and destroyers—125 aircraft, 43 ships and 19,000 men from the United States, Britain, Pakistan, Iran and Turkey. It was the biggest exercise in CENTO's history.

Pakistani authorities, who had taken full control over all information to be released in Karachi about "Midlink Six" only released one brief official statement, when the exercises began on November 11.

British and American officials said that no reason was given for the publicity clampdown. A Pakistani publicity official said it did not matter if the news was sent abroad, but there was a need locally for "security."

Observers in Karachi said that since the West began military aid to India last Autumn, there had been much nationwide questioning whether Pakistan should remain allied with the West in the CENTO and S-EATO pacts.

Relations with America have soured somewhat and those with China sweetened.

The first phase of the current sea exercises—submarine fighting plus fighter planes and anti-aircraft crew of the two big carriers fighting off simulated attacks from F-86 fighters—ended in a 2,000 square-mile-area off Karachi on the night of November 15.

Warships of the five CENTO nations steamed back to Karachi on November 22 as the exercises ended.

Rear-Admiral J. F. Scotland, commander of the Blue Force in the exercises said the 1,600-mile four-day final manoeuvres were successful. He said the 43 ships, 125 aircraft and 9,000 men provided "striking evidence" of how Pakistani, American and British navies could defend a ship convoy against submarine and air attack.

B. World Bank Mission: Eight representatives of the World Bank, led by Mr. Stewart Mason, arrived in Pakistan on November 4, 1963 on a six-week visit to discuss current and future development projects as well as the foreign exchange requirements for the remaining part of the Five-Year Plan and for the Third Plan of 1965-70.

The first two weeks of the talks were devoted to the study of communications projects. The Bank's representatives were given a progress report on the western railway for which the Bank gave a loan of $18.25 million in September, 1962. Of this loan, the sum of $16.2 million has already been utilized and the Pakistan authorities are applying for a further loan of $22.8 million to cover further purchases of equipment and rolling stock. The Minister of Communications has applied for another loan to finance the construction of three bridges on the Karachi-Lahore highway.

The President of the World Bank, Mr. George D. Woods, accompanied by the Vice-President, Sir William Iliff, and two other officials of the Bank, arrived in Karachi a week later to conduct separate talks with the Central Government on the subject of the Tarbela Dam project, which the Pakistanis still consider an essential part of the Indus Basin scheme in spite of adverse opinion by technical advisers. The top-level mission from the Bank has, therefore, been invited to hear the views of the Central Government in the hope that an acceptable formula can be worked out.

Talking to newsmen, Mr. Woods said "the important question is to determine the most intelligent and efficient plan for using the waters of the three rivers—Indus, Jhelum and Chenab—for irrigation and power."

He said he would not put special emphasis on Tarbela Dam and instead he underlined the importance of "sound planning spread over 10 to 15 years for storage and full use of the waters."

He said the World Bank had "quite an investment" in Pakistan and the object of his visit was "to tie up various loose ends between the Bank and Pakistan."

On November 12, the World Bank team began its first round of talks in Rawalpindi on Indus Basin development.

Those participating in the discussions included Sir William Iliff, special consultant to the World Bank of the Indus Basin projects, and Mr. Ghulam Ishaque, Chairman of East Pakistan Water and Power Development Board.

Communique:

A communique issued in Karachi on November 14 said that the President of the World Bank, Mr. George Woods, and President Ayub Khan had agreed on arrangements for financing the giant Mangla Dam now being built by American contractors.

This will include the vast system of subsidiary dams and canals being built to irrigate immense areas of arid West Pakistan and produce more electricity than the whole country now uses.

The communique also said that Pakistan and the World Bank had agreed upon "arrangements for a comprehensive survey to determine the soundness of the Tarbela Dam".

An American AID official said recently that American and the other donating countries did not intend financing the Tarbela Dam, expected to cost $760 million from out of the Indus Basin Development Fund.

The following is the text of the communique:

"During the past several days conversations have taken place between the President of Pakistan, and Mr. George Woods, the President of the World Bank, with regard to the most effective utilization of the water resources of West Pakistan for irrigation and power purposes. Arrangements were agreed upon for financing the completion of the Mangla Dam, the barrages and link canals and the agreed remodelling programme.

"In addition, arrangements were made for a comprehensive survey by qualified independent consultants to be organized by the World Bank, to determine and recommend a programme for the long-term future. The determination of the soundness of Tarbela will be given first priority in this survey.

"The conversations were held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere. Mr. Woods, on his return to Washington, will recommend to the Governments who are the contributors to the Indus Basin Development Fund and to the Executive Directors of the World Bank, the necessary financial arrangements to facilitate the implementation of this programme."

It is the largest Budget to date, the figure for the previous Budget being 2,450,000,000 riyals. (Riyals 12.6=£).

The Budget specifically lays down that no new posts, with the exception of the appointment of Ministers and Cabinet Ministers and temporary posts in relation to planning, may be created in the coming year.

The only other really large slice of revenue comes from customs duties which are estimated at 136,000,000 riyals, a reduction of 89,000 riyals on the previous year's figure of 136,089,000 riyals.

On the expenditure side, 243,771,000 riyals (approx. $53 million) will be spent on education, which is to be free to everyone; an increase of 34,383,740 riyals (approx. $7.5 million) over the previous year. The budget for health services has increased from 87,447,000 riyals (approx. $19 million) the previous year to 103,445,000 riyals ($22.7 million) in the coming year. Another important item of expenditure is communications, of which railways are allocated 31,910,000 riyals, roads 13,650,000 riyals, ports 1,237,000 riyals and Jeddah port an additional 7,413,000 riyals; 47,687,000 riyals is to be spent on agriculture and irrigation.

Development projects receive the same allocation as the previous year—550,000,000 riyals—compared with 400,000,000 riyals two years ago.

SYRIA

A. Baath Party Congress—Decision On Merger Of Syria And Iraq In Stages: The sixth international Congress of the Baath Party, meeting in Damascus, has unanimously approved Iraq joining Syria in a federal, democratic, socialist State.

The Congress, which began on October 5, ended on October 28, 1963.

A statement summing up the Congress said that after the failure of the projected tripartite federation with UAR the Baath Party found itself bound to set up a bilateral union between Baath-governed Iraq and Syria as "a step towards creating new conditions for further unionist stages".

The major decision was that the "Baathist State" of which a union between Syria and Iraq will be the nucleus, is to be called the "Arab Democratic Peoples' Republic".

It was further decided, according to reports, that Major-General Amin Al-Hafez, President of the Syrian Revolutionary Council, would be the first President of the Baathist State. Baghdad would be the State Capital.

Unity Talks Successful:

The Planning Minister, Brigadier Hassan Haddad, announced in Damascus on November 7 that Syria and Iraq had agreed on the broad lines of their forthcoming economic union in a major step towards welding the two Arab countries into a federal State.

Brigadier Haddad headed a 28-man delegation to Iraq where he held talks for five days over the question of economic unity. He said that the talks were a total success. "We faced no difficulties and full agreement was reached over all matters discussed."

He said an Iraqi official delegation would visit Damascus soon to put the final touches on the economic union proclamation expected some time in November.

He added that a cultural union would be proclaimed after the economic union and soon after that the constitutional federation of the two countries would be proclaimed.

THAILAND

A. British Assistance: A Thai Government spokesman said in Bangkok on November 10, 1963 that his country had accepted an offer by British organizations to send volunteers to help the country's economic and industrial development.

The offer, made through the British Embassy, came from various organizations in Britain, including the "Freedom-from-Hunger" campaign and the Oxford Committee for Famine Relief.

The British volunteers would help in the fields of education, engineering and construction, medicine, agriculture and forestry, and social and economic welfare.

YEMEN

A. U Thant's Report On UNYOM: The UN Secretary-General, U Thant issued a report to the Security Council on the work of the UN Yemen Observation Mission (UNYOM) on October 30, and a supplement to that report on October 31, 1963.

In the supplementary report, he said that after issuing the main report he had received a new and urgent message from the Government of Saudi Arabia, saying that it had decided to participate in the financing of UNYOM for a further period of two months from November 5, 1963.

He said that, since the United Arab Republic had previously said that the Mission should be extended, and in view of the fact that the Government of Yemen had indicated that such an extension would be desirable and helpful, it would be continued.

"In the light of these circumstances", stated the supplementary report, "and particularly of the new development incident to the latest message from the Government of Saudi Arabia, I have ordered the cancellation of the preparations that were under way for the withdrawal of the United Nations Mission by November 4. That Mission, therefore, in approximately its present form and size, will continue from that date for a further period of two months, and its expenses will be borne in equal shares by the Governments of Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Republic."

In his earlier report, he had said that after reviewing the present situation in Yemen and the positions of the other two Governments involved, it was necessary for him to take preparatory steps towards the complete withdrawal of UNYOM by November 4 beyond which date there would be no financial support for it.

However, he said that it was his intention to maintain a civilian United Nations presence in the area, given the necessary agreement of the parties directly concerned.

In this report, he recalled that in his first Yemen report of September 4 he had been unable to say that "encouraging progress had been registered towards effective implementation of the disengagement agreement", despite the co-operation of both Governments with the Mission, and added that "there has been no decisive change in that situation in the subsequent two months".

The report stated that by the provisions of the disengagement agreement, the functions of UNYOM were limited to "observing, certifying and reporting". It noted that in the period reviewed "no military assistance of significance had been provided to the royalists from Saudi Arabia", while the United Arab Republic activity "has considerably decreased" and air attacks over Saudi Arabian territory and the demilitarized zone had ceased. It added that, in general, it could be reported that in many areas where there was active fighting in early July, "the fighting has since then almost entirely ceased", and military operations were at present confined to the Sada area and were of a sporadic nature.

B. Health Drive: The Minister of Health, Mr. Hussein el Mokaddemy, said in Sanaa on October 30, 1963 that an allocation of about 4,000,000 rials had been made for the medical services in the second year of the Revolution.

Several hospitals and 20 medical units would be established in different parts of the country at an estimated cost of 100,000 rials. The cost of nine of these medical units would be met from the financial assistance given by Kuwait.

He said that a plan for fighting smallpox and ophthalmia would shortly be carried out by the Ministry of Health in co-operation with the World Health Organization.

He disclosed that the World Health Organization had offered to the Yemeni Government 10 medical scholarships and UNICEF 18 nursing scholarships.

He said that the total number of physicians now engaged in hospitals in Yemen had reached 37 and that a Yemeni medical mission was visiting Cairo to buy medical equipment within the limit of £E30,000.

A Cairo report on October 31 said that the UAR Ministry of Health had decided to send 13 doctors, specialists in various branches of medicine, to Yemen for service in accordance with the Technical and Cultural Agreement concluded between the two countries.

There were on October 31 40 UAR specialists working in Yemen. This was in addition to many Yemeni patients who were under medical treatment in Cairo and Alexandria hospitals free of charge.

C. British Offer Of Demilitarized Zone Rejected: A Cairo message on November 30, 1963 said that Yemen had turned down a British proposal to form a 10-square-mile demilitarized zone between the territory of the Yemen Republic and the British-protected Sultanate of Beihan in the Federation of South Arabia.

The British suggestion was conveyed to Yemen two weeks earlier through the American Embassy, which looks after British interests in Yemen.

In rejecting the proposal, Yemen appears to have taken the stand that it could not discuss the subject until Britain accorded diplomatic recognition to the Republican regime.

Yemen is also reluctant to grant tacit approval to what it calls British occupation of South Arabia, which it has traditionally claimed as part of the Yemeni territory.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. President John F. Kennedy Assassinated—Mr. L. B. Johnson Sworn-in: On November 22, 1963, President John Fitzgerald Kennedy of the United States was shot dead by an assassin while driving in an open car in Dallas, Texas.

Mr. John Connally, the Governor of Texas, was also hit, but Mrs. Kennedy and Mrs. Connally, who were in the car, were unhurt. Witnesses said that three shots were fired.

The Vice-President, Mr. Lyndon Baines Johnson, was sworn-in as the new President the same day. He took the oath on board the presidential aircraft while it stood on Love Field, Dallas, preparing to fly to Washington.

Mr. Kennedy was still alive when he reached the hospital. He was taken into an emergency room where facilities were said to be adequate. Two Roman Catholic priests were called and the last rites were administered. Mr. Kennedy died about 35 minutes after the shots were fired.

A young man was immediately taken into custody and the search led to a second arrest, of a 30-year-old white man. A rifle with telescopic sights was recovered.

Mr. Lyndon Johnson escaped because his car, following the presidential vehicle, was delayed by the large crowds.

President Kennedy was shot through the throat and head, possibly by the same bullet, according to Dr. Malcolm Perry, the surgeon who attended him. Dr. Perry said that a tracheotomy was performed to relieve Mr. Kennedy's breathing and blood and fluid were administered intravenously. Chest tubes were inserted, and Dr. Perry tried chest cardiac massage, but to no avail.

President Kennedy's journey to Texas, described as non-political, had been undertaken to bring some order to the state's faction-ridden Democratic Party. The electoral votes of the state were considered vital for his re-election in 1964. The state party was not only divided between liberals and conservatives, but also by the extreme Right-wing.

At the time of the assassination many cars in the city were decorated with placards bearing legends such as "US, not UN." In November, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, the United States Permanent delegate to United Nations, was struck and spat upon in Dallas. Presumably because of this incident all leave had been cancelled for the local police and extraordinary precautions were taken.

Washington was stunned by the news and an emergency forum was called in the Senate. Senator Mike Mansfield, the Senate majority leader, said: "This is terrible. I cannot find words."

Senator Everett Dirksen, the minority leader, said: "Oh God! This is the most distressing thing that could ever happen. I am shocked."

Mr. Dean Rusk, the Secretary of State, and other Cabinet officers were on their way to Japan, and the aircraft immediately turned round. The New York Stock Exchange closed.

Within an hour of his death Mr. Kennedy's body was removed from the hospital in a plain wooden coffin and placed upon an aircraft for Washington. It was accompanied by Mrs. Kennedy.

Three US Presidents have been shot and fatally wounded by assassins in the past 100 years. Attempts were made on the lives of others.

(1) President Abraham Lincoln was shot in a Washington theatre on April 14, 1865, and died the following day.

(2) President James A. Garfield was shot on July 2, 1881 in Washington, and died on September 19 that year.

(3) President William McKinley was shot in Buffalo, New York, on September 6, 1901, and died on September 14.

An attempt was made to assassinate Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, then President-elect, in Miami, Florida, on February 15, 1933, but the bullet killed the Mayor of Chicago, who was also on the platform.

Puerto Rican nationalists attempted to assassinate President Harry S. Truman on November 1, 1950; they failed to shoot their way into Blair House in Washington. A White House guard was killed.

Lee Harvey Oswald Arrested:

On November 22, Lee Harvey Oswald was arrested and charged with the murders of Mr. Kennedy and a policeman. Oswald denied he had fired the shot.

Police had "obtained very good results" from a paraffin test performed on Oswald's hands on November 22, a police official said. Results of another paraffin test made on Oswald's face were less positive.

Oswald, who went to live in the Soviet Union in 1959 and returned in 1962 with a Russian wife and a baby daughter, had identified himself with the pro-Castro "Fairplay for Cuba" committee, but committee spokesmen disclaimed knowledge of him.

Oswald Shot Down By Jack Ruby:

Lee Harvey Oswald, accused of killing President Kennedy, was himself shot down on November 24 as he was being transferred from one jail to another. He died in the same hospital where President Kennedy had died on November 22.

The gunman was Jack Ruby (50), owner of a night club. He fired only one shot, hitting Oswald in the stomach from point-blank range.

The police said that Ruby jumped on the prostrate Oswald who was moaning and grabbing his stomach. The police disarmed the fiercely struggling assailant. He was taken upstairs for questioning while an ambulance rushed Oswald to an emergency room in the Parklands Hospital, only 10 feet from the emergency room where President Kennedy died.

Doctors tried to save Oswald's life with an emergency operation that was expected to last several hours. But he died about an hour after the shooting.

The police said that Ruby told them he shot Oswald because of a deep sense of feeling for Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy. He added that he wanted to spare her the ordeal of the trial of the accused killer. Ruby was later charged with murder.

From the start of the Oswald investigation, Ruby had been mingling freely with the police and newsmen covering the case. This was how he managed to gain admission to the building despite the strict security precautions.

Mr. J. F. Kennedy's Funeral:

President Kennedy was laid to rest at Arlington National Cemetery in Washington on November 25.

Earlier, his body was carried in a horse-drawn gun-carriage from the Capitol rotunda, where it had lain in State for almost 24 hours, to Arlington Cemetery, the final resting place.

The cortege halted briefly at the White House as kings, princes, Presidents and Prime Ministers took their places in the procession for the last half-mile of the way.

They comprised the greatest assemblage of world figures ever to do homage to a nation's leader and included an emperor, a king, a queen, six Presidents, eight princes and 12 Prime Ministers.

Their presence was a demonstration of respect and admiration transcending all national, religious and ideological differences.

They included Prince Philip, representing Queen Elizabeth; the British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home; the Labour Opposition leader, Mr. Harold Wilson; President de Gaulle of France; the Soviet Deputy Premier, Mr. Anastas Mikoyan: Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia; King Baudouin of the Belgians; President Heinrich Luebke and Chancellor Ludwig Erhard of West Germany.

Following an hour-long Requiem Mass, celebrated by Richard Cardinal Cushing of Boston, the procession moved in a fleet of cars to Arlington National Cemetery.

There, amid the nation's fallen heroes, Mr. Kennedy's remains were committed to the earth.

President L. B. Johnson's Address To Congress:

In an address to a joint session of Congress on November 27, President L. B. Johnson told the nation and the world that the ideas and ideals of the late President Kennedy

"must and will be translated into effective action".

He specifically called for early enactment of the civil rights legislation and the $1,000,000,000 tax cut proposed by Mr. Kennedy.

He said: "No memorial, oration or eulogy could more eloquently honour President Kennedy's memory than the earliest possible passage of the Civil Rights Bill for which he fought. No act of ours could more fittingly continue the work of President Kennedy than the earliest passage of the Tax Bill for which he fought.

"This is no time for delay—it is a time for action," he said, appealing at the same time for an "end to the teaching and preaching of hate and evil and violence".

"The time has come for Americans of all races and creeds and political beliefs to understand and respect one another. Let us put an end to the teaching and preaching of hate and evil and violence. Let us turn away from the fanatics of the far Left and the far Right, from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law, and from those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream."

He expressed the hope that "the tragedy and torment of these terrible days will bind us together in a new fellowship". "Let us here highly resolve that John Fitzgerald Kennedy did not live—or die—in vain. And on this Thanksgiving-eve, as we gather together to ask the Lord's blessing, let us unite in those familiar and cherished words: America, America, God shed His grace on thee and crown thy good with brotherhood from sea to shining sea."

"We have talked long enough in this country about equal rights. We have talked for 100 years or more. Yes, it is time now to write the next chapter—and to write it in books of law."

He called upon Congress to enact a Civil Rights Bill that will help "eliminate from this nation every trace of discrimination and oppression based upon race or colour".

Touching upon foreign affairs, he promised that USA "will keep its commitments from South Viet-Nam to West Berlin". "We will be unceasing in the search for peace; resourceful in our pursuit of areas of agreement even with those with whom we differ; and generous and loyal to those who join with us in common cause."

"Those who test our courage will find it strong and those who seek our friendship will find it honourable."

In a general assertion of foreign policy, he said: "Let all the world know, and none misunderstand, that I rededicate this Government to the unswerving support of United Nations—to the honourable and determined execution of our commitments to our allies—to the maintenance of military strength second to none—to the defence of the strength and stability of the dollar—to the expansion of our foreign trade—to the re-inforcement of our programmes of mutual assistance and co-operation in Asia and Africa—and to our alliance for progress in this hemisphere."

President Johnson Appoints Probe Board For Kennedy Murder:

President Johnson appointed on November 30 a seven-man commission headed by the Chief Justice, Mr. Earl Warren, to investigate the assassination of President Kennedy and the murder of the alleged assassin, Lee Oswald.

The commission was instructed to "do everything possible to satisfy itself that the truth is known as far as it can be discovered and report its findings and conclusions to him, to the American people and to the world."

The bipartisan commission includes Mr. John Sherman Cooper, former Ambassador to India; Mr. Richard Russel, Chairman of the Armed Services Committee and leader of the southern bloc in the Senate; Mr. Hale Boggs, Democratic Whip in the House of Representatives; Mr. Gerald Ford, Junior Chairman of the House Republican Conference; Mr. Allen Dulles, former Intelligence chief and Mr. John McCloy, former President of the World Bank.

UN Memorial Meeting:

In a special memorial meeting of the UN General Assembly held on November 26, representatives of the member-States of UN paid their tributes to the memory of Mr. Kennedy.

The ceremony was opened with remarks by the President of the General Assembly, Dr. Carlos Sosa-Rodriguez, who asked the Assembly to stand in a minute of silent prayer in honour of Mr. Kennedy.

Chinese newspapers on November 24 carried inside-page reports of the assassination of President Kennedy and portrayed President Johnson as "a firm supporter of all Kennedy's reactionary policies".

All newspapers printed identical 300-word factual reports summarizing the dramatic events in the United States without comment, omitting only the capture of a suspected assassin. They also carried 600-word biographical sketches of the President with caricatures and photographs showing him grim and unsmiling.

There were no messages of sympathy from Chinese leaders and no reports of reaction to Mr. Kennedy's death in other parts of the world.

The trade union newspaper, Workers' Daily, printed a cartoon entitled: "Kennedy biting the dust." It depicted the late President lying face downwards with a gaping mouth biting the ground, blood dripping into a pool in the ground from a large bullet hole high in the cheek. His face was puffed and grossly distorted. His tie, lying near the pool of blood, was marked with dollar signs.

B. Second Soviet Inter-continental Flight To Antarctica: A hop across four continents and two oceans was made by two Soviet IL-18 planes which took off on November 20, 1963 from Moscow for Antarctica.

The 29,000-km route of the flight lay across Afghanistan, India, Burma, Indonesia, Australia and New Zealand.

The expedition was led by the Director of the Arctic and Antarctic Institute, Dr. Alexei Treshnikov, the well-known explorer of the Polar regions of both hemispheres.

He said: "We are going to explore from the air a vast blank spot in the snow-covered continent south of Queen Maud Land, where man never set foot before."

The first flight from Moscow to the South Polar Observatory at Mirny was made two years ago.

Dr. Treshnikov said that the second inter-continental flight would enable them to use to better advantage the brief Antarctic Summer for carrying out studies.

The majority of the expedition staff sailed for the shores of the south Antarctic continent early in December, 1963 on the Ob diesel electric ship and the passenger motorship Estonia.

Details of the expedition, whose members were described as "Polar Cosmonauts" were given to newsmen in New Delhi on November 22. Sixty-seven members of the expedition arrived in the Indian capital on November 21 on their way to Mirny Polar base.

Dr. Treshnikov said that two more groups would shortly be leaving Russia by ship to join the expedition. Some members of the expedition would return after about eight months, but the rest would stay on for 14 months at the Pole.

This was the ninth Soviet expedition to the Antarctic, where four research stations have been established. Another station is to be set up soon.

Mr. Treshnikov said that in the forthcoming International Year of the Quiet Sun research programmes in the Antarctic would be expanded. There were expeditions from 12 countries besides Russia in the region.

Dr. Kapitsa, leader of the traverse party, said that this was the ideal time for the expedition, "when the highest temperature is only 40°C below zero". The party would cover about 3,000 km under difficult conditions with the help of special aircraft. They would go beyond the "Pole of Inaccessibility", in areas where the world's lowest temperature (88°C below zero) had been recorded.

The scientists all work together on special projects as the Antarctica is the only continent in the world where agreements between nations provide for the pooling of scientific knowledge.

C. France Becomes Independent Nuclear Power: President Charles de Gaulle unofficially inaugurated on October 11, 1963 France's independent nuclear strike force by attending the French Army's first "atomic" manoeuvres.

Defence Ministry sources said delivery of Mirage IV atom bombers to the Air Force began a month earlier, and mass production of atomic bombs had started several months ago.

Government officials stressed the diplomatic significance of President de Gaulle's presence at the manoeuvres, saying it underlined the French view-point put to the late President Kennedy and Mr. Dean Rusk in Washington during the week. The only real difference between the Washington and Paris Governments was about the definition of the role which America and Europe, respectively, should play inside the alliance.

France, they emphasized, had definitely chosen the path of assuming the greatest possible amount of responsibility for its own defence.

Nuclear Force Budget For France:

The French National Assembly overrode criticism from the Socialist Opposition on November 8 and passed a 369 billion franc ($737,200,000) nuclear force budget for 1964.

The vote on the "force of dissuasion" was 297 to 160 with 20 abstentions.

Mr. Jules Moch (Socialist), a former Minister, led the opposition.

Polynesian deputy John Teariki asked for a referendum in Polynesia on the installation of the thermo-nuclear test centre on the island of Murruroa.

The Defence Minister, Mr. Pierre Messmer told the Assembly that France had given priority to its strategic nuclear armament and its principal objective was to provide its forces with H-bombs. "Discussions on the suitability of providing France with an atomic armament can be filed in the archives."

Earlier, Gen. Pierre Billote, chief of the French delegation to the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference said that as soon as France's nuclear strike force became reasonably operational, it could be co-ordinated with the US and British nuclear deterrents.

E. World Population In Mid-1961: The world's population was approximately 3,069 million in mid-1961. This was an increase of 61 million since 1960, or an annual increase equivalent to three times the population of Argentina or one-third the population of USA.

In the 11-year period 1950-61, the population of the world increased by some 560 million, which is greater than the total population of India. Asia contributed about 60 per cent of this increase—a net addition of 337 million people.

These figures appeared in the 1962 Demographic Year Book, issued on September 30, 1963. The Demographic Year Book is a compilation of international statistics on area, population, birth, death, marriage, divorce and migration which this year features population census statistics. Data presented on selected characteristics of the population, from censuses taken between 1955 and 1962, include age, sex, marital status, geographic distribution and distribution by type and size of household.

There are now 23 persons for each square kilometre of land in the world, compared with 18 per square kilometre ten years ago. The most densely populated country of the world is the Netherlands, with 346 persons per square kilometre. Monaco has 14,657 persons for each square kilometre of its area, while Australia has less than 1.

Tokyo is the largest city in the world and New York is the second largest. Next in order come Shanghai, Bombay, Peking, Chicago, Cairo, Rio de Janeiro and Tientsin.

F. ECM Reduce Internal Tariffs Further: The six member-nations of the European Common Market decided in Paris on June 30, 1963 to reduce their internal tariffs by a further 10 per cent, starting on July 1 and will also lower their external tariffs.

The new internal tariff reductions, the sixth to be made by the European Economic Community, bring taxes on industrial goods to only 40 per cent of the 1957 levels.

They show that the "Six" are two years ahead of the tariff programme envisaged in the Rome Treaty, which set January 1, 1965 as the target date for a 50 per cent reduction. Now, the Common Market Commission has proposed that tariffs should be completely abolished by January 1, 1967, instead of by 1970 as originally foreseen in the Rome Treaty.

Common Market experts believe that tariffs among the "Six" have now been reduced to the stage where they no longer constitute an obstacle to trade but are merely an additional form of income for the national treasuries of the member-States.

The "Six" have also agreed on a new move towards a common customs tariff in dealings with the rest of the world. They are to reduce by 30 per cent (the second such reduction since 1957) the difference between the national tariff of each member-country and the Market's joint external customs tariff, which is based on an average of the national tariffs.

In addition, this new 30 per cent reduction is to be based on a joint customs tariff reduced by 20 per cent in anticipation of a reduction of world customs duties following negotiations, in particular the "Kennedy round" of talks due to start in May, 1964.

ADEN

A. Grenade Attack At Airport: A powerful hand-grenade was flung into a group of Aden Ministers and top British officials on December 10, 1963 as they prepared to board a plane for key talks in London.

Thirty-five persons were injured, including Sir Kennedy Trevaskis, British High Commissioner for Aden and the South Arabian Federation, according to a correspondent, who was also injured. (In London, the Colonial Office said one person was killed and 39 were injured).

The correspondent said an Indian woman was killed in the blast. She was travelling to London with her husband and a child. A 12-year-old Indian boy was seriously injured in the leg.

Sir Kennedy sustained a hand injury. He was rushed to Government House.

Sultan Ahmed Bin Abdullah al Fadhli, Aden Minister of National Guidance and Information, was wounded in the stomach and feet and was given blood transfusions.

Mr. Kenneth Wrazier, a BBC correspondent was injured in the thigh, but left hospital after first-aid.

The grenade, said an agency report, was apparently thrown from the visitors' balcony as Sir Kennedy and Aden Ministers were waiting to board a BOAC airliner for London. They were to have crucial talks on self-rule for the Colony, the future of the British base in Aden and financial aid.

Emergency Declared:

A State of Emergency was declared throughout the South Arabian Federation following the grenade attack.

The Federal Government said that it was determined to put a stop to such uncivilized acts. The border between the Federation and Yemen was closed until further notice.

Aden police on December 11, 1963 rounded up some political and labour leaders following the grenade explosion at the airport.

According to the figures known on December 11, 1963, 29 arrests were made and 142 Yemenis deported to Yemen. The arrests and deportations followed declaration of a State of Emergency by the Supreme Council of the Federation.

British Reaction:

A despatch to The Hindu, Madras on December 12, 1963 said that fears were being expressed in London that the bomb attack at Aden airport may be the prelude to a phase of overt violence in an area of great strategic importance to Britain.

The despatch said:

"While the growing political unrest in the Colony and protectorate has so far shown itself mainly in the form of strikes and demonstrations and appeals to UN, the incident is taken to mean that the dissident nationalists are ready to go over to other methods if necessary.

"One of the first consequences of the attempted assassination is expected to be the indefinite postponement of the constitutional changes that were to be introduced next January, followed by elections soon afterwards.

"Details of these changes have not yet been disclosed, but it is known that the aim is to consolidate the Federation of the South Arabian Sheikhdoms, including Aden Colony, and invest the Federation with a measure of independence.

"There have been no consultations on this with the representatives of the bulk of the Aden population, and in any case they are hostile to the proposed Federation, preferring instead that Aden should break its links with Britain and join up with neighbouring Yemen.

"The blame for the situation is laid here largely at the door of the Yemenis, who provide most of the labour force in the Colony, and to a lesser extent the domiciled Indians. The workers are organized in a strong trade union movement, of which the political wing is the Peoples Socialist Party. The pressure for unification with Yemen is said to have increased since Yemen itself cast off its feudal regime and adopted a modern type of Arab government.

"The present crisis has been precipitated by reports that the forthcoming elections would be held on a franchise excluding the majority of the Yemenis and the Indians, and thus confirming the hold of the Sheikhs over a federation designed as the political prop for the Aden base.

"The future of Aden as Britain's last remaining base in the Middle East is therefore the real issue at stake, and it is an issue which brings Britain into conflict not merely with the local inhabitants but with the wider forces of Arab nationalism."

B. Economic And Political Prospects: Speaking at a news conference on November 20, 1963 Mr Zain Abdul Baharoon, Chief Minister of Aden, gave his views on the economic consequences and possible future improvements which would depend on the outcome of his constitutional talks with Mr. Nigel Fisher, British Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, and with other officials, which he was hoping to have in London in the near future.

Mr. Baharoon was aware of the talks being carried on in London at that time between the High Commissioner for Aden, Sir Kennedy Trevaskis and British political and military leaders. The main topic at the London talks was the political, military and economic future of Aden in the rapidly changing situation in the area. Sir Kennedy Trevaskis took with him to London the proposals, still secret, of the Franchise Committee set up last August to re-define the qualifications of voters and candidates, which may well restrict rather than enlarge the electorate, in view of the large proportion of Adeni inhabitants who have come from Yemen and other Arabian States and who now claim Adeni citizenship. Elections are due in January, 1964 and are likely to be stormy.

From the British point of view, a recent decision to increase the size and scope of the Aden military base is linked with the increasing uncertainty of the political future of the Colony. There is growing pressure both within Aden, and from moderate leaders, as well as from Aden's neighbours and from the United Nations Afro-Asian group, for an early ending to Aden's colonial status. While there are conflicting views among British experts on the way forward for Aden, there is an increasing awareness that the stability of the military base must depend on the consent of a future independent government.

On the economic side, a great deal will depend on the size of the rent that Britain will agree to pay for use of the base. At present no rent is paid, and while the future that the British have had in mind is in the region of £12 million, this figure itself being larger than anything Britain had in mind not so very long ago, Aden politicians are now talking in terms of £60 million a year.

One of the reasons for the increase is the current dispute between leaders in the State of Aden and the Government of the Federation; Aden would like to keep the whole of the (proposed) rent for the base for her own budget, while Federation leaders argue that the rent should go to the Federation consisting of 19 local States.

Mr. Baharoon said at the news conference, alluded to above, that schemes for the construction of berths for the larger ships using Aden Harbour are now being studied, that the Government will also participate in making capital available for economic projects, that they propose to encourage the establishment of a local Bank in consultation with the Federal Government and that long-term loans will be made available for people to build their own homes. Finally, he intends to explore possibilities of improving tourist facilities in the State.

The economic importance of the size of the rent that Britain may give for the use of the military base arises from the fact that the Budget for the whole of the South Arabian Federation for the fiscal year 1963-64 is around £8 million and for the State of Aden itself is under £4 million. It may be recalled that the State of Aden has been pressing the British Government for additional financial assistance since it joined the South Arabian Federation, an annual grant of up to £10 million being requested while the British side has been thinking in considerably smaller terms. Agreement on the rent for the military base could end the present stalemate in the financial talks.

C. Restrictions On Aliens—Strict Security Measures: A decree ordering all aliens entering and residing in the South Arabian Federation to register and obtain registration documents was issued on December 11, 1963 by the Federal Supreme Council (Cabinet).

A Cabinet announcement said that further instructions to aliens would be issued.

This was believed to be the first such restriction that the Federation has imposed on foreigners who normally must have prior approval from the immigration authorities for visiting the Federation. The measure is obviously aimed at the thousands of Yemenis who previously could come from Yemen for work and cross back without let or hindrance.

The Aden Police Commissioner on December 11 offered a £5,000 reward to any one with information leading to the arrest and conviction of the men behind the previous day's hand-grenade incident (see above) in which, according to latest official figures, 53 people were injured. An Indian woman died in hospital.

All the federal territory was under a State of Emergency, which the Cabinet declared the previous night. The long frontier with Yemen has been closed to all traffic indefinitely. Announcing this, the Federal Government said it was thought that "subversive agents" from Yemen were involved in the incident. Recent broadcasts from Sanaa lend colour to this suspicion.

Aden was quiet on December 11, with the police undertaking a mass interrogation of people. Secrecy was being observed by the police concerning the extent of their investigations. No confirmation was available of widespread rumours about the "disappearance" of some leaders of the pro-Yemen People's Socialist Party and its labour wing, the 22,000-strong Aden Trades Union Congress.

AFGHANISTAN

A. Progress Of Second Five-Year Plan: It was reported on November 29, 1963 that the Minister of Planning, Mr Abdullah Yaftaly, had hoped that all the Second Five-Year Plan targets would be reached on time.

The Second Plan, which is now in its second year, is more ambitious than the first, a third of the total outlay being allocated to industrial development.

The Plan includes a programme for a net-work of highways and the completion of existing unfinished roads with the aid of American and Russian engineers. There is also a scheme to increase the handling capacity of Qazil Qala port, on the Amu Darya on the Soviet border. The cost is estimated at 36,000,000 afghanis.

In the field of air transport, the Plan includes the construction of two new airports at Ghazni and Lashkargah, each of which will cost 25,000,000 afghanis.

BURMA

A. Budget For 1963-64: The Revolutionary Government released on September 30, 1963 Budget estimates for 1963-64 showing a surplus of K52 crores.

A new finance law provides for a composite income-tax that would replace the existing three separate taxes—income-tax, super-tax and business profit tax. Assessees with many children will now have substantial tax relief. The incidence of the tax will be lighter on persons with incomes not exceeding 9,000 kyats annually and on companies with incomes not exceeding 24,500 kyats annually. The tax is assessed only if the annual income is over 4,200 kyats annually.

According to the Budget, total receipts during 1963-64 are estimated at K785 crores. As against this, total expenditure is estimated at K733 crores. There is thus a surplus of K52 crores.

Current receipts are: (1) Taxes on production and consumption—K75 crores; (2) Income-tax—K37 crores; (3) Taxes on use of State-owned properties—K11 crores; (4) Income on sale of goods and services of Depts—K11 crores; and (5) Miscellaneous—K5 crores.

Total—K139 crores.

Investment to the tune of K88 crores will be made during the budget year, this sum being made up of the K52 crores surplus mentioned above and foreign loans and aids to be received from abroad. Altogether 47.5 per cent of this investment will be used for economic development, 26.1 per cent for improvement of transport and communications, and 26.4 per cent for streamlining the social and administrative services. The percentage of investment used in 1962-63 in these fields were 39.2 per cent, 33.8 per cent and 27.2 per cent respectively.

The Budget shows a marked improvement in the national economy since the take-over by the Revolutionary Government 19 months ago.

The following targets have been set for achievement during the financial year 1963-64:

Production—K646 crores (which will be made up of K247 crores of agricultural production, K97 crores of production from animal resources and fisheries, K26 crores from forests, K18 crores from mines, and K258 crores from industrial enterprises).

Exports—K193 crores (i.e. K17 crores greater than that of 1962-63).

Imports—K174 crores (i.e. K18 crores more than that of 1962-63).

At the end of financial year, it is expected that a net increase of K18 crores in foreign exchange will be achieved.

With the increase in both exports and imports, the level of prices in the country will go down further than it did in 1962-63.

According to the Budget, the estimated population of the Union of Burma is 2,37,35,000.

The breakdown by age and sex is as follows:

(1) Number of males under 15 years of age—46,87,000.

(2) Number of females under 15 years—47,07,000.

(3) Males between 15 and 55 years —60,24,000.

(4) Females between 15 and 55 years —63,18,000.

(5) Males above 55 years—9,37,000.

(6) Females above 55 years—10,62,000.

Life expectancies of males and females are estimated as follows:

(1) Males before the War—34.9 years.

(2) Females before the War—36.8 years.

(3) Males in 1952—40.8 years.

(4) Females in 1952—43.8 years.

B. People's Workers' Council Proposed: A People's Workers' Council is proposed to be formed soon by the Revolutionary Council to promote efficiency and to safeguard the interests of all employees in Government departments, boards, corporations and State-run factories.

The principal tasks of the Council will be: (1) to improve the working conditions of these employees; (2) to ensure that they render their services to full capacity; (3) to arrange for their welfare; (4) to foster harmonious relations among employees both intra-and inter-departmentally; and (5) to promote co-ordination of effort among all the Departments for the fulfilment of the Burmese Way socialist programme.

A Preparatory Executive Committee, headed by the Home Minister, Colonel Kyaw Soe, has been formed by the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council to draw up a draft Constitution for the proposed Council.

In the meantime, the Preparatory Executive Committee will explain to all workers in the various Government Departments, Boards, Corporations and State-owned factories the aims and objects of the projected Council.

The first task to which the Council, after formation, will give its attention will be to improve the working conditions of public employees in the Rangoon Division. Reforms and improvements introduced in Rangoon will then be extended to the districts in gradual stages.

After the creation of the Council, the Preparatory Executive Committee will also continue to function, mainly as the co-ordinating agency between the various Departments and Boards.

C. Exploitation Of Coal Mines: The Petroleum and Minerals Development Corporation has decided to exploit the coal mines at Kalewa under a five-year plan beginning in 1963.

This Plan envisages production of 2,43,050 tons of coal during the plan period. The use of this coal by the various departments will result in a saving of foreign exchange to the tune of over K21 million.

The coal produced at Kalewa has to be transported now by private sampans to Ahlone near Monywa. Such method of transport is not only primitive but expensive. The authorities have therefore initiated surveys with the aid of West German technical experts to introduce a modern system of coal transport between Kalewa and Monywa.

Mining operations at Kalewa started in 1949 at a point north of the river Myittha. Around this original mine were found not less than 54 coal seams, each from 6 inches to 9 feet thick. Of these seams, the three in the upper layer and the other four in the bottom layer have a thickness ranging from 3 feet to 9 feet.

According to estimates, the Kalewa mines have a capacity of producing up to about 10,000,000 tons of coal. Surveys and measurements have been made of 4,00,000 tons out of this estimated total tonnage of coal.

D. Compensation To BOC: The Burmah Oil Company (BOC) and the Government have reached full agreement on the final settlement of compensation arising out of the State's acquisition of the Company's interests in Burma.

Thus ended the Company's association with Burma and its oil industry going back to 1886.

The Government has paid to BOC £2,419,000 on behalf of Burmah Oil Company, Indo-Burma Petroleum, and British Burmah Petroleum. This was the balance of the agreed purchase price of the companies' shares in BOC (1954) Ltd., and the marketing assets in Burma of Burmah Oil (Burma Trading), Ltd., and the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company.

E. Export-Import Corporation: The Government has constituted a Corporation which will establish direct business connexions with manufacturers and exporters.

The management of the Corporation has been entrusted to Burmese businessmen experienced in handling the import-export business.

The Corporation will be directly under the People's Stores Corporation Council, Ministry of Co-operation and Supply.

The step has been taken by the Government following the nationalization of import and export trade handled previously by the private sector. All future transactions will be through the Corporation.

It will look after the export of traditional Burmese products like rice, rice products, all kinds of oil-cakes, raw cotton, beans, pulses, maize, seeds, potatoes, garlic, timber, salt, turmeric, rubber, etc and import direct from the foreign manufacturers all consumer goods excluding the trade handled on a Government-to-Government basis.

CAMBODIA

A. Request For Withdrawal Of US Aid—Clarification: The Royal Embassy of Cambodia in New Delhi issued the following Press Note on December 6, 1963 on the conflicting reports regarding the recent developments in the Kingdom:

"Certain big American newspapers, referring to the position of Cambodia after its request of withdrawal of American aid, speak of a so-called request that Prince Norodom Sihanouk was to have addressed to France through a Press agency. According to information of the same source, 'French officials say that the request of the Prince was a surprise'; however, it adds that 'an immediate reply would seem disagreeable to the United States and to the West.'

"The Secretariat of the Head of State is authorized to make categorical denial to this Western interpretation of the statements of Prince Norodom Sihanouk who has not submitted any request for aid to France, neither directly nor a fortiori through a Press agency.

"In fact, on many occasions, French correspondents and journalists have intentionally put ambiguous questions to the Prince, Head of State, on the position which Cambodia would adopt if eventually French aid is granted to this country. Prince Norodom Sihanouk has clearly underlined in his replies that if France proposed unconditional aid to Cambodia, it would be favourably welcome.

"It appears regrettable then that a certain Press agency's cables have thought it necessary to suggest that Cambodia resorted to France or was going to do so to replace US aid or even it foresaw French aid would be granted to it shortly. Once again, it is worthwhile to recall that the Prince, Head of State, has always declared that Cambodia could not indulge in the act of begging all countries. Under such conditions, the official French circles have therefore no reason to express their surprise or foresee a reply to a request which was never made.

"However, one will not fail to deplore certain political manoeuvres attempted on our national dignity. It is obvious, in fact, that certain foreign circles think that Cambodia is in a desperate state and is anxious to negotiate quickly with France on an economic and military aid agreement. Certain Press reports did not fear besides to assert or declare that if France refused to accede to the request of Cambodia, this could result in Cambodia resorting to the Soviet Union and China. In this respect, we must emphasize that the Prince, Head of State, has never implied that Cambodia would indulge in an act of blackmail resorted to by other countries with profit. In fact, Prince Norodom Sihanouk simply has evoked the aid that China has spontaneously promised to the Kingdom."

B. Proposal For Confederation With South Viet-Nam: Addressing a delegation of Viet-Namese residing in Cambodia on December 3, 1963, the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, proposed a confederation between Cambodia and a neutralized South Viet-Nam.

According to Western agency reports he said: "If South Viet-Nam were to achieve a status of neutrality, Cambodia would agree to constitute a confederation of associated States on an equal footing."

He said the two countries would together constitute a real force in South-East Asia and would have "spotless relations".

He also proposed that the two countries should associate their economies by creating "a common market".

According to him, the biggest advantage of the proposed confederation would be that it would serve peace in Asia and the whole world.

He said South Viet-Nam could very well forgo American aid if it "knew how to exploit the vast resources of the country and above all ensure the return of peace."

He said the entire Communist camp "would be satisfied with a completely neutral South Viet-Nam, as Cambodia is."

He referred to the conference he had proposed for the "neutralization of Cambodia" and said the people of South Viet-Nam could take advantage of the conference "to put an end to this senseless war".

Reports about the confederation proposal attracted much attention. French circles feared that the proposal might sanction the division of Viet-Nam. Commenting on these reactions, Prince Norodom Sihanouk said on December 7 that his proposal was intended only for the "period during which South Viet-Nam will remain detached from the North."

C. Foreign Assistance For Projects: A contract has been signed between Cambodia and Yugoslavia for the construction of three hydro-electric power stations in the region of Kirirom.

Two of these stations will be erected on the Au Chhrouw River, and the third on the Kompong Dam Loeu River. They will have a total output of 9,000 kw. These are the first Yugoslav projects in Cambodia.

A new dam built at Tuk Chha with US aid worth 8 million riels supplies irrigation water through a five-kilometre-long canal.

A Soviet-built technological institute is to have faculties for architecture and construction, and for hydro-technical, electro-technical, mining, and textile studies. It will be completed in 1964.

Poland has presented Cambodia with a complete hospital operating-theatre unit.

CEYLON

A. Progress Of Public Sector Projects: Official figures indicate that public sector projects, except for the Oils and Fats and Paranthan Chemicals Corporations, are producing to capacity.

The Oils and Fats Corporation, which turned out only 17.3 per cent of coconut-oil capacity in 1960, in 1961 manufactured 63.7 per cent of its capacity; and output of poultry and cattle food was raised from 21.6 per cent in 1960 to 50 per cent in 1962. The annual deficit of Rs. 1 million before 1961 has been reduced to less than Rs. 400,000.

In the case of Paranthan Chemicals Corporation, output of caustic soda and chlorine reached 61 per cent and 64 per cent of capacity respectively during 1962.

The value of public sector industrial production has increased by more than 200 per cent in this period; investment has risen from Rs. 138 million in 1956 to Rs. 200 million in 1962.

Major developments in the public sector are as follows:

Paper output has gone up from 360 tons in 1956 to 4,690 tons in 1962. The expansion programme now in hand is designed to provide an annual capacity of up to 9,000 tons of writing and printing paper.

More ceramics are available. Kiln capacity at the Ceramics Plant was recently raised to 840 tons a year, and work has started on new factories scheduled to produce an additional 1,600 tons. Actual production rose from 200 tons in 1956 to 441 tons in 1962. The Kaolin Refinery is already in operation, and has a rated capacity of 5,500 tons of refined kaolin a year.

More leather footwear requirements will, it is hoped, be met by the Shoe Factory, which came into production in October, 1962, and can turn out 450,000 pairs a year. Measures have been taken to step up tannery capacity, at present 375,000 lbs of tanned leather.

Textile yarn is being produced at the State Spinning Mills, Veyangoda; in the first 10 months of operation in 1962, yarn was turned out at a rated capacity of 1.5 million lbs. and the mills recorded a profit.

Cement expansion scheme work already under way will increase the present annual output of 80,000 tons to 275,000 tons by 1965.

Mineral exploration has proceeded at a much more rapid pace, and experts have located one of the largest single deposits of magnetic group iron-ore—about 4 million tons—close to Bingirlya. More discoveries are expected in the area.

Work on the iron and steel plant began in 1962 and is on schedule. To be set up with Russian aid, it will produce 60,000 tons of iron and steel, including 10,000 tons of wire and wire products.

Work has also been started on the tyre and tube factory at Kelaniya—maximum capacity: 360,000 tyres and tubes.

Preliminary work in connexion with the setting-up of a hardware factory to manufacture agricultural implements and engineers' and carpenters' tools (capacity 3.4 million pieces) has been undertaken.

A flour mill that will supply 25 per cent of the Island's wheat flour—50,000 tons of wheat flour and 16,500 tons of bran—has been completed.

Two major industries, preliminary work on which has been completed, are the petroleum refinery and the fertilizer plant.

With a capacity of 1.67 million tons, the refinery should cater for all local requirements; and the Government proposes to produce petro-chemicals as the basis of several light consumer industries. The Fertilizer Plant (capacity: 300,000 tons of ammonium sulphate) will meet national demand for that type of fertilizer.

Total foreign exchange savings which these projects are expected to effect was put at Rs. 200 million a year.

SUMMARY: Movement Of US 7th Fleet In Indian Ocean; East Pakistan Violation Of Assam Border; Asian Population Conference; Re-classification Of Eight Cities; General Elections In Goa.

A. Movement Of US 7th Fleet In Indian Ocean: It was reported by The Times of India on December 18, 1963 that about a dozen countries in the Indian Ocean area had been informed in the past two or three days of the US decision to send a part of its Seventh Fleet to South Asian waters.

They included Australia, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, Burma, Ceylon, India, Pakistan, Iran, Saudi Arabia and some East African States.

A Task Force of the US Seventh Fleet, including an aircraft-carrier with its usual complement of escort vessels, will start cruising the Indian Ocean area from February or March, 1964 as soon as political formalities have been completed. It will carry out a series of manoeuvres with or without the co-operation of the regional countries.

The aircraft-carriers of the US Seventh Fleet carry on board supersonic fighter-bombers with nuclear capability to meet any eventuality. Each of the ships has on board 60 to 80 aircraft of all types with a nuclear stockpile of their own to operate as a self-contained air force.

At the time of the Chinese invasion of India in October, 1962, one of the aircraft-carriers of the Seventh Fleet was ordered to the Bay of Bengal to help defend the Calcutta zone if the need arose. But the Chinese announced the cease-fire before the carrier had crossed the Malayan Straits.

The Seventh Fleet's extension to the Indian Ocean area is primarily intended to confront China with a powerful deterrent against further aggression in South Asia.

The US Government is also anxious to deploy enough American power in this area to back up its diplomatic commitments in the regional disputes.

The USA appears to be quite determined to extend its power to South Asia to be able to deal effectively with local disputes—such as an Indo-Pakistan flare-up or a showdown between Malaysia and Indonesia—should the need arise for prompt American intervention. Some of the US diplomats have always held that this gap in the global deployment of American power should be filled by extending the Seventh Fleet to the Indian Ocean area.

One of the reasons given for the extension of the Seventh Fleet to South Asia is that before China explodes a nuclear device in the next year or two the "power vacuum" in the Indian Ocean area should be filled so that the Chinese do not derive any psychological advantage from it. The USA wants to step in, in good time, to establish its own nuclear presence in the Indian Ocean region.

About two or three months ago, the US Government decided to create a separate Indian Ocean Command to meet the requirements of American diplomacy in South Asia, East Asia and Africa south of the Sahara. Hitherto, all American military activity in this area was controlled by CINCEUR and CINCPAC, the Commanders-in-Chief in Europe and the Pacific. Now the jurisdiction of the US Strike Command under Gen. Paul Adams with headquarters in Florida has been extended to include the Indian Ocean area in it.

Hitherto, the Strike Command, which is a global command, had no operational area of its own. Regionally, it had to operate in the Indian Ocean areas under the wings of either CINCEUR or CINCPAC. But now all American military activity in South Asia, East Asia and Africa south of the Sahara—including military aid programmes to countries like India and Pakistan—have been placed directly under Gen. Adams's personal command, in addition to his global responsibilities as Commander-in-Chief of the Strike Command.

But the American brasshats are not free from inter-command wrangles when it comes to sharing the spoils of power. The new Indian Ocean Command under Gen. Adams has been claiming complete control over all American military activity in this area, including the movements of the US naval forces. But the CINCPAC Command at Pearl Harbour, which controls the Seventh Fleet, is not prepared to relinquish its power over units of this fleet deployed in the Indian Ocean.

The Defence Department in Washington was reported to be considering the desirability of detaching a task force from the Seventh Fleet and placing it under Gen. Adams's command to streamline the control of all American military activities in the Indian Ocean area. The decision to extend the US naval power to South Asia has already been taken, but the details of the command structure have not yet been finally settled.

Gen. Maxwell Taylor's View:

A spokesman of the External Affairs Ministry said in New Delhi on December 17, 1963 that Gen. Maxwell Taylor, Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff, had told the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru that the US Government was "considering the advisability of some of the ships of the Seventh Fleet cruising the Indian Ocean."

He also disclosed that, in his talk with Mr. Nehru, Gen. Taylor had indicated that these ships would be calling at some African ports.

The spokesman said that Gen. Taylor did not say specifically whether the ships of the Seventh Fleet cruising the Indian Ocean area would be calling at any of the Indian ports. But he thought it was quite possible that some of these ships might make "courtesy calls" at Indian ports in the normal course.

On December 19, General Taylor left for Pakistan after three "extremely useful" days in India.

Talking to newsmen at Palam airport, he said that he had come to India to gain a "first-hand impression" of the country's defence effort against the Chinese threat.

He seemed quite satisfied with the talks he had had with the Prime Minister, the Defence Minister, the Service chiefs and others. He said they were "very frank, free and complete."

His overall impression of the visit to India was that the Government was determined to "strike a balance between defence and the preservation of the vital economic problems" facing the country. This, he said, required "careful judgment and great wisdom." He did not see any tendency on India's part "for a runaway military programme unrelated to the requirements of the economy."

After his departure, American diplomats in New Delhi stressed once again that General Taylor did not come to India to discuss the details of US military assistance. He came primarily to get a clearer picture of the country's defence preparation and the general political philosophy behind it. So he neither promised additional US assistance for raising mountain divisions nor held out any hopes of supersonic planes to strengthen the Air Force. India, on her part, merely outlined her plans for a balanced defence build-up without making any request for additional equipment.

General Taylor did not also discuss the payments question with the Finance Minister. They merely talked of the need for maintaining a balance between the defence build-up and industrial development to keep the country's economy on an even keel.

Answering a series of questions on the reported US move to extend the operation of the Seventh Fleet to the Indian Ocean, General Taylor said "the general scope of the project when I left Washington was to send an aircraft-carrier, perhaps two or three destroyers and an oiler (tanker). The necessary details had not yet been worked out—it is still a proposal which is still being considered."

Replying to further questions, he said the visiting ships would be "independent" during their cruise in the Indian Ocean. They would not require any port facilities.

Q.: Is there a proposal to call at African ports?

Gen. Taylor: We never talked in terms of touching at ports. That will arise only when we touch specific ports.

Q.: Is it necessary for you to consult the countries in the region for sending the ships to the Indian Ocean?

Gen. Taylor: Not necessary, but I saw the whole thing being discussed by the Press in India. That is why I mentioned it to the Prime Minister.

Mr. J. Nehru's Statement:

The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru stated in the Lok Sabha on December 19, 1963 that if the US Government decided to send a part of its Seventh Fleet to the Indian Ocean area, "all that we need say today is that outside the territorial waters of India, the Ocean is naturally open to them as to the naval vessels of any other country."

Asked by a Communist member whether it was the Government's policy not to protest against Big Powers crossing the high seas and coming near Indian territorial waters, Mr. Nehru replied: "If the thing is obviously to our detriment, we protest. If it is not, we do not."

Answering a calling attention motion by Mr. Nath Pai and 20 others, he said that according to what Gen. Taylor had stated before leaving for Pakistan, an aircraft-carrier with some destroyers would probably come to the Indian Ocean in a month or two, if such a decision was taken by the US Government.

There had been newspaper reports to suggest that the US Government was extending the operational sphere of the Seventh Fleet from the China Sea to the Indian Ocean. "We had no information on the subject, and we had at no stage been consulted by the US Government in the matter. When Gen. Taylor called on me on December 17, among other matters mentioned, he told me that they were considering the advisability of some units of their Seventh Fleet cruising this area with the object of getting acquainted with the seas in this region, but no decision had been taken in the matter. Two or three or four naval vessels of the Seventh Fleet might be used for such cruises."

B. East Pakistan Violation Of Assam Border: East Pakistani riflemen trespassed into the Lobhacherra tea garden in the United Khasi and Jaintia Hills district on the Sylhet border and fired at the Assam border security patrol on December 9, 1963.

A State Government spokesman said that firing continued on December 10 also.

The Pakistani forces, it was stated, crossed the well-demarcated boundary in Lobhacherra, came within the Indian territory and asked the Indian patrol to withdraw. The Assam border security men were forced to return the fire in self-defence.

An ambush party of the East Pakistan Rifles launched an attack on the Assam border security forces on December 10 also. No casualties were reported so far on the Indian side.

The spokesman said this was the first clash provoked by the Pakistanis on Indian territory across the well-demarcated boundary accepted by both sides.

The boundary line there cuts across the Lobhacherra tea estate and over 100 acres of it fall within the Indian territory.

Another Attack On Karimganj Border:

On December 10, Pakistani forces made a surprise attack on the Indian outpost at Karkhana Putnigaon in the Lathitilla-Dumabari area, on the Karimganj border.

An Assam Government spokesman said that the Indian patrols exercised considerable patience before returning the fire in self-defence.

An Indian security guard was injured in the firing. He was admitted to hospital.

The Pakistani forces began firing at 10-15 p.m. and showered bullets throughout the night on Indian positions at several points on the border.

Cease-fire Agreement:

On December 19, East Pakistan agreed to a cease-fire in the Lobhacherra area on the United Khasi and Jaintia Hills border at a Sector Commander-level meeting held at Tamabil.

The two Commanders agreed to treat the actually demarcated boundary for all practical purposes.

The Pakistani Sector Commander was understood to have assured his counterpart that East Pakistani forces who illegally occupied some areas in Lobhacherra inside Indian territory would vacate it. He also assured the Indian Commander that the newly constructed bunkers and trenches on their side would be dismantled.

According to an Assam Government spokesman Pakistani firing continued intermittently for the 11th day on December 19 till midday.

C. Asian Population Conference: The 10-day Asian Population Conference, which ended in New Delhi on December 20, 1963, has recommended that family planning could be considered only as one of the solutions to the population problems of the region.

It held that no matter how drastic the methods employed, family planning programmes, as already adopted in many Asian countries like India, Pakistan and Korea, could not appreciably affect population growth during the next decade or so.

The Conference, therefore, urged the countries of the region to deal with two "cardinal problems"—the overflow of young people due to continued high birth rates and the shift of population to urban areas.

It felt that since population growth could not be suddenly reduced its challenge should be met by improving the efficiency of each individual so as to accelerate economic growth.

Measures designed to promote fuller utilization of human resources should be accorded the same importance and urgency as those aimed at reducing the growth of population. These included education and training and greater employment opportunities for the people and launching of social welfare, health and housing schemes on a large scale.

High priority should be given to agriculture to feed the increasing population.

The Conference urged the Governments to adopt "positive population policies" related to their individual needs and the needs of the region to bring down the birth rate.

Since population was a vital factor in development, the Conference suggested that population statistics should form an integral part of all economic and social planning in the region.

It adopted a resolution urging orientation of national policies in the light of population trends, and calling for full cooperation among the countries of the region in training and research programmes. It also urged international agencies like ECAFE to give full support to such programmes.

Over 200 delegates and experts from 20 countries participated in the Conference.

Earlier, summing up the achievements of the Conference, the Indian Home Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, said: "Since you cannot reduce the population quickly, you must do something to meet the needs of the newcomers". This realization was an important contribution of the Conference.

He ruled out abortion as practised in Japan as a feasible means of reducing the birth rate, but he advocated sterilization of people with three children as one of the possible remedies.

U Nyun, Executive Secretary of the Conference, said that one of its important objectives was to help the countries of the region achieve a 5 per cent annual increase in their national income during the current "development decade". Acceleration of economic growth was, therefore, just as important as reduction in the birth rate.

D. Trade And Payments Agreement With Poland: A new five-year Trade and Payments Agreement was signed in New Delhi on December 18, 1963 between Poland and India, envisaging a trade turnover of about Rs. 16 crores each way during 1964.

Under the Agreement, Indian exports in 1964 will be of the order of Rs. 160 million—about Rs. 35 million more over the current year.

India will export engineering goods, including textile machinery and accessories, machine tools and various other engineering products, including diesel engines.

Under the Agreement, Poland will also buy cotton textiles, handicrafts and handloom products, leather footwear and other new items of manufacture like duplicators, ready-made garments, collapsible tubes, razor blades as well as iron-ore, manganese ore and mica. E. Import Policy During October, 1963—March, 1964: It was officially announced in New Delhi on December 21 that there would be no cuts in the imports to be effected by actual users under annual licences during the October, 1963 to March, 1964 licensing period.

It had already been announced in the beginning of October, 1963 that there would not be any cuts in the imports to be made by established importers in the latter half of the current financial year (October-March).

In the case of industries which have been granted licences for the first half-year's requirement as first instalment, the supplementary licences for the second half-year will be granted.

The Government has also decided that annual licences granted to established importers and actual users for April, 1963-March, 1964 need not be presented to the licensing authorities for endorsement regarding utilization of the second half.

F. Re-classification Of Eight Cities: More than 1,50,000 Central Government employees will be eligible for higher rates of allowances as a result of re-classification of eight major cities announced in the Lok Sabha on December 21, 1963 by the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari.

The re-classification took effect from January 1, 1964. The additional cost was estimated at Rs. 2.59 crores per annum.

Mr. Krishnamachari said it had been decided that instead of the existing three classes, A, B and C, there should be four classes A, B-1, B-2 and C.

The population limits for qualifying for these classes would be 16,00,000, 8,00,000, 4,00,000 and 1,00,000 instead of present limits of 20,00,000, 5,00,000 and 1,00,000.

Classes A, B-2 and C will have the rates of allowances now attached to the existing A, B and C classes, respectively. The new class B-1 will have rates intermediate between existing A and B classes.

Under the new system, Madras, now a B class city, would be re-classified as A; four B class cities—Hyderabad, Ahmedabad, Bangalore and Kanpur—would be re-classified as B-1 and three C class cities —Madurai, Allahabad and Jaipur—would be re-classified as B-2.

Other B class cities would be re-classified as B-2 without any change in the allowance rates admissible there.

G. Banking Laws Bill Passed: The Banking Laws (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, which was passed by the Lok Sabha on December 20, 1963 seeks to enable the Reserve Bank to regulate the conditions on which deposits may be accepted by non-banking companies or institutions.

The Bill also seeks to amend the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, the Banking Companies Act, and the State Bank of India (Subsidiary Banks) Act 1959.

Under the Bill, the Reserve Bank will ask for returns and information from certain financial institutions, namely, firms, companies or other bodies corporate which are financing trade, industry, commerce or agriculture, or are carrying on as part of their business the acquisition of shares, stocks, bonds, debentures, or other securities or are engaged mainly in the financing of hire-purchase transactions and non-banking institutions and accepting deposits from members of the general public.

The Reserve Bank will also be enabled to carry out inspections of these institutions where necessary.

The existing enactments relating to banks do not provide for any control over companies or institutions, which, although they are not rated as banks, accept deposits from the general public or carry on other business, which is allied to banking.

The Bill seeks to ensure more effective supervision and management of the monetary and credit system by the Reserve Bank.

The Bank should also be empowered to give to any financial institution or institutions directions in respect of matters in which the Bank, as the country's central bank, may be interested from the point of view of the control of credit policy.

The Bank's powers in relation to commercial banks should also be enhanced and extended in certain directions, so as to provide for stricter supervision of the operations and working of such banks. The Bill seeks to achieve these objects.

Opportunity is also being taken to omit certain provisions of the Reserve Bank of India Act, which are no longer considered necessary, and to bring out more clearly the intention underlying certain provisions of the Banking Companies Act.

It is sought to empower the Reserve Bank to regulate or prohibit issue of prospectus or advertisement soliciting deposits of money by non-banking institutions if it is considered necessary in the public interest. The Bank will have the power to collect information from non-banking institutions as to deposits and to give directions. It will have the power to call for information from financial institutions and to give directions.

The penalty for failure to submit any return, statement or information sought by RBI will be imprisonment for three years with fine. Failure to produce any book, account or other document will be punishable with fine, which may extend to Rs. 2,000 in respect of each offence and, if a person persists in such refusal, with a further fine, which may extend to Rs. 100 for every day during which the offence continues.

According to Section 34 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, currency notes issued by the Government and taken over by the Bank, or bank notes issued by the Bank, if they were not presented for payment within 40 years after the date of issue, are deemed to have been lost and to have gone out of circulation. The assets held against such notes are then resumed. If subsequently it is proved that any note has not really been lost and has to be honoured, the claim is settled ad hoc.

The advantages of this procedure, which provides for assets being resumed in certain circumstances, are not commensurate with the labour and expenditure involved in maintaining detailed statistics for the purpose of ascertaining when any notes are due to be written off from circulation.

It is, therefore, proposed to delete the provision in Section 34 requiring notes to be treated as not being in effective circulation if they are not presented for payment for a period of 40 years.

The net loss, if any, to the Government or to the Bank, as a result of the proposed amendment after taking into account the saving in expenditure as a result of the discontinuance of the system of maintaining detailed statistics, is not expected to be substantial.

When RBI was established, it was thought desirable to provide for the Bank's assets, in the form of rupee coins (which technically include rupee notes to be maintained at certain minimum levels) related to the total note issue. Section 36 of the RBI Act accordingly provides that the value of rupee coins including one rupee notes should not be less than Rs. 50 crores or one-sixth of the total assets held in the Issue Department, whichever may be higher.

In existing conditions, it is not considered necessary to prescribe any statutory minimum for assets held in the form of rupee coins including rupee notes. It is, therefore, proposed to delete Section 36 and to make certain consequential amendments in Section 38.

The voting rights of individual shareholders of any banking company or any subsidiary of the State Bank are now restricted by law to five per cent of the total voting rights of all the shareholders of the company. It is proposed to reduce this figure to one per cent.

Under Section 20 grant of unsecured loans to directors and to private companies, in which they are interested, is prohibited. It is proposed to amend this Section so as to (a) make it clear that the question of a banking company being a partner or managing agent of any other concern does not arise and (b) to extend the prohibition to public companies also in certain cases.

It is proposed that a banking company should be prevented, without the approval of RBI, from writing off any loan due from a director, or a company, firm or individual in which or in whom a director may be interested.

H. Preventive Detention Act Extended: The Government decided on October 30, 1963 to extend the Preventive Detention Act, which was to expire at the end of December, 1963 for three years.

To do this, a Bill was passed at the Winter session of Parliament on December 19.

Enacted in 1950 only for one year, the Act has been continually extended and has remained on the Statute Book.

Since October, 1962 moreover, the Central and State Governments have had at their disposal the additional, sweeping powers of detention without trial under the Defence of India Rules.

Consequently, even if the Act was allowed to expire on December 31, the Government would have no difficulty in dealing with those for whom the Act was devised. But two reasons seem to have influenced the Government's decision to re-enact for another three years.

First, there is no knowing how long the Emergency will last, and the Government does not want to be left without powers of preventive detention.

Secondly, there is an important difference between PDA and DIR. The detenus under PDA have a number of important safeguards. Every detenu has to be given the grounds of his detention, and the adequacy of these grounds is periodically reviewed by a quasi-judicial advisory board. No such safeguards are provided under DIR. In fact, those detained under it cannot even move a court of law.

It is the Government's intention, therefore, to preserve the difference between the two types of detention.

According to official sources, the Government wishes to use its powers under DIR with great circumspection, and, as far as possible, security risks will be detained under PDA.

I. IAC Annual Report: According to the annual report of the Indian Airlines Corporation (IAC) presented to the Lok Sabha on December 20, 1963, IAC made a profit of Rs. 20,91,000 during 1962-63, with a total revenue of Rs. 17,31,32,000.

The report attributed the rise in profit from Rs. 7,88,000 in the previous year mainly to "high utilization of fleet and increased revenues".

Over 9,00,000 passengers flew during the year in IAC flights which now touch 67 stations in India and neighbouring countries.

The Corporation's foreign exchange earnings, amounting to Rs. 250,00,000, were not affected during the year despite a fall in tourist traffic.

J. ITI Annual Report: According to the annual report of the State-owned Indian Telephone Industries (ITI), placed before the Lok Sabha on December 17, 1963, ITI made a profit of Rs. 1,02,00,000 in 1962-63—an increase of Rs. 38,00,000 over the previous year—and declared a dividend of four per cent.

According to the report the financial position of the company would permit an increase in the dividend as well as in reserves in the years to come.

The production of the factory during the year under review was 1,32,000 telephones, 1,14,000 auto exchange lines and Rs. 1,52,00,000 worth of transmission equipment. Judging by this production, the report says that the targets set for the Third Plan—1,80,000 telephones, 1,80,000 auto exchange lines and Rs. 2,60,00,000 worth of transmission equipment—can be achieved.

Because of the incentive scheme introduced, the efficiency of labour increased from 96.78 per cent to 102.94 per cent during the year under review.

The report said that the achievements of ITI can be greater but the future expansion of production is circumscribed by the fact that the demands of the main customer, namely, the Posts and Telegraphs Department are restricted because of the limited funds allocated to that Department by the Planning Commission.

Representatives of ITI visited Tunisia, Ceylon and Burma to sell their products. Orders to the extent of Rs. 4,40,000 have been secured. In addition, equipment worth about Rs. 4,00,000 which was awaiting inspection at the end of 1962-63 has now been shipped.

The factory employs more than 9,000 persons.

K. First General Elections In Goa: The first General Elections in Goa, Daman and Diu since they were liberated from Portuguese rule on December 21, 1962 were held on December 10 and 11, 1963. In the elections to the 30-member State Assembly, the Maharashtrawadi Gomantak won 14 seats. It also won both the seats in the Parliamentary elections.

The party, which stands for a merger of the region with neighbouring Maharashtra and for democratic socialism, enjoys the support of the three Independent candidates, all of whom hold allegiance to the Praja-Socialist Party. Thus, the Gomantak party has 17 seats in the Assembly.

The United Goans, determined to keep Goa as a separate State, won 12 seats.

In the final tally, Congress had only one win. In Goa proper, the Congress failed to secure even a single seat.

The Congress had contested every one of the 30 seats in the Assembly but was able to take only one—that representing Daman. It was completely routed in Goa, where its candidates were not only unable to secure even one of the 28 seats but what was more, 18 of them lost their deposits, a proportion unheard of in the history of the party.

The defeated Congress candidates included the President of the Goa, Daman and Diu Pradesh Congress Committee, Mr. Purushottam Kakodkar and its General Secretary, Mr. Shankar Sardesai. Mr. Sardesai was among those who lost their deposits while Mr. Kakodkar just escaped that fate.

The following were the results of elections to the State Assembly:

Total number of seats	30
Total electorate	3,50,039
Total votes polled	2,60,372

Maharashtrawadi Gomantak	27	14	1,00,117
United Goans	24	12	74,081
Congress	30	1	43,100
Independents	27	3	27,648
Fronte Popular	8	nil	4,589
Invalid votes			10,837

Eighty-five candidates forfeited their deposits—52 Independents, 18 Congress, six Fronte Popular, five United Goans and four Maharashtrawadi Gomantak.

Parliamentary Elections:

Number of seats	2
Total votes polled	2,60,869

Maharashtrawadi Gomantak	2	2	1,16,073
United Goans	2	—	82,497
Invalid votes			7,081

Note: (1) Votes polled by Independents were by three candidates.

(2) One Congress candidate and all the three Independents forfeited their deposits.

Mr. D. Bandodkar Elected Leader Of Gomantak Legislature Party:

On December 13, Mr. Dayanand Bandodkar, President of the Maharashtrawadi Gomantak, was unanimously elected leader of the Gomantak Legislature Party.

The meeting which was presided over by Mr. Nath Pai, M.P. was also attended by Mr. Mukund Shinkre and Mr. Peter Alvares, the two newly elected Gomantak members of the Lok Sabha.

Mr. Bandodkar, however, is not an elected member of the Legislature, but will be seeking election to the Assembly within six months.

The Gomantak, which has 14 of 30 elective seats in the State Assembly, will have a working majority in the House with the support of two Praja-Socialist-sponsored Independents and three members to be nominated on the advice of the Chief Minister.

Presuming that a Gomantak member will be elected Speaker, the ruling party will have a voting strength of 18. This is considered a "safe" majority.

New Ministry Sworn-in:

On December 20, the first popular Ministry for the Union Territory of Goa, Daman and Diu was sworn-in by the Lt.-Governor, Mr. M. R. Sachdev.

The Ministry was formed by the Maharashtrawadi Gomantak Party.

The three-member Council of Ministers was headed by Mr. Dayanand B. Bandodkar. The other two Ministers are: Mr Vittal Subraya Karmali and Mr. Tony Fernandes.

Among those present at the swearing-in ceremony were Rear-Admiral A. K. Chatterji, Flag Officer Commanding, Indian Navy, Mr. Peter Alvares and Mr. Mukund Shinkre, the two members of the Lok Sabha from Goa, Mr. Purushottam Kakodkar, President of the Goa, Daman and Diu Congress PCC, Dr. Jack Sequera, President of the United Goans, and prominent Government officials.

An official Press Note said that Mr. Sachdev had made the following allocation of portfolios and business of the Government to the Ministers:

Mr. Bandodkar (Chief Minister)—General Administration, Special Department, Home, Planning and Development, excluding Agriculture, Finance;

Mr. Karmali—Information and Tourist Department, Education, Public Health and Public Works; and

Mr. Fernandes—Law, Industries, Labour and Agriculture.

In his inaugural address, the Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain, praised the orderly and peaceful manner in which the General Elections were conducted and said it was significant that within two years of the liberation of the Territory and its union with India, it had been possible for the Centre to entrust the affairs of the Territory to its elected representatives.

He added: "This beautiful territory of Goa has also considerable natural resources offering wide scope for the development of industry and trade."

Among the important development projects he mentioned for Goa were power from Koyna in Maharashtra and Saravati in Mysore, a pig-iron plant of 100,000 tonnes capacity, a fertilizer factory and a steel mill.

Mr. D. Bandodkar's News Conference:

Mr. D. Bandodkar told a news conference in New Delhi on December 28 that Goa could not remain a separate entity and had ultimately to merge with Maharashtra. But he admitted there were certain practical difficulties in the way of its immediate merger.

He, however, declined to spell out the difficulties despite persistent questions. His party Maharashtrawadi Gomantak would make a policy declaration in the Lieutenant-Governor's address to the State Assembly when it met on January 9, 1964, that it stood for Goa's merger with Maharashtra.

He said he had been assured by the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru during his recent meeting with him in Bombay that he was not opposed to Goa's merger with Maharashtra. He had, however, advised him to try to persuade and win over the anti-merger elements in Goa before initiating the move.

Answering other questions, he said Maharashtrawadi Gomantak would be dissolved after Goa's merger.

The first major act of his Government would be to introduce land reforms and labour welfare legislation in the Assembly. He was confident these measures would weaken the anti-merger elements. Some members of the United Goan Party in the Assembly were likely to join his party soon.

He said there was no difference between the Congress and Maharashtrawadi Gomantak except on the merger question. His party would not have entered the election arena if Congress had given an assurance that Goa would ultimately be merged with Maharashtra.

Mr. K. K. Shah, the A-ICC General Secretary, who came to Panjim several times, instead of giving such an assurance had said that Congress was sure to win 22 seats and would form a coalition government, if necessary, with the help of United Goans. Maharashtrawadi Gomantak fought the elections mainly on the merger issue.

INDONESIA

A. Freezing Of Malaysian Assets: A decree issued by President Sukarno on November 27, 1963 instructed the Government to "freeze" and then take over the running of Malaysian enterprises in Indonesia.

The decree affects businesses "wholly or partly belonging to Malaysian nationals or Indonesian nationals who have domiciles in Malaysian territory".

The announcement said that the move was necessary because "the nation is now engaged in the building of a national economy and is launching economic confrontation against the new Federation." The degree followed a presidential decision on November 6 ordering the seizure of Malaysian rubber mills in east Sumatra (see page 5585).

Bangsaer Talks:

The Foreign Ministers of Thailand, Indonesia and the Philippines met at Bangsaer, 50 miles from Bangkok, from November 15 to 17, 1963 to discuss the Malaysian question.

The conference was called by Thailand to explore the possibility of easing tension in the region as a result of the crisis in the relations between Indonesia and Malaysia.

According to the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, the talks made little progress. He said Indonesia was determined to pursue its policy of confrontation against Malaysia until the principle of the Manila Agreements could be implemented in a way satisfactory to Indonesia.

The following is the text of the joint communique issued by the three Foreign Ministers:

"Recognizing the seriousness of the problems besetting South-East Asia, the three Foreign Ministers were of one mind as to the necessity of creating a favourable climate for negotiations and better understanding, thus paving the way for lasting peace in the region;

"They agreed to exert all possible efforts not to exacerbate further the tense situation already existing in the area. They were convinced that, at this stage, the lessening of tension is essential before consultations or negotiations can be fruitfully conducted;

"The Foreign Ministers of the Philippines and Indonesia re-affirmed their Governments' adherence to the Manila Agreements, which laid the foundation of Maphilindo, and their faith that these Agreements continue to offer a sound basis for the development of co-operation amongst the countries and peoples of South-East Asia. The Foreign Minister of Thailand, for his part, expressed the hope for wider and closer regional consultation and co-operation which would afford the countries of South-East Asia the possibility and the means to assume increasing responsibility for their own progress, stability and security;

"In this context, the three Foreign Ministers agreed that the countries of the region should encourage and assist one another in preserving and strengthening their independence, in safeguarding their sovereignty, and in preventing any attempt from any quarter to weaken and to divide them;

"The Foreign Ministers of the Philippines and Indonesia expressed their appreciation for the co-operation shown by the Foreign Minister of Thailand and requested him to continue rendering his good offices in order to create the ideal understanding, which would permit a common approach towards a peaceful settlement. The three Foreign Ministers further agreed to continue, as appropriate, their consultations in order to stimulate better understanding between all parties concerned."

A. Cyrus' Treasure Found: A Tehran message on December 21, 1963 said that a treasure of exquisite jewellery composed of over 200 gold objects had been discovered from the ruins of the Pasargadae Palace of Cyrus the Great, the Achaemedian founder of the Persian Empire.

The find was made by the British Institute of Persian Studies, headed by the Institute's Director, Mr. David Stronach, who said the objects dated to or just before 522 B.C.

IRAQ

A. US Wheat Supply: It was officially announced in Baghdad on December 6, 1963 that the US Government would treble its wheat shipments to Iraq following the revision of an Agreement between the two countries on deliveries of American food supplies.

The announcement said that the increase was approved in an exchange of letters between the Iraqi Foreign Ministry and the US Embassy in Baghdad modifying the provisions of the Agreement concluded in August, 1963 on American food surpluses. The change will mean that USA will ship to Iraq 150,000 tons of wheat instead of the 50,000 tons initially scheduled.

B. Jews Ordered To Register: A Baghdad despatch on December 6, 1963 said that under a law which has recently come into force, all Jews resident in Iraq must register with the authorities.

If they supply suitable information they will be given cards proving that they have retained Iraq nationality. Jews have been given 10 days in which to submit their information to the Department of Travel and Nationalities in Baghdad.

Documents and information submitted will be examined by the Department with the help of the security police. If not eligible for such cards, Jews will lose their nationality and their properties will be impounded.

The official gazette says that many Jews have dropped their Iraq nationality and are living in Iraq under assumed names which are not registered with the authorities. It is also believed that many Jews who have died have bequeathed properties to Iraq Jews whose nationality the Government has been unable to define, or whose whereabouts are unknown.

All cards providing Iraq nationality must be granted within the next four months.

A. US-Israel Extradition Treaty Comes Into Force: An Extradition Treaty between Israel and USA went into effect on December 5, 1963.

At a ceremony in the Foreign Ministry, the Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, and the US Ambassador, Mr. Walworth Barbour, exchanged the signed protocols of the Treaty.

The US protocol was signed by the late President J. F. Kennedy on October 29, one of the last international treaties to bear his name.

The Treaty was first initialled in Washington in December, 1962, and was later ratified by the Cabinet and a two-thirds vote of the US Senate. It provides for the extradition of persons wanted for such crimes as murder, rape, assault, abortions, desertion of dependants, kidnapping, robbery, bribery, embezzlement, fraud, forgery, counterfeiting, perjury, arson, smuggling, etc.

Under the terms of the pact, political crimes are specifically excluded. What constitutes a political crime is decided by the extraditing country.

B. Progress Of Jordan River Diversion Scheme: A despatch in The Times, London on December 13, 1963 said that finishing touches were being given to the Jordan river diversion scheme and it was expected to go into operation soon.

The date of the diversion is being kept secret in view of Arab threats to wage war to prevent it, but authoritative sources in Tel Aviv said that the 1964 thirst in the arid south will be quenched by Jordan river water flowing at an annual rate of 40,000,000,000 gallons.

In the next two or three years, the flow will gradually increase to 75,000 million gallons. This quantity will be within the frame-work of the plan for the division of the waters among Israel and the Arab riparian States negotiated by the late Mr. Eric Johnston, President D. D. Eisenhower's special envoy. The plan was accepted by Israel but vetoed by the Arab League.

The Israel carrier, comprising 50 miles of pipeline, 25 miles of open canal, four tunnels, pumping stations and a power plant, links up north of Tel Aviv with the headworks of the pipeline which distributes the waters of the Yarqon river to the Negev.

If the Arabs fail to thwart the diversions, they may draw some consolation from having put the Israelis to substantially greater expense and made them do with water of inferior quality. Because of a combination of the political difficulties created by the Arab League and unforeseen climatic developments, the water to be siphoned southward in 1964 will be too saline for certain agricultural uses and will have to be diluted with ground water from the coastal plain between Haifa and Tel Aviv.

The Israelis had originally planned to intercept between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of the water from the upper Jordan before it empties into Lake Tiberias. That water is almost mineral-free, containing only 60 to 70 parts a million of total dissolved salts. The remainder was to have been drawn from the Lake, which is much saltier because of saline springs at the bottom and on the shore. This mixture would have yielded water with some 450 parts a million of total dissolved salts.

However, when the Israelis built a dam and diversionary canal on the west bank of the river, Syrian forces across the border opened fire and some sharp fighting followed. The shore there was demilitarized under the 1949 armistice agreement which ended the fighting with Syria. Israel claims the demilitarized zone as her sovereign territory, but Syria considers it a sort of no man's land separating the two countries. The dispute reached the Security Council in 1954, and Israel was pressed to abandon the canal. All the water is accordingly to be drawn from Lake Tiberias.

Meanwhile, the driest three years' spell on record began in northern Israel in 1958-59, and the inflow from the Jordan into Lake Tiberias was reduced by half. The discharge of salt springs was unaffected by the drought. Consequently the total dissolved salts increased from 700 to a peak of 920 parts a million by 1962, but declined to 850 after last Winter's adequate rainfall.

As all water resources in the country are public property under Israel law the authorities were able to order the injection of ground water from the coastal plain into the carrier for dilution. Mr. Aaron Wiener, director-general of Tahal, the Israel water planning corporation, said that the salinity will thus be reduced to slightly more than 600 parts a million, which is only a little higher than that of the water now reaching the Negev from the Yarkon.

Farmers in the coastal plain are to be compensated from the Jordan conduit for their ground water, and there have been cries of anguish, particularly from citrus planters who claim that the higher chlorine content may damage their trees. However, Mr. Wiener insisted that the salinity will not exceed the maximum approved by agricultural experts for even the most sensitive plants.

Dilution by ground water is a temporary expedient. As a final solution, the water planners are to divert three agglomerations of saline springs on the west coast of Lake Tiberias. Mr. Wiener said this diversion is to be completed within a year, and is expected to reduce the mineral content by 35 parts a million annually, so that the cumulative effect within the next 10 years will be a 40 per cent reduction of salinity.

Moreover, divers have been at work measuring and studying the flow of underwater springs and it is hoped to divert them as well. If that is done, the reduction of salinity will be far greater.

With the completion of the Jordan river diversion, Israel planners are turning to other water projects. The most interesting is the reclamation of sewage and industrial wastes from Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, and Haifa. The sewage reclamation project for greater Tel Aviv will be the largest in the world, it is claimed, and will yield an estimated 16,000 million gallons by 1970.

The sewage is to be treated and then kept underground in a sand and sandstone storage space. Its storage in the dark without oxygen, where no organism can survive, will purify it and it will then be pumped with ground water of the region for general use.

Other plans envisaged are the using of surplus ground waters in the north and isolated parts of the south, and the damming of run-off waters from seasonal flash floods, which are to be diverted to small interception reservoirs for clearance of turgidity. They will then be spread for percolation underground for storage.

The aggregate increase by 1970 from the Jordan diversion and the other projects will be 140,000 million gallons at an investment of £22,600,000.

C. Exports During 1963: The Israel Central Bureau of Statistics and the Ministry of Commerce and Industry announced that Israel's exports in the first 11 months of 1963 reached $322,000,000 (I£8.4=£).

Exports during the same period in 1962 totalled $254,800,000. Exports for November, 1963 stood at $27,100,000 against $22,000,000 in 1962.

Mr. P. Sapir, Minister of Commerce and Industry, disclosed that Israel's exports of petroleum during 1963 will be worth $8 million. The Haifa refineries, he said, were competing favourably on the international market. Taking second place to Belgium in the export of cut and polished diamonds. Israel exported $80 million worth of gems in 1962. The 1963 figure has been estimated at $100 million. The USA is Israel's main customer, asking $22.2 million worth in 1961 and $28.1 million in 1962. In 1962 diamonds accounted for 30.2 per cent of the total income from exports and, excluding citrus exports, 36.9 per cent of the total.

Agricultural exports in October, 1963, excluding citrus, amounted to £350,000 as compared to £300,000 in the same month in 1962. The tourist industry earned $34.8 million in the first eight months of 1963 compared to just over $24 million for the corresponding period in 1962. Preliminary figures issued by the Citrus Board indicate that the UK and Ireland will take 4 million cases this season as against 3.7 million in 1962. Other anticipated allocations are, in million cases, Common Market countries 5.6 (4.9 in 1962-63), Scandinavia and Finland 2.5 (no change), Eastern Europe, Austria, Switzerland, Canada and USA 1.6 (1.3). JAPAN

A. Drop In Exchange Reserves: The Finance Ministry announced on December 5, 1963 that Japan's foreign exchange reserves decreased by $11 million to $1,911 million during November.

A continuing high level of imports and a large outflow of short-term capital (chiefly Euro-dollars) were responsible for the down-trend.

The trade account in November suffered heavily from a red balance in the invisible trade account which amounted to some $30 million.

The capital account, on the other hand, marked a positive balance of about $40 million owing to receipts of impact loans amounting to some $46 million.

Authorities believed that the deficit would be even larger in December as there still appeared no indication of a possible reversal of the downtrend which became conspicuous after Summer.

They predicted Japan's foreign exchange reserves would drop below the $1,900 million mark at the end of 1963.

It provides drinking water to 250,000 people in Irbed and surrounding villages. The water came in a 16-inch pipe, pumped at Azrak oasis, 100 miles from Irbed.

The pipes used in the project were originally owned by the Iraq Petroleum Company. They carried crude oil from Iraq to Haifa on the Mediterranean until 1948, when the Arabs cut the pipeline to deprive Israelis of the oil flow. LEBANON

A. Military Court Confirms "Coup" Sentences: A Military Court confirmed on November 15, 1963 the death sentences passed on eight men for complicity in the abortive coup of December 31, 1961.

The verdict came after a re-trial culminating in a marathon secret session lasting 97 hours.

First death sentences confirmed were those on Army Captains Fuad Awad and Shawky Khairallah, Lieutenant Aly Haj Hassan, Dr. Abdullah Saadeh, Mohamed Baalbaky, Bashir Obeid, Mohsen Nuzha and Jubran Atrash, all in custody.

The court ruled that Capt. Awad Khairallah and Lt. Haj Hassan should be stripped of their military ranks.

The verdict said the political nature of the crime was ruled out "by majority". Had the court considered the crimes committed political crimes, there would have been no death sentences involved.

The court president, civilian judge Mr. Emile Abu Khair, decided that the crimes were political to which armed disobedience applies. He therefore disapproved of the verdict.

Three defendants in custody who had been sentenced to death by the Military Court of First Instance had their sentences reduced to life imprisonment with hard labour. These were Asaad Al Ashkar, former President of the dissolved Nationalist Social Party, Dib Kurdiyeh and Subhy Abu Obeid.

A total of 18 defendants had a sentence of hard labour for life. Other sentences given by the court were: 18 defendants given 20 years of hard labour; 11 defendants given 15 years of hard labour; one defendant given 13 years of hard labour; six defendants given 12 years of hard labour; 24 given ten years of hard labour and 92 defendants were sentenced to periods ranging between eight years of hard labour and one year imprisonment. One defendant was acquitted.

There are 68 absconded defendants who were sentenced to death in absentia by the Court of First Instance. They and many others who were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment would be retried when they are captured or surrender.

The sentences are not subject to appeal, but the death sentences must be confirmed by the President of the Republic at the recommendation of a clemency committee.

MALAYSIA

A. Parliament Buildings Opened: The Yang di-Pertuan Agong (Head of State) formally opened on November 2, 1963 new skyscraper Parliament buildings.

They contain chambers for a House of Representatives and a Senate, along with libraries, banquet rooms, dining halls, committee rooms, and offices for all members.

Work began in 1960, and cost nearly £2 million.

Attending the opening ceremony were the members from Singapore, Sabah (North Borneo) and Sarawak, who with the old Parliament of Malaya make up the new Parliament of the Federation.

The Head of State told guests: "This building is a visible proof of our belief in the parliamentary system of government.

"This system we have found from our experience is the most suitable form of democracy for Malaysia. Not only is the parliamentary system capable of voicing and exerting the public will, but it can also produce stability and order in administration, as well as effective results in progress and prosperity for our nation and people."

After the ceremonial opening, the House of Representatives met in formal session for the swearing-in of 55 new members—24 from Sarawak, 16 from Sabah (North Borneo), and 15 from Singapore. These new members included Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, Prime Minister of Singapore, Mr. Donald Stephens, Chief Minister of Sabah, and Mr. Stephen Kalong Ningkan, Chief Minister of Sarawak.

After the swearing-in, all three took their places on the Government front bench, Mr. Lee thus confounded those who had predicted that he would sit with the Opposition or at best as a cross-bencher.

This gesture—an unspoken declaration of loyalty and unity—gave added significance to the words of Tengku Abdul Rehman, the Malaysian Prime Minister, who later spoke of Indonesia's confrontation policy towards Malaysia. To counter this, he said, it must be shown that throughout Malaysia there was a strong spirit of national unity.

The final act of the ceremony was the presentation of a Speaker's chair to the House of Representatives by a delegation from the British House of Commons led by Sir John Barlow (see page 5550).

B. Singapore Budget For 1964: The Singapore Finance Minister, Dr. Goh Keng Swee, presented on November 28, 1963 the Budget for 1964 in the Legislative Assembly.

The only changes are an increase of 10 cents in the duty on petrol and a reduction of between 15 per cent and 33-1|3 per cent in the entertainment tax on professional boxing.

The petrol tax is expected to bring in an extra $3,200,000 in revenue.

He said the future held great promise, but the present was marred by the Indonesian policy of confrontation and the economic boycott. Severance of trade with Indonesia meant a loss of nearly 9 per cent of the national income.

He said: "It is idle to pretend that this is a trivial matter. But let me make it clear beyond doubt that confrontation will not bring about an economic collapse in Singapore or anything remotely approaching it. Our economy is in a sufficiently robust state to ride the storm".

He warned exporting countries that the Singapore market would be closed to their goods if they went out of their way to assist Indonesia in that country's economic confrontation of Malaysia. He put the cost of the severance of trade relations with Indonesia at more than £24 million a year.

Comment:

A Financial Express despatch on December 10, 1963 said that Singapore's new Budget—the first to be introduced since the formation of Malaysia—gives an assurance of a future full of new hopes and prospects, only if the political atmosphere in the region is not badly disturbed following the increased strained relationship between Malaysia and Indonesia.

Although the Island's defence, foreign affairs and communications have become Central subjects, its local government, unlike the Governments of Sarawak and Sabah (North Borneo), a complete control over education, labour, development and industrial projects and part of the trade.

The year 1964 would have been better still but for Indonesia's confrontation policy—both in political and economic fields—which has not only hit its free port trade but has also dislodged over 10,000 people, working on various inter-connected trade with Djakarta.

The Island had made tremendous progress in economic, industrial and educational fields since it became a self-governing Colony in 1959. It had accumulated a fantastic reserve fund and increased the national income.

For example, bank deposits had increased from $984 million (Rs. 138 crores) to $1,092 million (Rs. 154 crores) in one year, loans and advances had shown an increase of 18 per cent—from $707 million (Rs. 106 crores) in 1962 to $786 million (Rs. 150 crores) in 1963, the value of imports had increased by eight per cent (from Rs. 50 crores to Rs. 55 crores) and exports from $285 million (Rs. 43 crores) to $307 million (Rs. 47 crores).

The year 1964 may not be as bright as was expected. Admitting the impact of Indonesia's severance of economic ties on Singapore, the Finance Minister, Dr. Goh Keng Swee, said: "So far as our position is concerned, the severance of trade between Indonesia and ourselves has brought about an adverse situation....The loss of income at the rate of $209 million a year, or eight per cent of the national income, represents a severe blow for any one to pretend that this is a trivial matter...."

But, he said, this severance of trade "will not bring about an economic collapse. Severe though its effects are, the economy of Singapore is in a sufficiently robust state to ride the storm" and the Government had decided to take measures to re-absorb the displaced workers in other industries.

He noted that certain countries were trying to assist Indonesia in its economic confrontation by direct trade line which would by-pass Singapore. He warned that if these countries went out of their way to help Djakarta, the Island Government would be compelled to close these markets for them. He did not name any country.

Even as it is, Singapore has nothing to worry much from the Indonesian confrontation. It has already a budgetary surplus of $144 million, besides an estimated surplus for 1964 of $16 million (about Rs. 25 million).

The total estimated revenue for the State for 1964 was estimated at $326.7 million. This includes 60 per cent share of all the national revenue collected, which was expected to amount to $175.6 million.

The main increases in estimates of State items of revenue property tax—$8.2 million, other services—$3.21 million, arrears of contribution by the Federal Government in respect of the University of Singapore—$8 million. For the national revenue, income-tax was expected to yield an additional $6 million, customs, excise and import duties by $8.7 million and road tax by $1.2 million.

The development plan for the years 1961-64 had allowed for a total capital outlay of $871 million. During 1960-63, the plan estimate of expenditure was $651 million. The actual expenditure amounted to 79 per cent of the target figure. This is not bad, as almost all the projects earmarked for 1963 were completed or are nearing completion.

In Jurong, the biggest industrial area in the State, 1,040 acres had been levelled and prepared for occupation. Forty-seven industrialists had been allotted sites covering 380 acres and another 35 applicants have received tentative allocations.

By early 1964, 20 factories are expected to go into operation. On the social side, 227 houses and flats have been completed and another 3,000 would go up by the next year to house workers who would be employed in the Jurong Industrial Estate.

On the national income side, the State made no less progress. During 1959 to 1960, it increased from $1,934 million to $2,437 million, a 26 per cent increase. This is remarkable progress, keeping in view that the population increased from 1.58 million in 1960 to 1.75 million in 1963.

Thus, it would be seen that the increase in the national income was faster than the population growth. In other words, the national income increased by 14.9 per cent in three years.

This rate of growth had very few equals in under-developed countries in Asia and Africa.

The growth in national income now may not be as fast as it was expected because of Indonesia's confrontation policy. It might suffer a loss of 8.7 per cent. It could lead to "greater loss if counter-measures are not taken."

The Economic Development Board estimates that with the new industries coming up, the State would by 1965, generate an additional $90 to $100 million national income a year. The normal-growth of the existing industries would add another $65 million. In this way, the industrial section alone will fill up half of the gap caused by Indonesia's confrontation policy.

One notable feature of the State's Budget outlook is that the Government, besides paying attention to the industrial development, has given equal emphasis to education, although not to the extent it had liked. It had planned that it would introduce free secondary education in 1964. This has now been postponed to 1966. Even then, education gets the lion's share—over 30 per cent of the 1964 estimates.

It may be interesting to note that Singapore spends two-thirds of its revenue on social services, whereas Indonesia spends two-thirds of its revenue on armed services.

The outstanding feature of the Island's social development had been the performance of the Housing and Development Board, which spent $130 million. In terms of houses this represented completion of 29,550 homes against a target of 26,521.

Television has also been introduced and three powerful transmitters are in the process of installation. By August, 1963, 20,000 TV licences had been taken out and the number of sets was estimated at 25,000.

Singapore with a complex structure of Indians, Malayas and Chinese living together harmoniously, is worth being emulated by less developed countries, in the matter of looking after the interests of the people.

C. Registration For National Service: The Government on November 25, 1963 ordered all men between 21 and 28 years of age to register in December for national service.

The Interior Minister, Mr. Ismail bin Dato Abdul Rahman, said the action was being taken "to take stock of this country's man-power resources."

Asked if the registration would be followed by a formal military call-up in view of the growing 'cold war' between Indonesia and Malaysia, he said: "I don't want to anticipate anything, but we must be prepared for the worst and hope for the best."

D. New Army Chief: Major-General Tunku Osman (42), a nephew of Tengku Abdul Rehman, the Prime Minister of Malaysia, is to succeed Lieutenant-General Sir Rodney Moore as Chief of Staff of the Malaysian armed forces.

No date for the change-over has been announced, but, according to reports, General Moore will leave Malaya early in 1964 to take up a new post in the British Ministry of Defence.

A. "State Of Food And Agriculture In 1963"—FAO Report: A report entitled "State of Food and Agriculture in 1963" released by the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) on October 21 said that according to preliminary estimates of the Organization, world agricultural production rose by two to three per cent in 1962-63, slightly exceeding the annual population increase of nearly two per cent.

Record crops of wheat, barley and cotton contributed largely to this increase, while the production of most other commodities showed a small rise. Others such as oats, maize, sugar, citrus fruit, coffee, cocoa and jute declined.

It stated that in Latin America, where the rate of population increase is most rapid, there was a "slight fall in production." In the Far East (excluding Mainland China) which also has a high rate of population growth, the increase in agricultural production was "little more than one per cent." In Africa, the Near East, Oceania and Western Europe, the increase in production was as much "as four to five per cent." In North America the increase was of two per cent. In Eastern Europe and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) the estimate of increase was about three per cent. In Mainland China "it appears that there was some increase in production in 1962-63" after the series of bad years since 1959-60.

No major change in the world food and agricultural situation seems likely in early 1964. Supplies of most commodities were expected to remain large, although the slackening in the rate of accumulation of surplus stocks should continue; per caput food supplies in developing countries are higher than home production because of imports.

The past five years have seen "very little change in world food production per caput..." It has varied only between 11 and 13 per cent more than before the Second World War. The main increases since the War have been in Europe and North America rather than in less developed regions. Although per caput production fell in the developing regions, this had less effect on how much people ate than it did on international trade: food exports fell in some countries and imports rose in others. In consequence, the rise in actual food supplies in each of the less developed regions appeared to have been greater than the increase in their food production, and on a regional basis per caput supplies of food were somewhat above the pre-War level even where production lagged behind.

The annual world catch of fish was eight per cent higher in 1962 than in 1961, and totalled 44.5 million tons.

The industrialized countries of Western Europe, North America, Oceania and Japan accounted for four-fifths of the world agricultural imports. In 1962 their imports expanded by three per cent, but agricultural imports into non-industrialized countries fell by two per cent. World prices of some agricultural commodities rose in 1962 and early 1963: e.g., sugar, sisal, some coarse grains, rice, butter, robusta coffee and wool. However, this was mostly because of temporary shortages and other short-term factors, and the more basic factors tending to depress the prices of many agricultural exports remained largely unaltered. Therefore, "efforts to compensate for the harmful effects of low and fluctuating world prices on the economies of exporting countries ...need to be continued."

Indices of prices received by farmers, available for 23 countries, showed that in most of them the farmers got somewhat higher prices in 1962 than in 1961. In many of the 15 countries for which data on farm income and expenditure were so far available for 1962 or 1962-63, the rise in farm expenses was more than in income, thus reducing net farm incomes.

In 65 of the 89 countries for which data were available, consumers paid more for their food in 1962 than in 1961 and the over-all cost of living also went up. Indices for both retail food prices and the over-all cost of living showed an increase.

Use Of Fertilizers:

In its annual report for 1962-63, FAO called upon developing countries to extensively use fertilizers to increase food production.

Describing the use of fertilizers as a "spearhead of agricultural development," it said: "The immense possibilities for sustained increases in crop production through the use of fertilizers should be exploited by the countries where populations are growing rapidly, hunger and malnutrition are widespread and a large part of the population is poorly housed."

Although the use of fertilizers in the developing countries was increasing most of the world supply was used by a few economically more developed countries. For example, North America, Oceania, and certain countries of Europe, with only about a quarter of the world's arable land, use three-quarters of the fertilizer.

The heaviest rate of application is found in Europe, with a consumption of 84 kg of all fertilizers per hectare of arable land, compared with 33 kg in Oceania and North America and 10 kg in USSR. The figure for India is 2.3 kg, which is nearer that for Africa (2.4 kg).

Referring to the response of crops to fertilizers and other treatments, the report gave the example of two staple crops—rice in Japan and wheat in the United Kingdom. The yields of these crops, it said, had doubled twice since records were first kept a few centuries ago. "A remarkable feature is that most of this increase occurred in the past few years and still shows no sign of levelling off. At least half of the increase in yields is attributed to fertilizer use."

Estimates of the world reserves of fertilizer materials, though conservative, do not suggest any threat of shortage. The advisability of establishing domestic fertilizer industries in developing countries is receiving increasing attention in order to save foreign exchange because of the availability of raw material, and for political reasons.

A working group of India's Planning Commission on fertilizers has recommended the establishment of additional capacity of the order of one million tons during the Fourth Five-Year Plan. It has also tentatively recommended the setting up of four new fertilizer factories. Besides, the State-owned Fertilizer Corporation has certain proposals for the expansion of the existing units.

FAO emphasized the need for a balanced supply of nutrients in the soil, particularly in the tropics where, because of the nature of the soil, deficiencies are easily induced by excessive rates of application of certain nutrients.

The report also considered the use of fertilizers in forestry and fisheries. As the plant is removed from the soil complete with root in permanent forest nurseries, satisfactory growth can be obtained only through the use of fertilizer. Fertilizers increase fish yields indirectly by stimulating the growth of phytoplankton and zooplankton on which the fish feed.

B. Russian Rouble Made Convertible: Russia announced on October 24, 1963 that it was making the rouble convertible for purposes of trade within the Russian bloc.

Tass said the rouble might also be converted in certain instances for use in trade with Western countries.

The move was designed to reduce the rigidity of the Soviet bloc trade pattern. Even within the bloc, trade has been conducted on the basis of direct bilateral goods trade because no Soviet bloc country had a convertible currency.

Tass said the conversion would be conducted by a new bank which had been agreed upon by members of COMECON, the Soviet bloc trading and economic planning organization. The agreement for the bank was signed on October 22 during a COMECON meeting in Moscow. The bank will be located in Moscow.

Regarding convertibility of the rouble in trade with others, Tass said: "The bank can also effect settlements in conversion of roubles with countries which are not parties to the agreement."

Attending the meeting were Bulgaria, Hungary, East Germany, Outer Mongolia, Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Russia.

C. Russian Arms Assistance To Under-developed Countries: According to a US Defence Department testimony made public on October 14, 1963 under-developed countries have received more than $3,000 million worth of arms from USSR and the communist bloc.

The testimony, given by Pentagon officials to a House of Representatives subcommittee, did not say over what period the weapons were supplied. But it said much of the Communist military aid took the form of gifts or cut-price sales.

It said: "In the case of Indonesia, for example, discounts are estimated to have averaged about one-thirds of Communist bloc military aid deliveries totalling over $1,000 million." Payment was also waived on more than $20 million worth of arms sent to Yemen, Morocco, Guinea and Algeria.

The unclassified section of the testimony listed the following communist bloc arms deliveries:

Algeria—Small arms, field guns, howitzers, rocket launchers, and five helicopters with an estimated value of $900,000 from China and the Soviet Union.

Cambodia—One Soviet helicopter valued at $180,000.

Guinea—Light arms, anti-tank guns, armoured cars and ammunition from Czechoslovakia valued at $1 million.

Laos—Ten Russian planes valued at $1,014,000.

Nepal—Two helicopters valued at $300,000.

Sudan—Five personnel carriers valued at $100,000.

The value of Soviet bloc arms shipped to Cuba was not given, but the testimony pointed out that the Cuban Premier, Dr. Fidel Castro, had said during the 1962 missile crisis that all equipment provided by the Soviet Union was given free apart from items which remained in the custody of Soviet troops on the Island.

ASIAN RECORDER

January 15—21, 1964

Vol. X No. 3

NEPAL

A. Dr. Tulsi Giri Resigns—Re-Allocation Of Portfolios: Dr. Tulsi Giri, Chairman of the Royal Council of Ministers, tendered his resignation on December 23, 1963 to King Mahendra on grounds of "ill health".

A Palace communique announced the same evening that the King had accepted his resignation.

Dr. Giri, who was also Minister of Foreign and Palace Affairs, was formerly a Minister in the deposed Koirala Cabinet. He became Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ministers in the new Cabinet formed by the King in December, 1960. He was made Chairman of the Council in April, 1962.

Dr. Giri's resignation introduced a dramatic element in the Nepalese political scene and interesting developments were forecast by observers.

Three weeks earlier, Dr. Giri underwent what the doctors called a minor operation. Thirty-seven-year-old Dr. Giri was said to be progressing satisfactorily.

However, according to observers, the resignation was likely to have deeper implications.

A radio announcement said the two portfolios—General Administration and Palace Affairs—held by Dr. Giri had been handed to the Vice-Chairman, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa, and Foreign Affairs to Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, Education Minister.

Mr. Bisht, who was educated in Banaras, comes from the royal priest family.

The radio did not say who would succeed Dr. Giri.

Though Dr. Giri was the Chairman of the Ministerial Council, according to the Constitution, the King heads the Government.

(The Statesman, Calcutta)

B. Foreign Policy Statement: The new Nepalese Foreign Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, said in an interview on December 24, 1963 that Nepal was eager to strengthen her relations with India. He, however, stressed that Nepal would continue to pursue the policy of non-alignment.

He said Nepal's relations with India had come to normal after a period of strain and misunderstanding and "we further want to strengthen the friendship between our two countries". He did not think any specific step was being contemplated to promote this friendship. "We have regular contacts and we shall settle matters by mutual consultation on the basis of equality."

Asked if there was any outstanding problem to be solved, he said there were minor ones such as Nepal administering her own telephone and telegraph services (at present the Indian Embassy telegraph office is Nepal's only link with the outside world) and the conclusion of an Air Agreement.

Although no basic change in Nepal's policy towards India is indicated in what Mr. Bisht said, political observers are inclined to believe that there is likely to be a shift in emphasis and this is apparent in Nepal's "eagerness" to improve her relations with India.

The resignation by the Chairman of the Ministerial Council, Dr. Tulsi Giri, was described by observers as by far the "biggest change that has taken place in the Nepalese political scene" after the royal take-over about three years ago. It perhaps denotes the "end of a chapter" as far as Indo-Nepalese relations are concerned.

C. Mr. R. Shaha Appointed Chairman Of Raj Sabha: King Mahendra named on December 9, 1963 Mr Rishikesh Shaha, former Foreign Minister, as permanent Chairman of the Raj Sabha (State Council).

This appointment was considered to be significant as Mr. Shaha had been agitating for the release of political prisoners. It was also interpreted as demonstrating royal keenness to broadbase the regime and accommodate differing points of view.

The State Council is a body analogous to the Privy Council.

Mr. Shaha was dropped from the Cabinet in 1962 when Indo-Nepalese relations were strained. When the State Council was constituted in April, 1963, the King nominated Dr. K. I. Singh, former Prime Minister, as its chairman. Dr. Singh did not accept the offer. The post had been lying vacant since then.

Mr. Shaha was nominated on the Standing Committee of the State Council in April. He did not accept the offer on grounds of his differences with Dr. Tulsi Giri, Chairman of the Council of Ministers. He accused the Government of creating an atmosphere of "fear and suspicion which prevented the people from exercising the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution. He also demanded the release of political prisoners including the deposed Premier, Mr. B. P. Koirala. He also declared that he would not accept any office of profit unless his demand was met.

He said on December 9 that by becoming Chairman of the Raj Sabha he had not joined the Government and was not holding an office of profit.

E. Development Loan: The Government announced its decision on December 13, 1963 to raise a development loan of Rs 50,00,000 through public subscription.

It was for the first time that the Government was approaching the public for funds.

The Government will issue five-year bonds to subscribers which will carry an interest of 6 per cent.

The Finance Minister, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa, said on December 12 that it was the Government's policy to achieve progress in various fields as far as possible without any foreign aid.

F. Mt. "Saipal Himal" Climbed: The hitherto unscaled 21,097-foot Mount Saipal Himal in western Nepal bordering Tibet has been climbed by a six-member Japanese expedition from Doshisha University of Kyoto.

Two members of the expedition, Mr. K. Hirabayashi and Sherpa Pasamputhal reached the top from the southern reach on October 21, 1963.

The expedition was led by Mr. K. Kojima.

An unsuccessful attempt on Saipal Himal was made in 1954 by an Austrian expedition which tried to reach the summit from the western reach.

SUMMARY: AFRASEC Meeting; Inter-line Agreement With Soviet Airlines; Guerrilla Warfare Training; Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy Dead.

A. Meeting Of Afro-Asian Organization For Economic Co-operation: President Ayub Khan inaugurated in Karachi on December 5, 1963 the fourth biennial session of the 41-nation Afro-Asian Organization for Economic Co-operation (AFRASEC).

In his inaugural address, he emphasized the need for new international trade patterns and economic relations and urged the developed countries to accept structural changes in their economies in the overall interest of the balanced economic development of the world.

At the same time, he called on the Afro-Asian developing nations to mobilize all the resources available to them for an all-out attack on the appalling poverty, ignorance and disease with which they were faced today.

Presidential Address:

Earlier, Mr. Shriyans Prasad Jain of India, in his presidential address, dealt with various aspects of the economic problems faced by the Afro-Asian region and appealed for a joint and concerted effort to solve them.

He said it was because of the present pattern of world trade and price fluctuations of raw materials as compared to the rising cost of capital goods that the ambitions of developing countries for quick economic growth were being frustrated.

The situation on the part of developed countries called for adopting liberal trade policies vis-a-vis developing nations. "An essential ingredient of the new policy should be application of preferential tariffs to the trade of developing countries."

At the same time he called for joint efforts on the part of developing countries to provide an efficient and economical transport and shipping system for trade between the member-countries of AFRASEC.

The President of the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry and leader of the Pakistan delegation to the Conference, Mr. Gul Mohammed, also stressed in his speech the overriding problem of deteriorating terms of trade between developed and developing countries.

He said that this very problem was the main theme of the Conference, and expressed the hope that it would be possible for the delegates to arrive at a common view-point to be able to go to the forthcoming UN-sponsored International Trade Conference at Geneva with strength and conviction.

While calling for the need for "triangular trade deals" and joint ventures, he also welcomed the effort on the part of certain African nations to form themselves into "limited market groupings" in accordance with the decision taken by AFRASEC at its New Delhi meeting two years ago. Pakistan would also be willing to consider similar proposals from countries in this region.

"Trade Talks Session":

Inaugurating the "trade talks session" of AFRASEC on December 5, the Pakistan Commerce Minister, Mr. Wahiduzzaman, emphasized the necessity of joint and concerted efforts by Afro-Asian countries to expand their exports and improve their terms of trade with the developed countries.

He urged the big gathering of economists, businessmen and industrialists to avail themselves of the "excellent" opportunity for drawing up a joint programme which could be made the basis of discussions with developed countries in international forums like the forthcoming International Trade Conference at Geneva.

He appreciated the desire of the developing countries to "make political independence a reality by the achievement of economic independence".

He, however, felt that in spite of the flow of foreign aid and grants, developing countries "can make up their lag in economic development" only by expanding exports.

Mr. Gul Mohammed Elected President:

Mr. Gul Mohammed, President of the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry, was on December 6, 1963 unanimously elected President of AFRASEC.

Mr. Dossolo Theodore of Mali and Mr. T. Satoi of Japan were elected Vice-Presidents. The term of office of Dr. Mohammad Ali Rifaat as Secretary-General was extended for another four years.

After the election and speeches by some of the delegates, the report of the steering committee was considered. The following sub-committees were set up: Committee on Productivity, Committee on Management, Membership Committee, Credentials Committee, Committee on Permanent Headquarters for the Organization, and Committee on Trade. The composition and powers of the various sub-committees were also approved.

Conference Ends:

The Conference concluded on December 9, 1963 with the adoption of a number of resolutions.

The resolution on "Trade as a Means of Balanced Economic Development in Developing and Developed Countries," which was the main theme of the Conference, was adopted with two major amendments.

In the first instance, a new paragraph was added urging the Governments of member-countries to include businessmen and industrialists in their delegations to the forthcoming UN-sponsored International Trade Conference at Geneva in March, 1964.

Through another amendment the strength of the committee to organize the AFRASEC delegation to the Geneva Conference was raised from six to seven with powers to co-opt additional members.

Several delegates felt that instead of a six-man committee, the AFRASEC delegation should include representatives from all member-countries. Others thought it would become too unwieldly.

There was heated discussions before a compromise was reached on increasing the strength to seven, with a proviso that the committee could co-opt more members. The newcomer was Mr. Satoi of Japan. The other six were Mr. Gul Mohammed (Pakistan), Mr. Bharat Ram (India), Mr. Dossolo Theodore (Mali), Mr. Konne Dfiguiba (Guinea), Mr. Hisbullah (Indonesia), and Mr. Mohammad Rushdy (UAR).

The third amendment impressed the need for a system of triangular and/or multiple trade agreements between the member-countries even if it involved preferential treatment in customs duties on products of member-countries.

Fourteen nations retained their seats on the 15-member Executive Council. Algeria became the new member in place of Libya. The Conference adopted a resolution to this effect on the recommendation of the Council meeting on December 3, 1963. The 14 countries are: Burma, China, Pakistan, UAR, India, Iran, Iraq, Indonesia, Guinea, Ethiopia, Japan, Sudan, Morocco and Mali.

The Conference also announced the admission as full members of Kenya, Nigeria, Niger, Cameroun, Senegal, Togo and Dahomey. Qatar was granted associate membership.

Uzbekistan's membership application was not entertained because of doubts from the constitutional point of view, but the Conference resolved to further study and examine the matter "with a view to seeing in what way this territory can be associated with the work of the AFRASEC."

The Secretary-General of the Organization told a news conference later he hoped that the "way" would be found within a year. The Council is likely to meet next in August, 1964 and by that time the hurdles would be crossed.

When the AFRASEC came into being 28 countries joined it as founder-members. The number has now risen to 45.

Due to developments during recent months, Pakistan withdrew its resolution on freight rate increase by UK and US Conference Lines. It was, however, agreed that the AFRASEC would study the problem before a revised resolution is tabled.

Pakistan and UAR's joint resolution on Afro-Asian Insurance Council was adopted by the Conference. It directed the Secretary-General to invite representatives by the Conference.

The proposal to launch a shipping corporation of member-countries was not proceeded as it was felt that shipping corporations have recently been set up both in Pakistan and UAR. In the light of the experience of the two countries, the question may be taken up at the next Conference, if necessary.

In respect of mutual aid in productivity and management development, the Conference recommended to the member-countries to establish at national level productivity and management centres. Where such centres existed, the Conference urged the countries "to adopt" the new centres to be established, affording them necessary assistance.

The Conference also recommended the establishment of a regional centre in Africa with the help of international agencies.

At the same time, the Secretary-General was directed to organize a study group to keep under constant review the activities connected with productivity and management development and to maintain liaison with national and regional centres.

The Secretary-General was also directed to draw up a programme for the observance of Productivity Years in member-countries.

B. Japan Declines Pakistani Request For Submarines: It was learnt from official quarters in Tokyo on December 7, 1963 that the Japanese Government had rejected a Pakistani request to order submarines from shipyards in Japan.

The Pakistan enquiry was received early in September, 1963, but Japan declined to comply because it feared that such a move would arouse misgivings in India with whom Tokyo maintains friendly relations.

The official reason given for the rejection, however, was that under the present constitutional limitations, Japan is not in a position to export any arms abroad. Japan's position was underscored by the fact that when Japan and Pakistan late in September signed an Agreement concerning utilization of the $30,000,000 credit given by the former for the latter's Second Five-Year Plan, an understanding was reached that no part of the credit could be used for the purchase of military materials.

International Airlines on the provision of mutual services.

Mr. Georgiy Shchetchikov, the head of the Soviet delegation, told a Moscow Radio correspondent that under the Agreement, Soviet aircraft would have the right to fly over Pakistan and Pakistani planes would have the right to fly over USSR.

D. General Maxwell Taylor's Visit: General Maxwell Taylor, Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff, arrived in Karachi from New Delhi on December 20, 1963 for talks with President Ayub Khan and other leaders.

In a talk with newsmen at the airport, General Taylor said that the main purpose of his visit to India and Pakistan was to acquaint himself with military problems of the two countries.

Within an hour of his arrival he met the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Aziz Ahmad. In the evening he had a talk with the Defence Secretary, Mr. Nasir Ahmad.

He called on President Ayub Khan the following morning (December 21). Later in the day, he met the Commanders-in-Chief of the Pakistan Army, Navy and Air Force at the Ministry of Defence for two hours. This was followed by a further meeting with President Ayub Khan for about 1½ hours.

According to an official Press release, during these meetings questions relating to the US arms aid to India and Pakistan-American relationship came under review.

Talking to newsmen at the airport, the General said his visit had been useful and instructive. His discussions with the Commanders-in-Chief of the Army, Air Force and Navy had been frank. No commitments were given or asked for.

He added that he had explained to his "old friend" President Ayub Khan the nature of what was being described as Indian Ocean Task Force proposals which, he said, were still under consideration. It might consist of a carrier and two or three destroyers for gaining operational experience in these waters and might call at ports with the previous consent of the countries concerned, but added that it was yet a tentative plan which had so far not been approved.

Asked whether he agreed with Pakistan's assessment of defence problems in the region, he said he did not think there was any particular variation.

He parried a question as to what proportion of his talks related to military imbalance of power in the region and the continued stalemate on the Kashmir issue by saying that he did not keep any account of percentage.

E. Sale Of American Jet Planes And Spares Allowed: The US State Department said on December 18, 1963 that the US Administration had decided to permit the sale of American jet planes and spare parts to Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) which might be used in travel to Communist China.

The State Department Press Officer, Mr. Richard Phillips, said that spare parts for PIA would be stockpiled in Communist China under strict control and supervision by PIA.

He added: "This decision does not change the US policy of denying US exports to Communist China."

G. Sardar Bahadur Khan Resigns As Opposition Chief: Sardar Bahadur Khan, a younger brother of President Ayub Khan, has resigned as Leader of the combined Opposition in the National Assembly following differences of opinion on the Fundamental Rights Bill.

The announcement of the resignation came when the Speaker of the National Assembly addressed Sardar Bahadur Khan on December 20, 1963 as "Leader of the Opposition" during the debate on the Bill.

Sardar Bahadur Khan, who shot into prominence during the last session of the Assembly when he attacked the Ayub Government, told a bewildered House that he was no longer the leader. He was now "only a back bencher."

The Council of the Muslim League, of which he is a member, decided to support the controversial Bill. But the other members of the Opposition, who outnumber the Muslim League, are still opposed to the Bill.

H. Jute Ordinance Approved By National Assembly: The National Assembly approved on December 13, 1963 the Jute Ordinance which empowers the Central Government to fix the maximum baling or storing charges and direct dealers or manufacturers to sell or purchase jute or jute manufactures at specified prices.

The Opposition forced a division when the Chair put the resolution approving the Ordinance to the House. Voting was 68 to 34.

Winding up the nine-hour debate spread over three days, the Commerce Minister, Mr. Wahiduzzaman dispelled fears of the Opposition and assured them that the Ordinance was designed to ensure a better deal for the jute growers.

J. Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy Dead: Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy, a former Prime Minister of Pakistan, died of a heart attack in Beirut (Lebanon) on December 5, 1963. He was 70.

Mr. Suhrawardy had been in the Lebanon for treatment and rest. Prior to arriving in Beirut, he was in Germany for a medical check-up.

In 1945 Mr. Suhrawardy replaced Sir Khwaja Nazimuddin as Prime Minister of undivided Bengal. His regime was marred by the "Great Calcutta Killing" in August, 1946, in which an estimated 10,000 people were murdered in two weeks. The carnage started with a "Direct Action Day" observed by the Muslim League to press its demand for Pakistan. He had declared the day as a public holiday. The exact extent of his personal responsibility in the matter has remained a subject of debate ever since. The Calcutta carnage was closely followed by the massacre in Noakhali. When Mahatma Gandhi came to Calcutta on his way to that district, Mr. Suhrawardy saw him several times, directed his daughter to accompany the Mahatma on his tour, and declared himself converted to the ways of non-violence. Later, immediately before independence, when Mahatma Gandhi came again to Calcutta and lived in a house in Belliaghata, he lived there, too, for some time.

After Partition Mr. Suhrawardy opted for Pakistan where, two years later, he left the Muslim League and formed the Awami League. In March, 1954, a United Front, consisting of the Awami League, Mr. Huq's party and three others, routed the Muslim League in the elections and formed a Government in East Pakistan with Mr. Huq as Chief Minister. Mr. Suhrawardy was then in Europe convalescing after a serious illness. The Front Ministry was dismissed in June, 1954 for its "failure to maintain law and order" following riots in some jute mills.

Pakistan. He was largely responsible for the unification of West Pakistan.

In August, 1955, following one of the periodic permutations in Pakistan, a League-Front Cabinet was installed at the Centre. The Awami League was no longer a constituent of the Front. Mr. Suhrawardy became Leader of the Opposition.

In September, 1955, following the resignation of Chaudhuri Mohammed Ali, he was asked to form a Cabinet, which he did in coalition with the Republican Party.

One of his first acts on becoming Prime Minister was to appeal to India for a food loan to East Pakistan. Within 24 hours 2,000 tons of cereals were sent from India, with a promise of more. In November, 1956 he accompanied President Iskander Mirza to Baghdad for talks with Iraqi, Turkish and Irani leaders to co-ordinate the views of the Baghdad Pact members on the Middle East situation and the Suez crisis. He also went to Beirut for talks with Lebanese leaders. His Ministry resigned in October, 1957.

With the advent of President Ayub Khan and the Elective Bodies Disqualification Order (EBDO), political parties were banned and many individuals forbidden to take part in politics. Mr. Suhrawardy was also forbidden, and in January, 1962 was suddenly arrested under the Security of Pakistan Act on charges of anti-Pakistani activities. His activities were said to be "fraught with such danger to the security and safety of Pakistan that one could fairly describe them as treasonable". Seven months later he was released.

In October, 1962, following the relaxation of the ban on political parties, he formed the National Democratic Front and appealed to President Ayub Khan to assess the political situation in the country himself as his counsellors had embarked on a "policy of repression". He said he would test in a court of law whether the formation of the Front could be banned under EBDO.

K. Buddhist Chapel Unearthed Near Peshawar: It was reported on December 3, 1963 that a complete Buddhist chapel dating from the reign of Kanishka had been dug up by archaeology students of Peshawar University, who were seeking Pushkalavati, the capital of ancient Gandhara.

Valuable pieces of Greek and Kushan pottery and about 300 coins were also found in excavations of the mound of Sheikhano Dheri, near Rajar, about 30 miles from Peshawar.

The excavations stopped on December 7, 1963, until 1964. They were conducted under the supervision of Dr. Ahmed Dani, Head of the Department of Archaeology at the University, and Dr. and Mrs. F. R. Allchin, a leading British archaeological couple.

Dr. Ahmad Hassan Dani told a visiting Press party that excavations had established beyond doubt that the city was founded by the Bactrian Greeks about 150 BC on a regular grid pattern with fine houses of stone masonry.

The coins of Kings Menander, Alpolodotus, Pantaleon, Antielocidas and Helickpes were found at the lowest level. Some fine pieces of Bactrian Greek pottery were also found at these levels.

The discovery was considered important archaeologically because pottery of this type had never before been found in any part of Pakistan. Some pieces were clearly parts of a typical Greek wine vase, the kratier.

The excavations were made up to 39 feet, only three feet above the water level and the Greek layer was found at the lowest point. Above this was the Scythian period and on top the Kushan, which was the most glorious period of Gandhara civilization.

The city was abandoned abruptly, probably due to a change in the course of the river, 200 years before the Huns destroyed the Gandhara civilization.

From the Scythian period coins of Azez I were found and the Scythian pottery is different both in colour and style as compared with black or grey of the Bactrians.

The most exciting discovery was that of a complete Buddhist chapel with an elaborate drainage system, a tank and a ritual bathing room. The chapel had a rectangular apse at the south end which was covered by a canopy supported on heavy wooden pillars at each of the four corners.

In the centre was probably a small stupa of which a miniature replica was found in a courtyard. It was on this replica that the name of Bhikku Nardakh was inscribed and probably in whose honour the chapel was constructed during the reign of Kanishka. Around the courtyard were plastered platforms with pedestals for images. They were all found fallen in the court.

The images probably fell in a major conflagration. In all, three fires took place in the building. In another adjoining room were discovered several great storage jars standing on a platform. Almost intact nearby were a number of smaller vessels, some stamped with royal Kushan monograms.

PHILIPPINES

A. ECAFE Conference On Asian Economic Co-operation: A special Ministerial Conference on Asian Economic Co-operation, convened by ECAFE, was held in Manila from December 3 to 6, 1963.

Western nations which are members of ECAFE were not invited to participate in the Conference, which was the first of its kind.

In his opening address, the ECAFE Executive Secretary, U Nyun, said that the Conference had been called by ECAFE countries because they were impressed by the greater progress in co-operation achieved in Western Europe, Africa and Latin America and because "they see how slowly economic progress is moving in Asia".

The programme began with an address on unity by Philippines' President, Mr. Diosdado Macapagal, which was read by an aide in Mr. Macapagal's absence. Mr. Macapagal was then in New York. His message called for joint positive action among ECAFE member-countries to solve their common economic problems.

Immediately after the opening ceremony delegates from India, Afghanistan, Australia, Brunei, Burma, Ceylon, Formosa, Japan, South Korea, Pakistan, South Viet-Nam, Thailand, Hong Kong, Iran, Laos, Mongolia, Nepal, New Zealand, Indonesia, Western Samoa and the Philippines elected the Philippine chief delegate Chairman of the Conference and the delegates from Iran, Ceylon and Afghanistan Vice-Chairmen. The delegates then went into a closed session.

Conference sources said all those who spoke were generally agreed that the Conference "marked a new course of planning for the economic future of the region." The delegates noted that "with Europe and Latin America going ahead with regional co-operation, Asian countries must move with the times."

India's Minister for International Trade, Mr. Manubhai Shah, called for the "abolition in the shortest time" of poverty in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

He stressed the urgency of bringing to a quick solution "the poverty and hunger of the teeming millions of those three under-developed continents."

He appealed to the world's developed and industrialized countries to give "freer access" to the products of the developing countries and warned that unless they did so, "the future of world trade is not very bright."

Decisions:

The delegates agreed on an action programme for trade liberalization and the creation of an Asian Development Bank. They favoured closer economic co-operation among the countries of the region and participation in the World Trade Conference in Geneva in March.

The main resolution on economic co-operation passed at the Conference declared that "member-countries of the ECAFE region shall endeavour jointly and individually to achieve increasing measure of economic co-operation."

It stated that regional co-operation "shall be based on mutual respect for national sovereignty, reciprocity in advantage and mutual assistance, with due recognition of the different stages of development of the countries of the ECAFE region and of the importance of co-operation with countries outside the region."

Among the measures proposed by the Conference was the establishment of free trade areas or customs unions on a sub-regional basis by interested countries.

This suggestion was listed as one of several possibilities for promotion of trade within the region.

There was no reference to an Asian Common Market. Delegates were agreed that such a step was out of the question at present.

The resolution also urged that where possible member-Governments make their purchases of goods in the ECAFE region.

The resolution was hailed by U Nyun as "a charter for economic co-operation among Asian countries."

The second resolution dealt with participation in the Trade Conference in Geneva which was described by ECAFE members as one of the most important ever to be held.

All delegations agreed that developing countries in Asia and the rest of the world must "speak with one voice" at the Conference in order that they might garner a greater share of the world's trade.

Pakistan's Ambassador, Mr. A. M. Malik, noted that political differences had often stymied efforts at economic co-operation in Asia and urged the delegates to seek solutions to their countries' political problems in order to further economic co-operation.

The seriousness of the area's political problems was illustrated by the failure of Malaysia to attend the Conference.

Asian Development Bank:

The Development Bank for Asia, mooted at the various ECAFE forums during the last two years, will be modelled on the lines of the International Development Association (IDA), the World Bank subsidiary which provides long-term soft loans at low interest.

Disclosing this, U Nyun, Executive Secretary of ECAFE, said in New Delhi on December 21, 1963 that 1964 and 1965 would be years of great activity as far as ECAFE's plans for fostering economic co-operation in the region were concerned.

The Development Bank scheme had to be worked out carefully and in some detail. The ECAFE Secretariat would work on it during the next eight or nine months and it was proposed to call a meeting of governors or directors of central banks of the member-countries towards the end of 1964 to give shape to the scheme. Representatives of the World Bank would attend.

Balance of payment being a general problem in Asia, the important thing was to foster an arrangement under which loans would carry a nominal rate of interest and can be repaid in local currency —in goods or services generated by the aided projects. Secondly, not all the projects would pass the strict economic tests of the World Bank—here again, what was required was the approach of the IDA, which did not insist on economic viability as a condition for aid.

U Nyun explained that the World Bank itself and some of the leading Western nations, particularly the USA, the UK, France, West Germany, and of course, Japan, would probably help by providing development finance through the proposed Bank.

It was increasingly recognized, even in the West, he said, that trade was the other side of the aid medal. The focus for discussions on this subject was the World Trade Conference in March.

Like other developing regions—Latin America and Africa—Asia had a point of view to put forward at Geneva. This was to plead for loosening up of the channels of world trade and generally to supplement financial assistance through expanded commercial exchanges. The formula that ECAFE had in view was that trade preferences by the Western nations should be in the inverse ratio to the national income, thereby recognizing the principle that economically backward nations deserved a preferential treatment in this respect.

Among themselves too, the ECAFE nations could do a great deal to help each other. The avenues of intra-regional trade had to be diligently explored—there was no reason why, for example, Japan should expend large sums on research on synthetic rubber when so much natural rubber was available in Asia, or that Cambodia or Laos should set up large textile mills when Hong Kong was groaning under the weight of undisposed cloth.

Joint collaboration was another avenue of co-operation. The developing nations in the ECAFE region could help the newcomers not only with technical 'know-how' and trained personnel but also by providing equipment or investment. Sub-regional groupings like those signified by Maphilindo (Malaya, the Philippines and Indonesia) or a possible combination of India, Burma, Ceylon and Nepal—with their similarity of political and economic outlook—could play an important part in providing impetus to the developmental process.

B. Supreme Court Ruling On Rice Import: The Supreme Court ruled on October 23, 1963 that the Government's importation of 67,000 tons of rice from Burma and South Viet-Nam was illegal.

The Court gave the ruling while disposing of a petition by a local rice producer to restrain the Government from importing rice. The producer argued that the laws of the land prohibited the importation of rice unless the National Economic Council certified a rice shortage.

In its decision the Supreme Court said the importation could be legalized only if the National Economic Council certified a rice shortage.

It required the Government to buy rice and corn directly from local planters, leaving any importation that might be required to private parties.

The rice issue had been a major topic of discussion since the administration announced the necessity of importing rice six months earlier in view of the "critical situation" in South-East Asia.

President D. Macapagal, commenting on the Court's ruling, said his Administration would continue to provide the masses with sufficient rice at low prices during the lean months of July to September, 1964.

He said his administration would endeavour "to meet the problem within the context of the Supreme Court ruling."

Opposition Nacionalista Party leaders demanded on October 23 that Congress should impeach the President for violating the Constitution.

Rice Agreements:

Earlier, on October 17, 1963, President Macapagal announced that the Philippines had entered into Agreements with Thailand, Burma and South Viet-Nam for continuous and indefinite rice importation to stave off the threat of hunger.

In a radio and television address, he defended the importation of 250,000 tons of rice.

He said: "If our people during those past three months of July to September encountered difficulties in having their rice, even with the importation, their difficulties and hardships would have critically increased if rice had not been imported.

"Many of our people would have gone hungry because they would not have been able to afford the high increases in prices that would have occurred.

"But because the administration imported rice, the people were saved from hunger."

He added: "Conscious of my responsibility to our people, I shall not allow our people to go hungry. If there are two reasonable sides to the law, I for one will take that side which will save our people from hunger.

"Until such time as when we shall have reached our goals for productivity and production, the Philippine Government has entered into Agreements with the Governments of Thailand, Burma and South Viet-Nam with a view to the continuous and indefinite importation of rice to keep our people from hunger during the lean months of July to September."

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Allocations For Industrial Development: In the current Budget, the sum allocated by the Public Works Department for projects amounted to 550,000,000 riyals (£44,000,000)—the same as 1962, and an increase of 150,000,000 riyals over 1961-62 when the allocation was 400,000,000 riyals.

According to the annual report of the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency released in September, 1963, actual spending did not exceed two-thirds of the allocation, a particular sum of 107,000,000 riyals for studies and surveys of development projects being left largely unused owing to lack of unanimity among Ministries and Government agencies on priorities for long-term projects. Presumably the unused allocations will be available as the development projects get under way.

Despite lack of an overall development plan on a long-term basis, some programmes have been agreed upon.

Communications: A large net-work of asphalted roads is to be built within the next 3 years, the target being 10,000 kilometres of first-class roads, of which over 2,000 are already constructed. Automatic telephone systems at a cost of 130.5 million riyals are being installed in all big cities and towns and street lighting systems are also planned. Jiddah port is being improved and grain silos are to be built close to the port.

Industries: An oil refinery is to be built at Jiddah, the Government contributing 75 per cent of the capital and the public the remainder. A paper mill and factory for paper by-products are proposed. Plans for a steel mill, financed jointly by the Government and private capital, are complete and the plant is due to start production within 3 years, the ore coming from the Kassass mines and natural gas being used as fuel. A petrochemical plant is to be built in the eastern district, half the cost coming from private capital and half from the Petroleum and Mineral Resources Organization. The project to bring natural gas from Uthmaniah by pipeline to Riyadh for generating electricity will cost 40 million riyals, but will reduce electricity costs by 50 per cent, thus encouraging industries in the neighbourhood.

SYRIA

A. Army Officers Sentenced: A National Security court passed long prison terms on nine runaway Army officers and a former Rightist Premier on December 14, 1963 after finding them guilty of planning Syria's breakaway from its merger with Egypt.

The military tribunal at the same time ordered the immediate release of retired Brigadier Mouwaffak Assasa, former Commander of Syria's Air Force and retired Col. Haidar Kuzbari, former Commander of Syria's desert force.

The court also released retired Paratroop Colonel Bassam Assali, who surrendered himself to face trial the previous week.

Ex-Premier Kuzbari was sentenced to five years' imprisonment and stripped of civil rights for ten years. His whereabouts were unknown. He was banned from living in either Damascus or Aleppo for five years after serving his prison term.

Five former Army officers, including Col. Abdul Kerim Nahlawi and Brig. Abdel Dahman, former commander of the Damascus garrison, were sentenced in absentia to life imprisonment with hard labour. They were also stripped of civil rights for life.

Four other absentee officers received 10-year prison terms and were stripped of civil rights for life.

THAILAND

A. F-M Sarit Thanarat Dead: The Prime Minister, Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat, died in Bangkok on December 8, 1963. He was 55.

The Government ordered seven days of national mourning. The armed forces were put on a state of alert "to forestall the danger of subversion."

The political career of Field-Marshal Sarit, who received the baton on January 1, 1956, developed when opposition was growing to Field-Marshal Phibun, who had dominated the political scene for a great part of the time since the establishment of constitutional government in 1932. He was one of a younger group of leaders in the armed services who had not participated in the overthrow of the absolute monarchy. He and Police-General Phao Siyanon emerged as rivals during the last years of Phibun's premiership. From 1955 a liberalization of political method was attempted. The formation of legal political parties was allowed. Field-Marshal Sarit became Vice-Chairman of the Government party, the Seri Manngkhsila, of which General Phao was Secretary.

In the key elections of February, 1957, considerable opposition to the Government was revealed by the large total of votes polled by other parties. Field-Marshal Sarit was not involved in the charges made against the Government that it had ensured a majority by illegal electoral practices, and he became something of a national hero as a result of his firm yet tactful handling of the student riots which broke out following the election. He became Minister of Defence in the last Phibun Government but resigned in August, 1957. On September 17 he led the coup d'etat which resulted in the exile of Field-Marshal Phibun and General Phao. He became Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces but was abroad seeking medical treatment in the United States and the United Kingdom for much of 1958. On October 19 he flew into Bangkok from London and assumed immediate personal control of the Government. The Constitution was suspended, the National Assembly dissolved and a Constituent Assembly created with the double function of approving legislation and preparing a new Constitution.

Field-Marshal Sarit was an avowed admirer of the methods of direct rule of such leaders as President de Gaulle. His home policy was firmly directed against Communist subversion. His regime was important for the attempts that were made to improve economic conditions especially in the less well endowed north-eastern provinces. In foreign affairs he fostered his country's special relationship with the United States. He supported the South-East Asia Treaty Organization though he believed in a bolder policy towards Laos than was favoured by some of its members.

He enjoyed better relations with the royal family than his predecessors and was invested with the Royal Order of Merit in 1959. He had been Prime Minister since 1959.

New Premier Named:

The following day (December 9), one of the Vice-Premiers, Gen. Thanom Kittikachorn, was appointed by the King as the new Prime Minister.

He had previously been acting Prime Minister during Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat's absence abroad for medical treatment.

TURKEY

A. Forbidden Areas Opened To Foreign Travellers: Nine Provinces of Eastern Turkey, hitherto forbidden to foreign travellers, were declared open on November 30, 1963.

The areas include the historic fortresses of Kars and Erzurum, near the Russian frontier, and the region surrounding the 17,000-foot high Mount Ararat, the traditional resting place of Noah's Ark after the Flood.

The nine Provinces from which the ban has been lifted are Coruh (Artvin), Kars, Agri, Mush, Erzurum, Bingol, Tunceli, Elazig, and Adiyaman. Another seven Provinces in south-eastern Turkey, which adjoin the Iran and Iraq frontiers and which are mainly inhabited by people of Kurdish origin, including the ancient cities of Van and Diyarbakir, may still be visited only on essential business with permission from the Turkish authorities, although it is possible that this area will also be freed scon.

The lifting of the travel prohibition from these areas will be of great importance for Turkish tourism, because previously all lands east of the River Euphrates, nearly a quarter of Turkey, were barred to all foreigners without official permits. The freeing of the zone in the east is of particular interest as showing a softening in the hostile relations existing in recent years between Turkey and Russia.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Action Against Officials Of Diem Regime: It was officially announced in Saigon on December 9, 1963 that 13 senior officials of the ousted Diem regime had been dismissed.

The announcement said that the officials, including the Chief of the Secret Police, would be put on trial for alleged misuse of power and corruption.

The dismissed secret police chief is Mr. Duong Van Hieu. He was one of the chief planners of the anti-Buddhist campaign in August, 1963.

Six Ambassadors, including those in London and Paris, and the Consul-General in Hong Kong, were removed from their posts. Mr. Ngo Dinh Luyen, who has been Ambassador to Britain, was a brother of the late President Diem.

Major-General Duong Van Minh, head of the Military Revolutionary Council, told a news conference that in the five weeks since the anti-Diem coup d'etat the new Government had achieved "rather encouraging results". The military situation against the Communists was "well under control".

Another leading member of the Junta, Major-General Le Van Kim, said the Government would not allow either neutralists or communists to return from exile to take part in politics.

At a later news conference it was stated that the exact figure of those arrested since the coup was 137.

SUMMARY: Cut In Soviet Defence Budget; US Stand In Event Of Indo-Pakistan War; US Wheat Sale To Russia; British Aid To Developing Countries; World Sugar Output.

A. Cut In Soviet Defence Budget: In his Budget speech in the USSR Supreme Soviet on December 16, 1963, the Minister of Finance, Mr. Vasily Garbuzov, said that the Soviet Government had found it possible to reduce military appropriations by 600,000,000 roubles.

The Budget for 1964 and 1965 provides for a rapid growth of all the leading branches of industry, with priority given to the chemical industry.

Large sums are being appropriated for the development of agriculture, and specifically an increase in the production of mineral fertilizers.

In the next two years, record appropriations will be made for housing construction, science and education, for social and cultural services, and for consumer production.

Wages are to be increased for certain professions.

Mr. Garbuzov announced the Budget in the following amounts—for 1964 91.8 billion roubles revenues and 91.3 billion roubles expenditures; for 1965 101.2 billion roubles revenues and 100.4 billion roubles expenditures. The revenues will exceed expenditure by 0.5 billion roubles in 1964 and 0.6 billion roubles in 1965.

According to preliminary figures, the Budget for 1963 will be executed in the amount of 88.6 billion roubles revenues and 86.8 billion roubles expenditures, with a credit balance of 1.8 billion roubles.

Mr. Garbuzov said that the Soviet Government had found it possible to cut the appropriations for the USSR armed forces by 600 million roubles in 1964. These appropriations will amount to 13.3 billion roubles, or 14.6 per cent of the total as against 16.1 per cent in 1963. "These appropriations will enable the Soviet Union to maintain its defences at a level that would ensure the security of the country and the entire socialist camp."

The total sum of allocations for the national economy will amount in 1964 to 68.5 billion roubles and in 1965 to 74.4 billion roubles; 2.092 million roubles (44 per cent more than in 1963) will be allocated for the needs of the chemical industry in 1964, and in 1965 2.757 million roubles (32 per cent more than in 1964).

It was planned to increase expenditures on the development of the power industry by 30 per cent, the oil and gas industries by 38 per cent.

The new Budget will ensure the necessary financial backing for the considerable increase in the output of agricultural produce envisaged by the Plan for 1964-65; 11.9 billion roubles (22.7 per cent more than in 1963), will be allocated in 1964 for this, and 12.8 billion roubles in 1965.

The Budget also envisaged allocations for rendering economic aid to foreign States under inter-Governmental agreements. "The Soviet Government," Mr. Garbuzov declared, "is rendering disinterested economic aid to States that have become free of colonial dependence. This aid facilitates the development of the decisive branches of economy of the young States, and their industrialization."

He said that the Budget for 1964 envisaged allocations for social and cultural undertakings to the sum of 32.7 billion roubles and in 1965 34.5 billion roubles. Simultaneously with the new Budget, submitted for approval by the USSR Supreme Soviet, was the report on the fulfilment of the Budget for 1962, equal in revenues to 84.3 billion roubles and in expenditures to 82.2 billion roubles, with the revenues exceeding expenditures by 2.1 billion roubles.

Economic Development Plan For 1964-65:

Mr. Pyotr Lomako, Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ministers of USSR and Chairman of the State Planning Committee, reported to the Supreme Soviet on December 16, 1963 on the draft of the State Economic Development Plan for 1964-65.

He stressed that the draft provided for measures toward fulfilling the decisions of the December plenary meeting of the CPSU Central Committee on the chemicalization of national economy.

Industrial production will go up by 17.5 per cent in the next two years. The seven-year economic plan for the development of industry will be fulfilled ahead of time.

The rates of growth of the production of means of production and consumer goods will become more even. In two years, the capital goods production will increase by 18.6 per cent, and consumer goods production by 14.5 per cent.

The total grain crop is planned at 10.2 billion poods in 1964, and 10.6 billion in 1965.

The national income is to increase by 16 per cent.

"As a whole, industrial production in USSR in 1953 was only a third of the American production", Mr. Lomako said. "By the start of the Seven-Year Plan it was approximately 50 per cent, and this year it will be about 65 per cent of the present US total. In 1965 we shall produce approximately as much as the United States did in 1958, or three-quarters as much as it produces today".

During the seven years, industrial production in the Soviet Union will have increased by at least 86 per cent (as against the 80 per cent target under the Seven-Year Plan). There will be essential progressive shifts in the structure of industrial production. Chemical production will increase by 36 per cent, gas by 40 per cent, and electricity by 32 per cent.

Two-fifths of all capital investments in chemistry will be used to increase the output of mineral fertilizers, insecticides and herbicides.

In 1965, oil production will reach 240 million tons (as against 205 million in 1963), while gas production will go up 40 per cent compared with 1963. The share of oil and gas in Soviet fuel consumption will increase from 48 per cent in 1963 to 53 per cent in 1965.

In the last year of the Seven-Year Plan, the Soviet Union will generate 508 billion kw hours of electricity. Production of pig-iron will total 65.7 million tons, steel 89.3 million tons, and rolled stock 69 million tons.

The output of the machine building and metal-working industries will increase by 21 per cent in these two years, and 2.4 times over the entire seven-year period.

The light and food industries will receive 50 per cent more capital investment than in the preceding two years.

It was expected that the average per hectare yield of cereals will rise from 10.9 centners in 1962 to 12.5 centners in 1965.

The planned grain procurement levels of 4.1 billion poods in 1964 and 4.2 billion poods in 1965 will satisfy the State's requirements in bread.

Among the various branches of the rapidly developing engineering industry the greatest attention will be paid to the output of chemical and oil equipment and farm machinery. In the two years industry will build more than 700,000 tractors, including more than 540,000 for agriculture.

It was planned to switch 4,300 km of railways over to electric traction, and to lay 2,550 km of new lines.

The growth of the merchant marine will make it possible to increase the share of Soviet ships in the total volume of export-import deliveries from 37 per cent in 1965.

The State Plan for 1964-65 includes more than 5,800 construction projects.

It is planned to increase labour productivity in industry by 4.6 per cent in 1964, and by 6.8 per cent in 1965. This will ensure more than 70 per cent of the entire planned increment of industrial production.

The Plan envisages allocations to increase minimum wages to 40-45 roubles a month for low-income bracket workers. The wages fund will grow by more than 12 per cent in these two years, and the number of industrial and office workers by nearly 5.5 million. The total number of industrial and office workers in 1965 will equal 76.1 million; 15 million more people will move into new flats in these two years; 7.4 million people will study in establishments of higher education and in secondary specialized schools. In these two years the country will receive 760,000 specialists with higher education and 1.2 million with secondary specialized education.

Mr. N. Khruschev's Statement:

On December 14, 1963 the Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. Nikita Khruschev, announced plans to cut Soviet military spending in 1964 and said his Government was also considering cutting the numerical strength of the armed forces.

In a speech at the closing session of the Communist Party Central Committee in Moscow, he said that the Soviet Union had everything necessary "and even more than necessary" to curb any aggressor.

He said that "these peace-loving steps of ours" were a new contribution towards easing international tension "an impetus to which was given by the conclusion of a Treaty on the partial banning of nuclear tests."

He said that the policy of peaceful co-existence between States with different social systems was "the only reasonable course in our day." The Soviet Union proposed to compete not in war preparations, but in peaceful spheres, he said.

He said the proposals to reduce the 1964 military budget would be submitted to the Supreme Soviet.

[Mr. Khruschev in January, 1960 gave the strength of the Soviet armed forces as 2,423,000, compared with 11,365,000 in 1945 and 5,763,000 in 1955. But in July, 1961 he halted demobilization and increased military spending by nearly one-third, because of the Berlin crisis].

He said that "aggressive militaristic quarters in the United States are again beginning to fan tension over Cuba." "I would say straight messers aggressors, do not rattle your sabres, do not play with fire. One should clearly realise that if tension is fanned and a threat to Cuba created, this cannot but affect the entire international situation."

He said Russia wanted to believe that understanding of peaceful competition "will prevail among the Western statesmen also and that they will obey the call of the times and will meet the demands of the peoples—to get down to disarmament."

The Soviet Union, for its part, would not relax its efforts in the struggle to achieve this goal.

He praised Mr. Dean Rusk, US Secretary of State, for a statement on December 10 "to the effect that at present the United States could not feel itself secure separately from the rest of our planet."

He commented: "Well said! We can only wish more such views and, what is most important, that such statements would be backed by corresponding actions.

"We should like to believe that the sound forces in the United States...will display the necessary will and find means to curb the aggressive militarist quarters —'the wild men'—in order to prevent the dangerous development of events into which both the United States and the other nations would inevitably be drawn.

"Encroachment upon the freedom and independence of Cuba would be a gross violation of the United Nations Charter, interference in the home affairs of revolutionary Cuba and aggression against a sovereign State. Such an aggression would affect all countries, including the Soviet Union.

"What is more, the Soviet Union has definite commitments with regard to the fraternal republic of Cuba. We have repeatedly stated and state again that revolutionary Cuba will not remain defenceless if she is attacked by the aggressive militarist quarters of the United States."

The Soviet Union welcomed "the desire of the Government of revolutionary Cuba to normalise its relations with the United States."

Calling the conclusion of the Treaty on the partial banning of nuclear weapon tests, and also the agreement not to orbit vehicles with nuclear arms on board around the Earth, "only the beginning," he said that "the main thing is to embark upon the road of actual or, as it is termed, physical disarmament and to follow this road to the end".

The Soviet Union "is ready to do this today, just as yesterday, and if anybody in the West has doubts on this score, let him check the sincerity of our intentions. We are ready to conclude immediately an agreement on disarmament and to carry it out".

He expressed surprise that even now, when the Western Powers held that the NATO countries had more soldiers and conventional arms than the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Treaty nations, they did not agree to the reduction of armed forces and armaments.

He added: "We condemn the aggression, which is conducted by the American imperialists in South Viet-Nam. Our sympathies are with the courageous patriots of South Viet-Nam, who are fighting for the freedom of their country. We believe that the people of South Viet-Nam, fighting for their righteous cause, will triumph."

B. US Stand In Event Of Indo-Pakistan War: In a radio interview in Washington on September 17, 1963, Mr. Phillips Talbot, US Assistant Secretary of State for South Asian Affairs, said that there would be "an American response" in the highly unlikely event of either India or Pakistan attacking each other.

He said: "I think that the leaders of Pakistan understand our concern for the security of Pakistan, just as the leaders of India understand our concern for the security of India, and both, I believe, recognize that in what we regard as the highly unlikely event that either country should attack the other, there would be an American response."

A newsman had told him that Pakistan had complained that she had no specific assurance from USA that she would defend her if India attacked her. Mr. Talbot was also asked why USA could not give Pakistan such a specific assurance and "thus disarm her of this one point in a continuing dispute."

Mr. Talbot said that he did not think there was any question about the assurances USA had already given to Pakistan and India.

He disagreed with a questioner who suggested that relations between USA and Pakistan had "gone sour". He said that there had been problems arising to a large extent from the Chinese attack against Indian positions in 1962 and Pakistan's concern afterwards that the build-up of India's military forces would strengthen "a near and large neighbour with whom Pakistan's relations have not been very good". "We have been talking with the Pakistanis about the defence and security of the entire subcontinent as well as just Pakistan."

He added that Mr. George Ball, US Under-Secretary of State, had recently visited Pakistan for discussions with President Ayub Khan and other leaders. The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, would visit Washington soon "so that we can continue these talks".

Of Mr. Ball's conversations, Mr. Talbot said that in these talks it was discovered and re-affirmed that "there is a wide area of agreement on objectives between Pakistan and USA especially in our common desire to maintain the US-Pakistan alliance against Communist aggression and subversion".

On the Kashmir problem, he said India and Pakistan could "find ways to deal effectively with the causes of their differences, of which Kashmir, of course, is an important part".

Answering questions about the request, which India had withdrawn, for US assistance in building the projected Bokaro steel mill, he avoided saying that it might be reconsidered in 1964. But he did say that as far as the Indian development programme was concerned there was "a continuing examination and re-examination of what is the highest priority for external assistance".

C. US Wheat Sale To Russia—Mr. J. F. Kennedy's Announcement: The late United States President, Mr. John F. Kennedy, on October 9, 1963 approved the sale of $250 million worth of US surplus wheat to the Soviet Union.

He announced his decision to a bipartisan group of Congressional leaders summoned to the White House.

He later announced at a news conference that the sale to the Soviet Union or various European Communist countries would be made at regular world price and would represent several million tons of wheat, wheat flour or feed grain. The sale would be paid for in American dollars, in cash or gold or cash on delivery on normal commercial terms.

He indicated that the wheat transaction with the Soviet bloc would amount to 40,00,000 metric tons representing some $250,000,000 and said this deal would benefit the US balance of payments and gold reserves.

He told the news conference that there would probably be some political repercussions to this transaction inasmuch as some will disagree and they invariably do, but that it was very much in the interest of the United States.

D. British Aid To Developing Countries—White Paper: Details of British assistance to India and other developing countries were outlined in a White Paper—"Aid To Developing Countries"—published in London on September 17, 1963.

The British Government's aid to India and Pakistan, according to the White Paper, is allocated in consultation with other interested donor countries organized in consortia under the aegis of the World Bank. At the meetings of these consortia, the donor countries examine the Indian and Pakistani development programmes and pledge the capital aid that they are prepared to make available. The negotiations for the allocation of these pledges to individual projects or purposes are conducted bilaterally between the donors and the Governments of the recipient countries.

British pledges in respect of loans to India since the beginning of her Third Five-Year Plan (1961-65) amount to £125,000,000. This is in addition to defence aid.

Defence aid "is a fairly new development, and it is one that now represents a significant burden; but we believe it to be justified, for we think it right to support our friends in times of need".

The £125,000,000 pledged to India since the beginning of the Third Plan includes a contribution of £30,000,000 towards the capital needs of the third year of the current Plan offered at the Consortium meeting in Paris in June, 1963. Out of this £30,000,000, Agreements have already been signed for a general purpose loan of £10,000,000, and for a loan of £3,500,000 for the purchase of steel plate and other steel products for which there is surplus productive capacity in Britain. The allocation of the remaining £16,500,000 is being discussed with the Government of India.

The biggest single project financed out of British capital aid in India is the Durgapur steelworks, which has been constructed by a consortium of British companies. The contract amounted to about £100,000,000, of which about £50,000,000 was used to buy machinery in Britain; the remainder has been spent in rupees in India. The British Government lent £15,000,000 for the first phase of the steel-works, and the Government of India also used some of Britain's general purpose aid for the project; a private loan of £11,500,000 was in addition made available by five British banking houses. The steel-works, as originally planned, is now in production.

Of the £95,000,000 lent to India in the first and second years of the Third Plan, £22,000,000 has been allocated for the expansion of the plant, to increase its capacity to 1,600,000 tons of steel a year.

A sum of £43,000,000 (of the £95,000,000 lent in the first two years of the Plan) is being spent on other projects chosen by India to be financed with British aid. These projects include the Heavy Electricals Plant at Bhopal, two large fertilizer plants and the expansion of power station capacity. Project aid is spent as and when the manufacture of the equipment needed for the projects is completed and the equipment is delivered.

The level of Indian foreign exchange reserves now, however, calls for an increasingly large proportion of British aid to be made available in a form which can be more quickly disbursed. Of the loans provided in 1961 and 1962, £30,000,000 was therefore used to pay for a wide range of Indian imports of British manufactured goods needed for the support of the Indian economy.

As a result of negotiations conducted under the auspices of the World Bank, the Indus Waters Treaty between Pakistan and India was signed in September, 1960, providing for the division of the waters of the rivers in the Indus Basin between Pakistan and India. The settlement also provided for the completion within 10 years of a number of dams, link canals and barrages on the rivers, to enable Pakistan to replace the water from certain rivers which will be entirely devoted to uses in India, and also to provide Pakistan with an element of water development.

At the same time as the Treaty was signed, a number of Governments and the World Bank signed an Agreement to help to finance the costs of the necessary works. The amounts pledged by these Governments and the World Bank (which are all untied) total $457,000,000 (£163,214,000). Britain's contribution, authorized by Parliament in the Indus Basin Development Fund Act, 1960, is a grant of £20,860,000, of which £9,400,000 has so far been paid.

Mr. Reginald Maudling's Statement:

Britain's former Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Reginald Maudling, addressed a news conference in London on September 17, 1963 on the new White Paper.

The last White Paper on the subject was published more than three years ago. The purpose of the new White Paper is to outline the important developments that have taken place since then, and to provide an account of Britain's current aid effort.

This White Paper shows that the economic aid being given by the British Government to developing countries overseas doubled between the years 1957-58 and 1961-62, and that in the year 1963-64 it is expected to exceed £180,000,000.

At the same time, British private investment overseas is running at the rate of about £300,000,000 a year, and about half of this is going to the developing countries.

"Our total aid effort," said Mr. Maudling, "has been growing very rapidly.... Over the last five or six years it has doubled, and this year we expect it to exceed £180,000,000. This trend clearly reflects the degree of priority which the Government gives to oversea aid. At the present moment, aid from public and private sources, taken together, amounts to about 1¼ per cent of the gross national product."

He spoke of the two limits on the amount of economic aid which Britain could provide as being the extent of the strain on her balance of payments, and the need to provide from the Budget for the cost of all the aid concerned, whether it was spent on British goods or elsewhere in the world.

The amount of aid they could provide, he said, was clearly influenced by the form it took. "Our balance of payments has to carry a very heavy burden of oversea expenditure on many items, and there is a limit to the further burdens we can place upon it. But if aid can take the form of steel, or ships or railway equipment produced from our surplus industrial capacity, then clearly we can afford to do more."

"Oversea aid can at no time be painless. This leads me to the underlying reasons for the aid programme, because I do not believe that if aid were painless it would be so meaningful.... In a world where the disparities in living standards between the industrialized countries and the rest of the world are widening, clearly the dangers of political instability must grow.

"Aid in all its forms will make an immense contribution to the peace of the world and to the happiness of mankind.

"Many of the people of Africa and Asia and Latin America are struggling to free themselves from a poverty that makes a life of human dignity impossible. At the same time, it is, to my mind, impossible for the industrial societies to live easily with their consciences while the indigent societies are just over their garden fence.

"The task of oversea aid must be properly explained—and not merely in terms of statistics. It must be explained what it means to the Indian farmer, who with new tools and new fertilizers grows more food than he ever thought possible before; to the African homes that for the first time see decent lighting and decent sanitation; what the coming of education means to the young people of Africa or Asia, who share with the people of this country the universal passion for it; and in terms of the simple needs of ordinary men and women who still count in shillings what we count in pounds.

"All these things, properly explained and understood, can, I believe, provide a new outlet and a new sense of purpose for Britain. We must recognize that oversea aid is a great and growing burden on our resources.

"Our reaction should not be, and never has been, to cut back on the aid, but rather to regard this as a source of inspiration in our efforts to expand our own economy and so increase the level of our own aid achievement."

He said that while the great part of British economic aid went to Commonwealth countries, aid to foreign countries had recently been substantially increased, apart from the full share taken by Britain in the work of such international organizations as the World Bank, the International Development Association, the International Finance Corporation, and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Recent years had seen a great increase in the aid given to independent Commonwealth countries. As the White Paper made clear, this was not at the expense of the remaining dependencies, for although these were fewer in number than they were, they were still receiving in total some £60,000,000 a year in aid.

He also dwelt upon the Government decisions to give more liberal terms to borrowers, if necessary, where aid is given to developing countries in the form of loans. (About half the aid given is in loans, and the other half in direct grants.)

"Recently, we have made very important changes in the terms of our loans for the benefit of borrowers. We are now prepared, where the burden of debt on a borrower would otherwise be too heavy, to waive interest payments and to postpone capital payments over the first seven years of the loan. The importance of this can be judged from the example of a loan for 25 years, where such a grace period of seven years has the effect of reducing the rate of interest over the whole life of the loan from, say, 5½ per cent to below 3 per cent."

Another recent important feature was the development of technical assistance. He regarded the psychological value of technical assistance to the people of the developing countries as being of the highest possible importance.

The Secretary for Technical Co-operation, Mr. Robert Carr, who also addressed the news conference, pointed out that at the moment somewhere between 15,000 and 20,000 people from Britain were serving in the developing countries.

This number, he said, was probably as high as it was "in the days of the Empire". An increasing proportion of them were not making a career overseas but were people who were voluntarily giving three or four years' service and were then returning to continue their careers at home.

In this way, he said, British people who were serving overseas were drawn from a much wider section of the community than formerly, which he believed to be a great benefit both to the countries in which they were working and to Britain as well. He referred to the special response being made by teachers. The proportion of really young people offering themselves for service overseas was rising all the time, and there was no shortage of recruits of the right sort.

E. Britain To Relax Terms For Loans To Under-developed Countries: The British Government announced on September 17, 1963 that it would give under-developed countries easier terms for loans where it appeared necessary.

In a report to Parliament in the form of a Paper the Government explained what Britain had done by way of loans or grants in the past three years and outlined future plans.

Dealing with loans, it said the Government had decided on several steps to ease the position of recipient nations.

"Hitherto, we have given loans for a maximum of 25 years, with a grace period for the repayment of principal of up to seven years.

"For the future we shall be prepared in suitable cases to make loans for periods of up to 30 years, with grace periods of up to 10 years.

"Further, where the economic circumstances of the recipient country make it necessary, we shall be prepared to grant a period to complete freedom from all service charges, by granting a waiver of interest, as well as the deferment of capital payment, for seven years".

The White Paper pointed out that in the distribution of aid, Britain's first responsibility was to the colonies. Aid to dependent territories in 1962-63 amounted to about half her total aid to the Commonwealth.

"It is natural and fitting that we should continue to assist Commonwealth countries, which have become independent in recent years to achieve self-sustained economies".

But Britain's aid is not confined to the Commonwealth. In recent years she has aided an increasing number of foreign countries.

The former Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Reginald Maudling told newsmen later that British aid to developing countries had doubled in the past five years and was expected in 1963 to exceed £180 million.

F. Two Spy Satellites Launched By USA: The United States launched on the night of October 16, 1963 two satellites from Cape Kennedy (formerly Canaveral). Their mission was to detect any clandestine nuclear tests in outer space.

Good radio signals were received. The satellites went into their scheduled egg-shaped orbits.

Special sensors in the satellites are expected to detect nuclear tests more than 180 million miles away. Each satellite is equipped with 10 V-ray detectors, six gamma ray detectors and a neutron detector.

G. "Tiros VIII" Weather Satellite Launched By USA: A new weather satellite, Tiros VIII designed to deliver instant pictures of cloud cover to stations around the globe, was launched into orbit on December 21, 1963 from Cape Kennedy (USA).

Ground monitors planned early tests of the satellite's automatic picture transmission (APT) system. The electronic weather man was fired into space aboard a three-stage Delta rocket which blasted off in the pre-dawn darkness.

Signals from the 265-lb satellite were received at Point Mugu, California, and officials said that "everything's fine—it's a wonderful Christmas present."

The satellite expected to provide weather bureaux around the world with detailed information for forecasting and will transmit weather pictures directly to stations in India, Britain, Canada, Australia and USA.

The satellite is the eighth in a series of successful weather satellites.

Ground operators can "switch on" the satellite whenever it is within a 1,500-mile radius and receive up to three photographs of cloud formations on each pass.

The camera's 108-degree lens is capable of taking pictures of 672,400 square miles when facing directly towards the Earth. It can prepare, expose and develop film in eight seconds and deliver a finished print to the ground station in three minutes 20 seconds.

The British receiving station is at the Royal Radar Establishment, Malvern, the Australian station at Melbourne and the Indian station at Bombay.

H. First Trans-Pacific Telephone Link Inaugurated: Queen Elizabeth's voice travelled 16,000 miles across two oceans and a continent on December 2, 1963 when she formally opened the Commonwealth trans-Pacific telephone cable (COMPAC), which links Britain and Canada with Australia and New Zealand via Fiji.

COMPAC, which is the first telephone cable across the Pacific, forms the second stage of a comprehensive Commonwealth net-work—the longest submarine telephone cable system in the world. The first stage, connecting Britain and Canada, was opened in December, 1961. The third stage of the net-work will link Australia, Malaysia and Hong Kong.

I. World Sugar Output: The United States Foreign Agricultural Service reported on December 2, 1963 that world sugar production in 1963-64 was expected to reach 58,900,000 short tons, 3,700,000 tons above the previous year's output and second only to the record 1960-61 60,100,000 tons. Averages were higher in Iran, India, Pakistan and Turkey.

The report said that the latest estimates showed a rise of 3,800,000 tons in 'free world' production from the previous year. But in communist countries, including Cuba, there was a fall of 100,000 tons in spite of better crops in Eastern Europe and China.

A drop of 300,000 tons in the Soviet crops was attributed mainly to prolonged drought. The acreage planted was, however, up by five per cent.

Following severe hurricane damage in October, Cuba's production estimate dropped to 200,000 tons below the previous year's 4.2 million tons. The current estimate is more than 1.8 million tons below Cuba's 1955-60 average.

The USA is harvesting record sugar, beet and cane crops. Increases are also indicated in Mexico and Central America. South America expects a 300,000-ton increase over the previous year. An increase of about 825,000 tons is indicated for Western Europe and the total crop for Eastern Europe, outside the Soviet Union, is 250,000 tons above that of 1962-63.

African production was about 450,000 tons. Total increases in Asia were about 1.3 million tons with India accounting for more than half of the increase. Estimates for China indicate an increase in 150,000 tons over 1962-63.

For countries of the Near East and South Asia, the following comparison between the 1963-64 year and the averages of 1955-60 were announced:

Turkey, 509,000 tons compared to average of 408,000 tons; Iran 200,000 tons compared to average of 119,000 tons; India, 3,800,000 tons compared to 2,737,000 tons; Pakistan, 292,000 tons compared to a 1955-60 average of 174,000 tons. The figure also represented increases in varying degrees over the 1962-63 production year.

J. Indian Dialect In Tajikistan: A Tass report on October 17, 1963 said that the Leningrad orientalist, Mr. Iosif Oransky, was the first scholar to study the Indian dialect Paria which is spoken by more than a thousand people living in the Gissar Valley in Tajikistan.

This dialect, which is oral, was discovered by Mr. Oransky in 1954. He established that local people who look like Tajiks or Uzbeks use this dialect when speaking among themselves. They know their history only from the life of several generations who have been living in Central Asia.

"However, the very fact of the preservation of this Indian dialect proves that representatives of this group are the offspring of people who came from India. Apparently they travelled to Central Asia through Afghanistan. That is why local people call them Afgons". By means of comparison Mr. Oransky arrived at the conclusion that this dialect is close to the Indian languages, Punjabi and Lahnda. It also has common traits with Rajasthani.

Mr. Oransky's forthcoming book includes 19 stories in Paria, which he had recorded, and ethnographic texts. At the same time, he is working on a vocabulary of the dialect.

He also studied another Indian dialect existing in Central Asia—in the area of Tashkent and Ferghana. The first 200 words of this dialect were recorded in the 1870's by the Russian explorer Alexander Vilkins. Comparing the two dialects, Mr. Oransky drew the conclusion that they belong to the languages of Central and North-Western India, but to different groups of dialects.

He prepared a report on this subject for the 26th International Congress of Orientalists held in January, 1964 in New Delhi.

K. Moon Made Earth What It is —Hypothesis Of Soviet Astronomer: It was thanks to its natural satellite —the Moon—that the Earth acquired the physical properties leading to the origin of organic life. This, according to a message from Alma Ata on December 1, 1963 was one of the theses of the new cosmogonic hypothesis advanced by the well-known Soviet astronomer, Mr. Vasili Fesenkov.

In the light of the recent achievements in space research, Mr. Fesenkov believed that the Moon was the cause of the radical differences in the physical properties of the Earth and Venus.

His hypothesis was based on the fact that the moment of rotation of the protoplanet condensation of the Earth was too great for one body. The surplus energy went to the Moon which was formed simultaneously with the Earth and this ensured the stability of the Earth.

Mr. Fesenkov maintained that without a rather big satellite the Earth would not have been able to become a solid body, the force of gravitation on whose surface considerably exceeds the centrifugal force. At present, the orbital moment of the Moon is about 80 per cent of the entire moment of rotation of the Earth-Moon system. In this respect the Earth occupies an exceptional position among all planets of the solar system.

The period of rotation of Venus which had no satellite has always been great and at present, apparently, equals several scores of terrestrial days.

According to Mr. Fesenkov's hypothesis, the particles which formed Venus were moving along a circular orbit and combined at a small speed with the result that a rather cool mass was formed with a very small moment of rotation.

L. Protection Against Radiation—New Substances Evolved In USSR: Soviet scientists have synthesized substances that protect the tissue of animals from radiation. They include many harmless phenolic compounds (substances which are close to them in chemical structure are used to protect food from becoming sour).

The substances—inhibitors—save the life of animals, which have received a lethal dose of radiation. Tests were carried out on animals which were given these inhibitors before being exposed to radiation.

In the organism of the animal the inhibitors capture the free radicals—bits of molecules appearing in the cells during radiation. Free radicals develop protein and nucleic acids of cells when influenced, for instance, by gamma rays.

Research workers have found a direct connexion between the ability of these substances to bind free radicals and their prophylactic influence against radiation.

M. Nobel Prizes For 1962 And 1963: It was announced in Oslo on October 11, 1963 that the Nobel Peace Prize for 1962 had been awarded to the American scientist, Dr. Linus Carl Pauling. This was the second time he had been awarded the Nobel Prize.

The Peace Prize for 1963 was awarded jointly to the International Red Cross Committee and the Red Cross League.

Mr. George Seferis, the Greek poet and diplomat, was on October 24 awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature. He was Ambassador in London from 1957 to 1962.

This was the first time that a Greek author had won the literature prize which is worth about £18,280 this year. Dr. Anders Osterling, the permanent secretary of the Swedish Academy, said in a broadcast that the award was also meant as a tribute to the rich literature of present-day Greece.

This was the third time in four years that the Nobel Prize for Literature had gone to a man combining literary activities with diplomatic service. In 1960, the Frenchman, Alexis St. Leger, who writes under the name St.-John Perse, won the award, and the following year the Yugoslav author, Ivo Andric won it.

For Medicine:

The 1963 Nobel Prize for Medicine was awarded jointly on October 17 to two Britons and one Australian—Sir John Carew Eccles of Canberra, Mr. Alan Llyod Hodgkin of Cambridge and Mr. Andrew Fielding Huxley of University College, London.

The Prize amount this year was a record-high 265,000 Swedish crowns ($51,158).

The trio was cited by the awarding college of professors of Sweden's Royal Caroline Institute of Medicine "for their discoveries concerning the ionic mechanisms involved in excitation and inhibition in the peripheral and central portions of the nerve cell membrane."

In brief, their research is designed to explain how the nerves work, an important contribution to the study of nervous diseases.

Through his experiments, Sir John Eccles defined in terms of electricity how nerves are excited or inhibited.

His research tied in with that of Mr. Huxley and Mr. Hodgkin, who were studying the processes by which nervous impulses are transmitted along the nervous system.

For Physics:

It was announced in Stockholm on November 5 that American Professors Eugene Wigner of Princeton University, Maria Goeppert-Mayer of the University of California, and Professor J. Hans Jensen of Heidelberg University had shared the 1963 Nobel Prize in Physics.

Mr. Wigner was awarded half of the $51,000 prize while the other two shared equally the other half.

Mr. Wigner was cited by the Royal Academy of Science for his contributions to the theory of atomic nucleus and the elementary particles, particularly through the discovery and application of fundamental symmetry principles.

Miss Goeppert-Mayer and Mr. Jensen shared the other half for their discovery concerning nuclear shell structure.

For Chemistry:

The Prize for Chemistry was awarded to Professor Karl Ziegler of the Max Planck Institute of Carbon Research at Mulheim, West Germany, and Professor Giulio Natta of the Milan Institute of Technology, Italy, for their discoveries in chemistry and technology of high polymere.

N. Soviet Scientists Find Venus Fit For Human Habitation: Radio Moscow announced on the night of August 30, 1963 that Soviet scientists had established that oxygen exists in the atmosphere of the planet Venus and that consequently the atmospheric conditions on Venus are almost similar to those on the Earth.

The Radio said that the planet was consequently susceptible to being inhabited by human beings similar to those on Earth.

A brief technical communique, read out during the evening news bulletin, said: "Soviet scientists, by analysing the light spectrum after observations of the atmosphere on Venus, have established that oxygen existed in this atmosphere.

"The scientists estimated that as a result, atmospheric conditions on Venus are closely similar to those existing around the Earth."

Observers in Moscow believe that the Soviet discovery may have an important bearing on both the Soviet and United States space research programmes by inducing the two "space" Powers to abandon their plans for landing a man on dead planets, or those believed to be dead, such as the Moon and Mars.

Instead, the observers feel, both nations will intensify their efforts to penetrate the secrets of a "habitable" planet.

In addition to the fact that Venus possesses a habitate atmosphere, the planet's proximity to the Earth, which makes it the closest neighbour after the Moon, is likely to make Venus a priority target for coming space shots.

Recently, Soviet scientists were reported to have made several attempts to send up reconnaissance missiles into the atmosphere of Venus, but only one of these launchings was officially announced on February 12, 1961, under the name "Venusik One." The test was only a partial success, however, for although both the launchings and ejection went off as planned, radio contact was lost at 4.5 million miles from the Earth.

According to American scientists, the Soviet Union also carried out three other launchings, all of which failed, in February and August, 1961, and another in September, 1962.

O. Mankind Menaced By Chaos Of Cities—34 Experts' Call For New Science: A group of 34 scientists and experts (according to an Athens message on July 16, 1963) have come to the conclusion, after a week's Aegean cruise-cum-conference that "the crisis in human settlement may soon outstrip even disease and famine as the gravest risk—short of war—facing the human species".

The conference was called by Dr. Constantine Doxiadis, the Greek town-planner, and arranged in the manner of an ancient Greek symposium. Those taking part deliberated in informality on board a cruising ship and drew inspiration from visits to the ruined ancient sites girdling the Aegean Sea.

They included Sir Robert Matthew, of Edinburgh University, the architect; Professor Marshall McLuhan of Toronto, the author and critic; Dr. Margaret Mead, the American ethnologist; Professor Richard Llewelyn Davies, of London University, the architect; Lady Jackson (Barbara Ward), the economist and author; Professor C. H. Waddington, of Edinburgh University, the expert on animal genetics; and Sir Robert Watson-Watt, the physicist.

They agreed that mankind was facing a crisis. Big cities were growing rapidly and without control; man and his technical environment had reached a tragic conflict; the motor-car was conquering the streets, pushing man aside and leaving him more insecure than ever; conditions of life were becoming more and more unfavourable; the resulting vicious circle was having repercussions on man's economic and social life as well as on his mental balance and physical health.

The prospects were even more appalling. It was estimated that world population would reach 7,000 million by the year 2000 A.D. Settlements with more than one million inhabitants, which at present had a total population of 370 million, would then have a population of 2,600 million. The total value of building stock to be created in the next 40 years was expected to equal the total created over the past 6,000 years.

"If we continue along the present course chaos will prevail," the organizers of the conference stated. "All we can expect is the gradual extinction of the settlements which exist today. What we think of as a jungle today will be insignificant, in magnitude and complexity, when compared with the settlement of the future."

The experts discussed whether the crisis could be met. They found that one of the greatest obstacles was the absence of persons qualified to grasp and tackle the overall problem of human settlement. There were only specialists in individual aspects. In fact, this was why so many different disciplines had to be represented at this floating conference to examine the problem. "The attention of the best brains in the world is focused today on extra-terrestrial space or in physics, to the neglect of the major problems which remain to be solved on our own planet."

The conference decided that although the situation was grave it was not hopeless, "man can act to meet this new crisis", they asserted in a declaration signed on the island of Delos. "Modern technology permits the mobilization of material means on a wholly new scale."

The aim would be to produce settlements which satisfied man not only as parent and worker but as learner and citizen. To meet the challenge, however, profound institutional and procedural reforms were needed. The Delos declaration, which was described as a "profession of faith in human ability to meet the crisis", urged the need to establish a new discipline of human settlement so that the problem should no longer be approached in a fragmented manner. The new "synthetic" science would train men who could assume leadership in this field.

The 34 participants of what came to be known as the Delos Symposium decided to continue as a group, open to new members. They set up a permanent secretariat in Athens and decided to meet again in 1964.

P. Total Eclipse Of The Sun: There was a total eclipse of the Sun in some parts of the world on July 20, 1963.

In Japan there was a "black sunrise"; in the North Atlantic, there was a "black sunset". Stars twinkled at 9.40 a.m. north of Anchorage (Alaska).

The spectacle of a total eclipse of the Sun—blotted out in some areas by cloud—stretched along an arc 10,000 miles long and 60 miles wide from Hokkaido (Japan) across the top of Canada and Maine to the North Atlantic in 2¾ hours.

The US astronaut, Malcolm Scott Carpenter and a group of scientists whisked along the path of the eclipse in a jetliner to obtain data on the light emanating from behind the Moon. They hoped to find clues for man's future ventures into space.

For science, this was the most intricately covered eclipse in history. Scientists photographed, timed and measured it. The results will not be known for weeks.

Millions of Americans saw the eclipse on television. In New York, where the eclipse was 88 per cent total, the Sun showed up on TV screens like a clipped toenail hanging in the sky.

At Fort Simpson, in the Canadian north-west territory, the total eclipse lasted the longest—100 seconds.

At Grandmere (Quebec) a thick cloud cover hanging over the area all day broke up just six minutes before the eclipse began, and hundreds of scientists from Italy, the Netherlands, France and Switzerland quickly scribbled notes and clicked their cameras.

Sixty scientists racing the Moon across Canada succeeded in photographing a total eclipse from a jet airliner—a feat one of them termed "a significant advance in astronomy".

The 525 mph of their modified DC-8 enabled them to stretch the time the eclipse was visible from the 100 seconds it could be seen on the ground to a total of 142.4 seconds in flight.

Over Japan, viewed from a USAF C-30 flying at an altitude of 21,000 feet, the Sun's outer rim of incandescent gas—the "corona"—was brilliantly visible even when the Sun itself was totally hidden.

Dr. Hideo Hirose, chief of the Mitaka observatory, said that the "corona" was more brilliant than any he had seen in a life-time of watching the solar eclipse.

At Wallops Island (Virginia), the Civilian Space Agency launched a fact-finding rocket during the eclipse.

The 88-lb payload was launched from a NASA installation, while the eclipse was near its maximum point along the north-east Atlantic coast.

A NASA spokesman said the purpose of the launching was to measure electron and neutral particle temperatures from 75 to 225 miles above the Earth during the eclipse.

Q. International Conference On Education: An international Conference on education opened in Geneva on July 1, 1963. It was convened by UNESCO and the International Bureau of Education.

It was attended by over 250 delegates from 90 countries.

It exchanged experience in the organization of general education and specialized vocational training and worked out recommendations for the promotion of pedagogical science and introduction of progressive methods of teaching.

An African delegate walked out of the opening session of the Conference in protest against the presence of the Portuguese delegation.

He was Mr. Aja Nwachuku, Nigerian Minister for Education who threatened that other African delegations would also follow his action, which, he said, was based on the resolutions passed by the recent Addis Ababa Conference.

The Nigerian delegate was supported in his action by the Soviet and Yugoslav delegates.

Portugal Expelled—African Resolution Passed:

On July 3, the Conference discussed a resolution tabled by 27 African countries calling for the expulsion of Portugal from the Conference. A move to rule the resolution out of order was rejected by 40 votes to 21, with 16 abstentions.

The resolution said Portugal was keeping Africans in bondage and ignorance and denying them legitimate human rights. It added that Portugal's presence at the Conference was an offence against the rights of man and the fundamental principles of education.

Delegates from Asian, African and Arab countries walked out of the Conference on July 4 when Portugal refused to leave the Conference after being expelled by majority vote.

The African resolution to expel her from the Conference was passed by 40 votes to 23, with 17 abstentions.

The Portuguese chief delegate said the vote was "illegal" and that his Government would appeal to the International Court of Justice at The Hague.

The break-down of the voting showed that in general the African, Arab and Communist bloc delegations voted in favour of Portugal's exclusion from the Conference. Israel also voted for the resolution.

The Western countries, including USA, France, West Germany and Britain, together with Switzerland voted against it.

African, Arab and Soviet bloc delegations walked out of the Conference on the afternoon of July 5.

R. COMECON Bank From January 1, 1964: It was announced in Moscow on November 19, 1963 that the International Bank for economic co-operation of the COMECON countries would begin operation on January 1, 1964.

The Council of the Bank which had been in session in Moscow for some days announced the setting up of a board consisting of representatives of Bulgaria, Hungary, East Germany, Mongolia, Poland, Rumania, the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia. The President of the board will be Mr. Konstantin Nazarkin, Vice-President of the Board of the Foreign Trade Bank of USSR.

The authorized capital of the Bank will be made up of contributions from its eight members, the share of the Soviet Union being two-fifths. But each country will have one vote on the basis of full equality.

The main feature of its operation will be introduction of a new system of multilateral clearance. It will be through convertible roubles which thus virtually becomes common currency.

China and Albania are the two Communist bloc countries who have not become members. Yugoslavia is likely to have dealings with the Bank in due course in view of its application for participation in the COMECON.

S. Asian Influence In UN: According to a news despatch from UN Headquarters on December 28, 1963, Asian influence at United Nations is clearly on the wane, in the view of some veteran diplomats.

They assert that the 18th General Assembly, just ended, has dramatized what they call the erosion of Asian authority. Diplomats from South and South-East Asia concede that this process seems to be going on, but are apparently at a loss as to how the situation can be remedied.

At the heart of the problem is, of course, the emergence of 32 African delegations. The Africans thus outnumber the Asians by almost two to one.

Another obvious element in the situation is that while the Africans have tended to subordinate their regional rivalries and press their policies with one voice at UN, the political landscape in Asia has been increasingly ravaged by disputes. Some of the most acrimonious conflicts on display include those between the Indians and the Pakistanis, the Cambodians and the Thais, and the Indonesians and the Malaysians.

Hard evidence of Asia's "dwindling" prestige and influence in the UN corridors is claimed to be reflected in many developments.

For example, when the 18th Assembly in September, 1963 elected vice-presidents, the four vacancies usually assigned to the Afro-Asian bloc were filled by the Cameroons, Somalia, Syria and Cyprus. No representative of South or South-East Asia was elected.

Again, a dispute arose over the vacant "Asian" seat on the Security Council. There had been general agreement that Malaysia would occupy this. But when the elections took place the Indonesians and "Left" neutralists torpedoed Malaysia's chances. A deadlock developed and as a result Malaysia and Czechoslovakia share the "Asian" seat.

Those who draw this depressing picture of Asia's current UN status point to the Chinese aggression against India as having had an important impact on India's prestige. The situation in both Ne Win's Burma and Sukarno's Indonesia has also impaired Asian "respectability".

Gen. Ne Win is viewed as fighting with everybody in Burma—communists, socialists, Buddhists and students. Sukarno's Indonesia is considered a "disaster area" as the economic situation worsens and President Sukarno brandishes an expansionist sword.

BURMA

A. "Burmanization" Of Trade: All bars and liquor stores and bar-cum-restaurants, operated by foreigners in the city and its suburbs, ceased to function from January 1 under the Government's policy of "Burmanization" of enterprises.

Starting New Year's Day, the number of buses operating in the public transport system in Rangoon and Insein were reduced by 100 as licences to ply them for public hire were not renewed to foreigners.

The authorities have also prohibited importers from selling or fixing prices for their goods without approval from the State-run executive committee of the People's Stores Corporation.

To keep a close check on the importers, the new regulation requires them to submit reports on all commodities. From then on, the handling of these goods is up to the Stores Corporation.

B. New Regulations On Transit Visas For Foreigners: The Controller of Immigration has announced new regulations concerning the stay period of foreigners who enter Burma on transit visas.

The new regulations, effective since January 2, limit the duration of stay of a foreigner to 24 hours as against 72 hours in the past.

Permits to foreign doctors to practise were withdrawn by the Director of Health Services from December 31, 1963. Foreign doctors serving in free dispensaries, clinics and hospitals and those who have completed 15 years of service under the Government have, however, been permitted to continue practice.

It was, however, not stated what steps the Government would take after the expiry of the order.

CAMBODIA

A. Withdrawal Of US Aid: The following is the text of the Note sent by Cambodia to USA on December 14, 1963 on the withdrawal of American aid:

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Royal Government of Cambodia presents its compliments to the Embassy of the United States of America and, referring to the Khmero-American negotiations on the closure and the liquidation of American aid in the military, economic and cultural and technical fields informs the Embassy that the Royal Government of Cambodia has found with regret that without preliminary consultation with Cambodian authorities, the American authorities have taken unilaterally, even before the opening of the bipartite talks agreed to by the US Government, a series of steps which has led to the immediate and complete cessation of the outstanding programme and operations.

"This initiative of the American authorities is in obvious contradiction with the consent given by the US Government which has accepted to open immediately bipartite talks on the liquidation of the outstanding aid programmes according to the agreements in force and to the letter No. 147 of the Embassy dated November 21, 1963.

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Cambodia has the honour to recall to the Embassy that in notifying its decision not to accept any more new American aid, the Royal Government had no intention to decide unilaterally on the destiny of the outstanding programmes and operations which have been already commonly agreed.

"In fact, the agreements in force duly signed by the Cambodian and American authorities were always valid until opposite decisions have been agreed bilaterally.

"The unilateral decisions taken, in violation of the agreements in force, by the American authorities show clearly their desire to withdraw from Cambodia what it has been already and formally granted to that country. As the steps concerned have not been abandoned, the Khmero-American negotiations seem, therefore, to be practically without any aim.

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs should be grateful to the US Embassy if the latter would take all the necessary steps to hasten the repatriation of the military, economic and information missions (US-MAAG, USAID, USIS) and other specialized organizations dealing with the management of the American aid programmes, in such a way that this repatriation should come to an end not later than January 15, 1964.

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs would like to inform the Embassy that the Royal Government will continue to ensure until that date the protection of the American personnel and to grant facilities to the missions cited above in the preparing of their departure.

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Embassy of the United States of America the assurance of its highest consideration."

Withdrawal Of Embassy Staff In Washington:

Another communique announced on December 13, 1963 Cambodia's decision to withdraw its entire Embassy staff in Washington.

The communique quoted by the Cambodian News Agency said Prince Norodom Sihanouk had decided to withdraw the Charge d'Affaires and staff who were to have taken over from the Cambodian Ambassador "until further notice."

The decision to recall all diplomatic representation followed an incident in USA in which "a State Department official who had only the rank of Ambassador took the liberty of calling our Ambassador and made remarks about an alleged statement by the Cambodian Government" on the "deaths of President Kennedy", Thai leader Sarit Thanarat and overthrown South Viet-Nam President Ngo Dinh Diem."

The Americans had described the Cambodian statement as "barbarous" and in view of "this departure from diplomatic usage" the Prince had decided to withdraw all Embassy staff.

[Relations between USA and Cambodia have been strained since Cambodia charged USA in November, 1963 with supporting clandestine radio broadcasts by Cambodian rebels in South Viet-Nam and Thailand. USA denied the charge.]

B. Resignation Of Cabinet: The Premier, Prince Norodom Kantol, on January 7 presented the resignation of his Cabinet to the Chief of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who, however, refused to accept it immediately.

Prince Kantol presented the resignation in connexion with the case of Songsakd Kitchpanich, 32-year-old Cambodian banker who fled to South Viet-Nam recently in an airplane piloted by a Frenchman. Songsakd reportedly took substantial funds with him.

A communique from Prince Norodom Sihanouk's office said he had set aside Prince Kantol's resignation until after a tribunal rendered judgment in the Songsakd affair.

Consideration of the resignation was also delayed because of economic and financial reforms now being put into operation by the Government and because of a number of officials visits expected soon in Cambodia.

C. Relations With China: The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, said on December 29, 1963 that if his plan for the "neutralization" of Cambodia was finally rejected, Cambodia would have to negotiate a formal alliance "with certain Powers, in particular with China."

In a speech opening the 16th National Congress, he said that if his proposal for guaranteeing Cambodian neutrality were rejected and there was no hope that his country could live as a neutral, without alliances, then Cambodia would have no choice but to give up neutrality under its present form. It would then negotiate an alliance with other countries, particularly China.

He said the Western Powers were "carefully studying" the Cambodian neutralization plan with the obvious intention of "sinking it according to all the rules of diplomacy." He stressed that Cambodia had already made many concessions.

According to the New China News Agency, he said that Cambodia's rejection of American aid was a "catastrophe" for "imperialists because it deprived them of a field for subversive activities."

He described US aid as "a dose of opium" meant to intoxicate the Cambodian administration and people and prevent them from achieving economic independence.

He said Western personnel, introduced into the country under cover of "trivial financial and material aid" had the job of influencing Cambodians "to subvert us, to control us and to impose conditions upon us, under the hyprocritical pretext of preventing us from sliding over."

"But we only want to be really neutral and independent," he added. Cambodia's renunciation of US aid was urgent and necessary in spite of the difficulties the country encountered.

He announced that China had offered to give Cambodia "a large quantity of armaments" to defend its frontiers against Cambodia's neighbours. He did not give any details about the offer.

He also defended China against charges of expansionist aims.

He personally awarded medals to 121 Chinese technicians who helped build a cement factory on December 26, 1963 when the Prince visited the factory in Kampot province.

D. French Assistance: Tass quoted Prince Norodom Sihanouk as announcing on January 5 major French military and professional aid for Cambodia.

It said he told the Cambodian National Congress that the visiting French Armed Forces Minister, Mr. Pierre Messmer, had offered to supply 100 high-speed trucks, 18 military planes, and a number of tanks for an armoured battalion.

France had also offered to build a school to train secondary school teachers and agricultural executives, Tass said, adding that the offers were regarded in Pnom Penh as showing that France planned to take America's place in aid to Cambodia.

E. Air Agreement With Viet-Nam (DR): An Air Transport Agreement between Cambodia and the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam was signed in Pnom Penh on December 20, 1963.

According to the Agreement, an air service will be opened between Pnom Penh and Hanoi.

The Agreement was signed by Mr. Van Mollyvan, Secretary of State for Public Works and Tele-communications, and Mr. Phan-Trong-Tue, Viet-Namese Minister of Communications and Transport.

Mr. Van Mollyvan thanked Viet-Nam (DR) for having supported the proposal of the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, on convening an international conference to ensure Cambodia's neutrality.

Mr. Phan-Trong-Tue said: "With the signing of the Air Transport Agreement, new conditions have been created for expanding further the economic and cultural exchanges between our two countries, thus strengthening the mutual understanding between the Viet-Namese and Cambodian peoples".

CEYLON

A. President Ayub Khan's Visit: President Ayub Khan of Pakistan paid a goodwill visit to Ceylon from December 8 to 14, 1963.

He was accompanied, among others, by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, and the Director-General of the Foreign Ministry, Mr. M. Shafqat.

On arrival at the airport in Colombo, he said Ceylon was held in high regard by the people of Pakistan. The two countries were bound by common heritage and partnership within the Commonwealth. "With so much in common between us we cannot be strangers to each other."

Welcoming the President, the Governor-General, Sir William Gopallawa, hoped that during his stay the President would be able to see the glories of Ceylon's past civilization, the present achievements and the efforts being made to bring happiness and prosperity to the people.

Address To Parliament:

One of President Ayub Khan's major engagements in Ceylon was an address to a meeting of Members of Parliament.

He explained to the MPs the details of the basic democracy which was introduced in his country "as the parliamentary form of government proved to be an unworkable proposition in Pakistan."

He made a passing reference to Kashmir in the absence of pan-Asian forum as machinery for consultation.

He said countries in Asia had been unable to achieve a forum like the Organization of African Unity and said differences and disputes, which divided the countries of Asia and impeded the growth of a sentiment of Asian solidarity, remained unreconciled.

He gave the Kashmir issue as an illustration of such a dispute which had remained unsettled for 16 years and denied to the people "their inalienable right of self-determination" pledged to them by both India and Pakistan in a "solemn international agreement."

He took up cudgels on behalf of China which, he said, was the largest country in the world. The problems of world peace and security and especially of disarmament and peace in Asia could not be solved permanently without the co-operation of China. "It is encouraging to note that this truth is finding increasing recognition."

To support his opposition to the Belgrade-type conference, he said political concepts changed with changing situations. They were also apt to lose with time their content and meaning and acquire a new complexion. The concept of a three-fold division of the world into the Communist bloc, the Western alliance and the non-aligned group was one such example.

He said: "Not only are there wide divergencies and even acute differences between members of the same bloc, but non-alignment has come to acquire different connotation to different countries of that group.

"On the other hand, there are aligned countries which are demonstrating a greater flexibility and independence of approach to major international questions than some of those who call themselves non-aligned."

He said that in the absence of a pan-Asian forum, it became even more necessary for them to strengthen Asian solidarity with the African nations through the machinery of an inter-continental conference such as that convened in Bandung in 1955. Since that time more than a score of dependent peoples had emerged as independent and sovereign States. Old disputes remained unresolved and new tensions had arisen. Developments affecting peace and security of the world, more especially of the Asian continent, had supervened.

He said: "For these reasons it is the hope of the people of Pakistan that a second Afro-Asian conference will be convened in the near future to reappraise the proposals for peace and fruitful co-operation between Afro-Asian peoples and the world."

However, according to Colombo reports, Ceylon remained "non-committed" to the holding of a second Bandung conference when President Ayub Khan of Pakistan pursued his efforts to obtain support for it at his talks with the Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike.

Besides the proposed conference, disarmament, world peace, Afro-Asian unity, the development of Ceylon-Pakistan trade and the future of "Stateless" persons of Pakistani origin in Ceylon were believed to have been discussed by them.

A joint communique was signed on December 14, 1963.

It said: "Recalling the contribution made by the first Afro-Asian conference and considering the fast changing pattern of the international situation and the attainment of independence by many new States since the last conference of Afro-Asian nations, the President was of the view that a second conference of Afro-Asian leaders should be held at an opportune time as early as possible in order to strive in a concerted manner towards reduction of international tensions and promotion of greater understanding and co-operation in a wider area.

"The Prime Minister agreed that such a conference would serve a useful purpose."

On a non-aligned nations' conference, which Colombo is co-sponsoring with Cairo, the communique said the two leaders had agreed that "regular consultations among the leaders of various nations to discuss matters of common concern can make a useful contribution towards better understanding of world problems."

On the Sino-Indian border dispute, the President "appreciated the efforts of Mrs. Bandaranaike along with other Colombo Conference countries to bring about a peaceful solution of the border conflict."

The two leaders welcomed the nuclear test ban Treaty and expressed the "hope it would pave the way towards complete and universal disarmament."

The position regarding persons of Pakistani origin resident in Ceylon was discussed by the two leaders. They expressed confidence that "a speedy settlement" could be arrived at on this matter in the mutual interest of their two countries and "in the context of the close and friendly relations existing between them."

Mrs. Bandaranaike accepted the invitation extended by President Ayub Khan to visit Pakistan. The time of the visit will be arranged at a later date.

Mrs. Bandaranaike and the President condemned the policies of racial discrimination practised by the Government of South Africa which they considered as a "grave violation" of elementary human rights and of the UN Charter.

The joint communique said that "subscribing to the belief that all international disputes should be settled expeditiously and by peaceful means, the two leaders agreed that the disputes among countries in this region should be settled in a fair and equitable manner in order to promote harmonious and friendly relations between neighbouring countries and to strengthen the solidarity of the Afro-Asian countries in the interests of world peace."

"In this respect," it said, "they recalled with regret the dispute between India and Pakistan over Kashmir and agreed that its expeditious solution in accordance with UN resolutions or by other peaceful means would be in the interests of peace in the subcontinent and in the region."

News Conference:

President Ayub Khan and Mr. Bhutto were at pains on December 15 to justify a second Bandung conference in preference to a second non-aligned conference of the Belgrade type.

To searching questions put by correspondents at a news conference held in the Pakistan High Commission, President Ayub Khan said that he thought he might be right if he said that Mrs. Bandaranaike agreed with him that if there was to be a meeting of "developing countries", it had to be much broader-based than the non-aligned conference.

He said there were "flashpoints" in the Asian region in which he also included "certain amount of tension between India and Ceylon" and also trade problems and foreign exchange-earning capacity. These, according to him were "big enough problems" which they should get together and resolve. Even if they were not able to resolve these issues at a conference, he thought it was a good thing to identify these problems so that it could be solved at least at a future date.

When a correspondent asked whether he considered that in the present context a second Bandung conference was far more important than a second Belgrade-type conference, the President said that he entirely agreed with the correspondent. He could not see what a non-aligned conference would be able to achieve. "What did the last non-aligned conference achieve? After the conference, some went to Moscow, some went to Washington but what happened?" he asked.

Earlier, in reply to a question he had said that if USSR and USA came closer, non-alignment would be of no value. He added that people who wanted to exploit through non-alignment would certainly find themselves in a very difficult situation in that case.

A correspondent asked whether he sincerely believed that India would attack Pakistan.

President Ayub Khan said that in the past whenever she had a problem with her neighbours she had resolved it by force. If India created an unlimited military power inside the country, she might do whatever she had been doing in the past. India had not solved any problems with her neighbours.

Another correspondent pointed out that United Nations were there. The President asked what United Nations had done so far. It had only brought about cease-fire. Such a cease-fire would be inside Pakistan territory. The existence of a superior force next door to any one would be far more than aggression. India had used her force against Pakistan without any rhyme or reason. He concluded by saying "this can happen again."

The news conference ended abruptly with Mr. Bhutto losing his temper over a question asked by a correspondent on the Belgrade conference.

Mr. Bhutto called the correspondent a "bad mannered man" and closed his news conference abruptly and walked away from the conference room.

The question followed a statement by President Ayub Khan that he would not waste his time on a Belgrade-type conference. President Ayub Khan had said then that he would not like to be called "a sycophant" of major Powers as according to him non-alignment was a shadow of major Power conflict.

The correspondent asked Mr. Bhutto whether the President had conveyed to the Ceylon Premier his view and if so what was the reaction of Mrs. Bandaranaike.

Mr. Bhutto tried to evade the question but when the correspondent again pressed for an answer, Mr. Bhutto lost his temper.

B. Sinhala Becomes Official Language: Sinhala, spoken by eight million of Ceylon's 10 million inhabitants, became the official language on January 1.

After 165 years English ceased to be the language of the administration.

While there was rejoicing in the predominantly Sinhala-speaking areas, in north-east Ceylon, where most Tamils live, there were demonstrations against the language policy which the Tamils allege gives them "second class status".

Women were urged to march in procession to present petitions in Tamil at provincial administration headquarters and insist that written replies be given in Tamil or else do acts of civil disobedience such as squatting before public offices.

Government sources, however, said it was official policy to reply in Tamil to letters sent in Tamil.

Copies of the Sinhala Only Act, which provides for the introduction of Sinhala as the language of administration, were burnt before the Kachcheris, offices of Government agents.

Members of Parliament belonging to the Federal Party led the demonstrations in their respective areas where public meetings were held to mark their protest against the introduction of Sinhala.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, in a New Year message described the implementation of the Sinhala Only policy as "the completion of the pledge given to the people by my late husband."

She said: "My Government will always be prepared to listen patiently to any representations made by those affected and to act with justice towards all".

She stated that while giving due place to the wishes of the majority, "it is my firm determination to protect at all times the legitimate rights of all minority groups."

To minority communities she said: "I appeal to all of them to think of themselves too as belonging to the one family of Ceylonese who inhabit this land, and to extend their co-operation to us in the interests of the nation as a whole".

C. Nationalization Of General Insurance: The State-owned Insurance Corporation took over on January 1 all general business, except marine insurance, of 51 private companies—Ceylonese, British, American, Canadian, Indian and Australian.

The Finance Minister, Mr. T. B. Ilangaratne, said that no payment would be made for loss of business or goodwill.

The Corporation, while taking over the business, had not taken over buildings or equipment of the insurance firms, he said at a ceremony marking the take-over.

He said that during his recent visit to Britain, the British tea interests there had indicated that if no compensation was paid to insurance firms, it might affect Ceylon's tea trade. To this, he had replied that it was the British interests which controlled the tea trade largely, both at the point of production and sale. He said that he had further told them that if Ceylon's tea trade was affected by the take-over of the insurance business, then the Government would take adequate measures not only for marketing of tea but also for the maintenance of tea estates.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, in a New Year message to the nation, said that the nationalization of oil and insurance business was in keeping with her late husband's desire to free the people "from the stranglehold of vested interests."

D. Expulsions From Communist Party: The Ceylon Communist Party has expelled eight prominent members including Mr. Premlal Kumarasiri from the Party.

Mr. Kumarasiri and others were known to toe the Chinese line in the current Sino-Soviet ideological conflict.

Earlier, Mr. N. Sanmugathasan, General Secretary of the Communist Ceylon Trade Union Federation, had been expelled from the Party (see page 5520).

The Federation itself is split into two groups and the pro-Soviet wing which is supported by the Communist Party has opened a new trade union central office.

CHINA

A. Cotton Cloth Ration: Most people in Peking received a substantial increase in cotton cloth ration coupons in November, 1963—more than double the largest amount they had in any of the past three years.

All workers, officials and students were given morale-boosting coupons allowing them to buy about 13 feet of cloth. Housewives and self-employed people got about half this, but for them too it was a substantial increase.

Citizens were not told how long the coupons would last, but they think it will be about one year. The last coupons, for cloth (4 to 6 feet), were issued just over a year earlier.

Thirteen feet is enough to buy a cotton cloth suit, a couple of shirts and a few handkerchiefs. It may not seem much, and indeed is still well below the 1956 figures, but memories are short and the increase was more than most people had hoped for.

Cotton cloth rationing, like all other rationing in China, varies from district to district and profession to profession.

China's cotton crop increased in 1963 by 20 to 30 per cent over that of the previous year.

Though there has been no increase in the basic grain ration and cooking oil remains in short supply, meat, vegetables, eggs and other foodstuffs are in abundant supply.

Vegetables are not rationed. Most better quality meat is still rationed though the basic ration is about double what it was a year ago.

B. Steps To Stabilize Cotton And Food Production: It was disclosed in Peking on January 1 that the Government intends to concentrate large resources in certain key agricultural areas throughout China to put the nation's food and cotton production on a more stable basis.

The People's Daily in a New Year editorial said this was "the most important task confronting the Chinese people."

The editorial said it was "especially important to select throughout the country a number of areas with better conditions and concentrate great resources on developing such capital projects in these places as farm land irrigation projects.

Observers in Peking said this seemed to be the initial stage of the previously announced long-term plan to mechanize and technically transform China's still largely primitive agriculture over the next 20 years.

C. Civil Aviation Agreement With Afghanistan: The Afghan interior Minister, Dr. Abdul Kayyum, announced in Peking on November 24, 1963 that a civil aviation Agreement had been concluded between China and Afghanistan.

He made the announcement at a banquet he gave in honour of the Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai.

Flight Rules:

The State Council at a plenary meeting in Peking on December 30, 1963 approved the "Basic Flight Rules of the People's Republic of China" and the "Flight Rules governing foreign civil aircraft".

The establishment of the flight rules is no doubt in connexion with the regular scheduled civilian flights which are proposed to be made into China under the recent Civil Aviation Agreements which that country has signed with Pakistan, Cambodia and Afghanistan. Hitherto, no foreign planes had been permitted flight into the country with the exception of Soviet aircraft.

Of these three Asian countries it is Pakistan which is actively pushing plans to open scheduled flights to Canton and Shanghai by next Spring and the proclamation of the flight rules governing foreign aircraft would appear to be one of the practical steps paving the way for the opening of these flights.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Sino-Indian Letters On 1961 Belgrade Conference; Plan For Construction Of Warships; Theft Of Prophet's Relic In Srinagar; Maritime Pact With UAR; IOC Annual Report.

A. Sino-Indian Letters On 1961 Belgrade Conference: The Government of India has told the Chinese Government in a Note that China's opposition to imperialism or colonialism was strictly determined by her own private interests.

The Note, dated December 12, 1963 was the last in the series of exchanges between the two countries on the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru's statements on colonialism and imperialism at the 1961 Belgrade Conference.

The exchanges began soon after the Conference when the Chinese Press presented a distorted and tendentious view of Mr. Nehru's statements at the Conference in an attempt to create misunderstanding in Afro-Asian countries.

The Note said that the Government of India had no interest in carrying on an exchange of correspondence with the Chinese Government on this subject.

It said that China had deliberately opposed, on specious pretexts, the emergence of the Federation of Malaysia.

It also referred to the Chinese Government's opposition to the partial nuclear test ban Treaty and the brusque rejection by the Chinese Government of the Indian proposal for a settlement of the Sino-Indian dispute by international arbitration as laid down in the Bandung declaration. It said these hardly needed any comment.

The Note was in reply to a Chinese memorandum dated November 14 which described as "unwarranted trouble-making" India's "repeated charges against the Chinese Press".

The Chinese memorandum was in reply to an Indian Note dated June 1 in which the Chinese Government had been told that India was quite competent to form her own assessment of present-day political realities and did not require any commendation from the Chinese Government on India's close and friendly relations with Afro-Asian countries.

India's latest Note of December 12 said that the dogmatic attitude of the Chinese Government on the issues of war and peace and peaceful co-existence of States with different political and social systems was well known.

"The brusque rejection by the Chinese Government of the alternative methods for a peaceful settlement of the Sino-Indian differences on the border, namely, adjudication by the International Court of Justice or international arbitration, which are accepted methods for settling international differences, and which are specifically mentioned in the Bandung declaration to which China is a signatory, is incontrovertible evidence of China's contempt for any policy of peaceful understanding.

"The Indian Government has no interest in carrying on an exchange of correspondence on this subject with the Chinese Government. However, the facts have been stated to ensure that the tendentious charges of the Chinese Government are clearly exposed."

B. Plan For Construction Of Warships: The project to construct major warships at the Mazagon docks in Bombay is being actively pursued and work has already begun on providing necessary facilities for this purpose.

According to the annual review of the Indian Navy released by the Defence Ministry in New Delhi on December 31, 1963, frigates are proposed to be constructed either with British or Swedish co-operation.

A team led by the Deputy Chief of the Naval Staff visited both the countries some months earlier to evaluate their offer to collaborate in the construction of frigates and its report is being examined by the Government.

With the proclamation of Emergency, the Indian Navy intensified its vigil on the seas and took steps to modernize its fleet and increase its fire power and mobility.

The review said that additional commitments were taken up by the Navy to meet the new threat. Naval garrisons were set up in Andamans and Nicobar Islands and preparations were made to take over coastal batteries and set up new bases.

A new establishment, appropriately named INS Jarawa after the ancient tribe of Nicobar and Andaman Islands, will be formally commissioned early in 1964. It will be administered by the Commodore, East Coast, whose headquarters are in Vishakapatnam.

To further the development of a balanced fleet, the Navy has been considering proposals to add a submarine wing which when established would make it "three-dimensional." In addition to its powerful ships, the Indian fleet has an aircraft carrier INS Vikrant equipped with fighter and reconnaissance and anti-submarine aircraft.

There has been a considerable expansion also in the Navy's fleet air arm. Several Seahawk jet fighters were added to normal complement of the carrier. More naval pilots, navigators and air technicians are being trained in the carrier to man the expanding aviation wing.

While the training facilities at INS Garuda—Navy's first air station at Cochin—are being increased, work is also progressing on the establishment of another naval air station at Dabolim in Goa.

The naval establishment at Goa is being developed to meet the multifarious demands of the Navy in this area. It will be formally commissioned as INS Gomantak soon.

With the completion of some more phases of naval dockyard expansion scheme at Bombay, there has been an increase in the availability of berthing facilities.

The project to have a training establishment and a dockyard at Visakhapatnam is also underway. The work involves the dredging of a channel to provide the necessary anchorage and berthing for ships and provision of several other facilities ashore.

C. Theft Of Prophet Mohammed's Relic In Srinagar: A sacred hair of the Prophet Mohammed, preserved for the past 300 years at the Hazratbal shrine in Srinagar, was removed by some miscreants on December 26, 1963.

Eight days later, after intense inquiries by the Central Bureau of Investigation, it was found in the shrine on January 4.

Mr. Vishwanathan, Secretary to the Central Home Ministry who had gone to Srinagar for consultations with the State Government on the investigation, said on January 5 that the relic was "surreptitiously placed by the culprits" amid hot pursuit by men of the Central Bureau of Investigation.

During the period the relic had been missing, there had been much commotion in Srinagar. Hindus and Sikhs joined Muslims in voicing concern over the disappearance of the sacred hair.

The news of the recovery of the relic was received with great relief. The Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru in a message to the Kashmir Premier, Mr. Shamsuddin, said: "I am greatly relieved and happy to learn that the holy relic has been recovered. I send my hearty congratulations to you and to the people of Kashmir."

According to Mr. Vishwanathan, almost all the witnesses who were in a position to testify to the genuineness of the sacred relic had identified it.

He said as soon as the investigation was complete, the case would be taken to a law court and the accused tried. After the completion of the necessary legal formalities, the holy relic would be restored to the shrine as soon as possible.

Background:

The sacred relic had remained with the descendants of the Holy Prophet until it reached Sayyid Abdullah, the Mutawalli (administrator) of the Prophet's shrine in Medina.

In 1634 the Sayyid left for India with his family and arrived at Bijapur (Deccan) where two years later he was granted jagir by the ruler there.

The Sayyid stayed in Bijapur for 23 years and on his death his son, Sayyid Hamid, became the repository of the holy hair. Sayyid Hamid lived in Bijapur till the kingdom was conquered by Aurangzeb in 1692 AD.

Sayyid Hamid went to Jehanabad to get his jagir returned. Being in distress, he sought the help of a Kashmiri trader, named Khwaja Nur-ud-Din Ashwari, who was carrying on a prosperous business at Jehanabad. The Khwaja readily gave him the money but requested him to let him have the sacred relic. Hamid turned down this request, but the same night he was directed in a dream by the Prophet to hand over the hair relic to Khwaja Nur-ud-Din.

According to "a history of Kashmir," Khwaja Ashwari left for Kashmir with the relic but at Lahore, he was detained by Aurangzeb, who wanted to keep the sacred relic in Ajmer.

The Khwaja was deeply shocked at being relieved of the relic by Aurangzeb and he died at Lahore, expressing his last wish to a friend, Khwaja Medanish that should he succeed in getting back the relic, it should be taken to Kashmir.

Aurangzeb, too, was directed in a dream by the Prophet to hand over the relic to Khwaja Medanish who later carried it to Kashmir.

After being kept for some time in the Khanqah of Naqshband, the holy hair was finally lodged in the Hazratbal Mosque which was originally built by Shah Jehan.

The body of Khwaja Nur-ud-Din was also buried near the Ziarat (shrine).

D. Trade With USSR: India and the Soviet Union have achieved the trade target of Rs. 50 crores each way during the current calendar year.

Hailing the achievement, the Minister for International Trade, Mr. Manubhai Shah, in a telegram to the Indian Ambassador in Moscow on December 27, 1963, stated that the current year's performance augured well for the expansion of trade envisaged in the five-year Trade Agreement, which came into effect from January 1, 1964.

Mr. Shah requested the Indian envoy to convey the Indian Government's congratulations to the Soviet Government on the latest achievement in trade between the two countries.

Under the new Agreement, the volume of Indo-Soviet trade is to be doubled to Rs. 100 crores each way in three years.

I. First Indian Diesel Locomotive Commissioned: The Railways took another step towards self-sufficiency in rolling stock with the commissioning on January 3 of the first Indian-manufactured diesel locomotive at Banaras by the former Railway Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri.

The locomotives which will further improve the performance of the Railways are being manufactured at the factory near Banaras in collaboration with Alco Products Incorporated of USA.

The technical collaboration agreement signed in 1962 is valid for 10 years but can be extended by mutual agreement. According to the present indications the Rs. 13.7-crore project is expected to be completed by March, 1967. It is planned to manufacture 150 diesel locomotives a year. By the end of the Third Plan a production rate of 33 locos a year will have been achieved.

The US firm is supplying the necessary technical 'know-how' and arranging for training of Government personnel abroad. In the initial stages, it has undertaken to supply components and assemblies in a knockdown condition. It is also assisting in the procurement of machinery, plant and equipment.

Under the agreement, lump sum payments are to be made for each design purchased by the Railways for manufacture. The payments vary from $40,000 to $50,000 in the case of engines and $20,000 to $25,000 for the rest of the mechanical portion of the locomotives.

The firm is entitled to an engineering fee and a royalty linked to actual production.

The Railways are planning to utilize the diesel locos most advantageously on congested routes, to solve the line capacity problem. As an interim measure, a fleet of such locomotives is being utilized on sections which are due for electrification. When electrification is introduced, these will be transferred to other sections.

The idea is to strike a balance between electrification and dieselization, keeping in view the advantages and limitations of these two types of traction, in the context of the prevailing conditions including availability of foreign exchange and of diesel oil.

The Railways believe that notwithstanding the adoption of these two types of traction for certain sections carrying very heavy traffic, steam traction will continue to hold a dominant position in India for a considerable period.

This, it was stated, is because of the easy availability of coal, the established indigeneous capacity for building steam locomotives and the larger transport demand under conditions which differ from region to region.

J. Hindustan Steel Ltd.—Annual Report: According to its annual report released in Ranchi on December 26, 1963, Hindustan Steel Ltd.—earned a profit of Rs. 6.63 crores during the fiscal year 1962-63, exclusive of the depreciation provision.

The concern, however, has to clear a loss of Rs. 61.50 crores accumulated since the first year of its operation, mostly due to heavy depreciation charges and interest liabilities.

Greater emphasis is now being laid on improvement in quality and in the planning of profitable production.

The gross sale of iron and steel materials showed a progressive improvement, rising from Rs. 44.2 crores in 1960-61 to Rs. 130.5 crores during 1962-63.

The overall tonnage of the main finished products during the year was 11,35,383 tonnes.

Substantial quantities of special quality steel were also produced to meet urgent defence needs.

The sale of coke oven byproducts made great strides during the year, totalling Rs. 2.06 crores. Of this, Rs. 18,00,000 was earned on foreign exports. Besides, about 17,000 tonnes of pig-iron, angles and m.s. rods valued at Rs. 43.3 crores were also exported.

The total production of all the plants under the company during the year was 80 per cent of the rated capacity in iron, 83 per cent in ingot steel, 76 per cent in total saleable steel and 95 per cent in plates. New production records were achieved in almost all the units of these plants.

During the year under review, the Dugda Coal Washery was switched on from trial production to regular production and Bhojudih Washery was commissioned for regular production.

A contract with a consortium of five leading Japanese firms was signed in September, 1963 for the supply of main equipment for the alloy steel project. The project is estimated to cost Rs. 65 crores.

K. IOC Annual Report: According to the fourth annual report of the State-owned Indian Oil Company (IOC) released in Bombay on December 26, 1963, IOC made a net profit of Rs. 59,61,000 in 1962-63. This gives a net return of 18.5 per cent and a net kilolitre of Rs. 9.3.

The report said that the net profit would have been over Rs. 90,00,000 if the Company had reached agreement to receive the amounts due from the Government or other parties.

The quantity of products sold in 1961-62 was 322 kilolitres per person employed at the end of March, 1962.

Sales almost trebled in 1962-63 compared with the previous year. They amounted to 629,639 kilolitres plus 16,764 kilogrammes of greases and 11,498 metric tons of petroleum coke.

The Company now sells 14 products.

L. Naval Station In Andaman And Nicobar Islands: The Andaman and Nicobar Islands had a naval station commissioned in January, 1964.

The establishment will be administered by the Commodore, East Coast, with headquarters at Visakhapatnam.

This will be one of the two new naval stations to be commissioned early in the New Year, the other one being INS Gomantak in Goa.

[In the wake of the border crisis 14 months ago attention was directed towards strengthening the Army and the Air Force. The Navy, in that context, had perforce to remain in the background. Subsequent events like the discovery of traces of a Chinese picnic on one of the islands in the Andamans group as well as the mysterious appearance of some unidentified vessels off the East Coast have underlined the Navy's role in the defence of the country. Various steps like construction of new frigates, specialised submarine training, increasing the number of naval establishments and extension of the fleet air arm are, therefore, being vigorously pursued.]

M. Progress Of Laccadive, Minicoy And Amindive Islands: The progress made by Laccadive, Minicoy and Amindive Islands off the Kerala coast was testified on January 6 in Madras by the Central Deputy Minister for Home Affairs, Mrs. Maragatham Chandrasekhar, who had returned from an extensive tour of those areas.

She was the first Central Minister to visit these Islands after they came under the Union administration in 1956.

She said these islanders, all of Muslim faith, were a disciplined lot who had evolved a code of conduct of their own and had no law and order problem.

She said while the Second Plan allotment for this territory was about Rs. 74,00,000, it was over Rs. 1 crore in the Third Plan. The performance of the Third Plan targets was so far very good and the people as a whole were very enthusiastic about Plan schemes.

She said copra and coir were the main source of income for these people. The consumer co-operatives had marketed for the islanders Rs. 23,00,000 worth of copra during 1962-63.

By the end of the Fourth Plan, she said, all islands would have electricity. All islands already had wireless communication, post office and hospital facilities. Medical aid was free. Education was becoming very popular and there was not a single island without a school. There were two high schools also.

N. Goa Chief Minister's Policy Statement: In his first policy statement on January 6, the Goa Chief Minister, Mr. Dayanand Bandodkar, pledged his Ministry to the all-round development of Goa with "the advice, guidance and help" of the Central Government.

He said that while his party—Maharashtrawadi Gomantak—had received "a clear mandate from the people for the immediate merger of Goa with Maharashtra," his Ministry was "aware that there is a group of patriotic people who feel genuinely apprehensive" of the merger move.

"It is also conscious that the final sanction for the merger rests with the nation's Parliament. It will be the Ministry's endeavour to allay the fears of those who are opposed to the merger and it will work in a spirit of goodwill and co-operation to persuade them to its point of view."

The statement was regarded in political circles as a significant re-iteration of Mr. Bandodkar's post-election stand on the merger issue which has since brought about a crisis in the alliance of the ruling party and the P-SP whose two elected members have threatened to resign from the Goa Assembly.

The statement paid tribute to the martyrs of Goa's freedom struggle and said that the military action, which the Government of India took after exhausting all avenues for a peaceful settlement with the despotic rule of Portugal, had the fullest backing of the people of Goa, Daman and Diu.

The statement said that the Government would have "no hostility towards the Konkani language which is the spoken language of the people of Goa."

The statement promised land reforms with a ceiling on rents; administrative re-organization; minimum wages for labour; expansion of primary education and the setting up of an Agricultural College and a Teachers Training College; introduction of rural health service schemes; improvement of the law and order situation and jail reforms; priority for the improvement of road communications; provision of cheap electric power to help establish large and small-scale industries; and fullest co-operation with the Government of India for developing the Marmagao harbour as a major port and naval base.

O. Safe Conduct To Mr. A. Z. Phizo: It was officially announced in New Delhi on January 2 that the Government had agreed to the request made by the Chief Minister of Nagaland, Dr. Shilu Ao, to give "a guarantee of safe conduct" to the rebel leader, Mr. A. Z. Phizo and his colleagues to visit Nagaland for talks with Dr. Ao.

Mr. Phizo and his colleagues were stated to have wanted a meeting with Dr. Ao and his Cabinet colleagues on the subject of "restoration of lasting peace in Nagaland."

Dr. Ao requested the Government of India to facilitate these talks. The date and venue of the talks will be decided by the Government of Nagaland with Mr. Phizo.

The rebel Naga leader crossed over to Pakistan from Naga hills and from there went to London three years ago. Since then he had been living in London as a guest of Rev. Michael Scott who made two trips to India recently and held unsuccessful talks with the Government of India and leaders of Nagaland to discuss certain terms to facilitate the return of Mr. Phizo to Nagaland.

The Government of India had taken the stand that it was for the Nagaland administration to take a decision on the issue.

What transpired between Mr. Phizo and the Nagaland administration since then is not known. It is, however, recalled that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister from Nagaland, Mr. Jamir, who is a close associate of Mr. Shilu Ao, had recently met Mr. Phizo in London.

P. Liberalization Of Prohibition Policy In Maharashtra: Beer, wine and other beverages with an alcoholic content not exceeding 3½ per cent will soon be freely available to the people of Maharashtra. This was one of the main features of the liberalized prohibition policy announced by the State Chief Minister, Mr. V. P. Naik in Bombay on December 31, 1963.

He announced that toddy with a similar alcoholic content would also be sold freely, but as it could easily be fermented or its alcoholic content increased, toddy would be sold only under Government supervision.

As arrangements for the production and supply of the beverages might take some time, he expected to introduce the new system on April 1, 1964.

Under the new policy, people who obtain foreign liquor against permits at present will be given a larger quota. People over 40 will be given permits on the advice of their private medical advisers. Those under 40 will have to get certificates from a medical board appointed by the Government, as at present.

Tourists will not only be allowed to buy more liquor, but also allowed to entertain or be entertained by Indians.

Mr. Naik made the announcement after a special Cabinet meeting. He said that the Cabinet was unanimous in its decision on prohibition, as had been the Cabinet sub-committee whose report formed the basis for the modifications in the policy.

He at the outset emphasized that the "basic policy of prohibition" was not being changed and that the State stood by the Directive Principle of the Constitution on prohibition. At the same time, he said, experience of prohibition over 14 years had shown that it had not been able to change the confirmed addict. Instead, a new tribe of illicit distillers and bootleggers had come into existence.

The new policy, he said, was aimed at ridding society of this tribe, which had grown out of unemployed toddy tappers not merely by deterrent punishment but also by making illicit operations difficult and gradually members of this tribe might change over to "profitable, productive purposes".

He appeared to be surprised by the large number of questions asked by correspondents. In reply to one question, he said that after the new arrangement had been working for some time it would be taken to its "logical conclusion." He did not elaborate.

On January 9, Mr. V. P. Naik said that the proposal to manufacture and distribute beverages with an alcoholic content not exceeding 3.5 per cent in Maharashtra from April 1 would be "postponed."

All other changes in the State's prohibition policy, including liberalization of permits he had announced would be implemented "even earlier" than April 1.

He modified his resolution at the suggestion of the former Chief Minister of Madras, Mr. Kamaraj, who said in a note that any prohibition policy decision should be of "an all-India nature".

At the same time, Mr. Kamaraj was understood to have suggested that the liquor permit system could be liberalized even further than proposed by Mr. Naik.

Mr. Naik had said on December 31, 1963 that permits would be issued to any one above 40 who produced a certificate from his "personal doctor" saying that it was required for the applicant's health.

Mr. Naik later said that a certificate issued by "any doctor" would be valid—apparently at Mr. Kamaraj's suggestion.

Q. Socialist Party's Annual Conference: Declaring that he was opposed to nationalized industries being run like private enterprises, the Socialist leader, Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia said at the open session of the Socialist Party Conference in Calcutta on December 31, 1963 that nationalization was not the only burning issue of Indian politics.

He also voiced his opposition to nationalization of banks and other industries on the lines favoured by the Congress Party.

He accused the Congress Party of trying to divide the Opposition by raising the issue of nationalization of banks.

He pointed out that if Rourkela and Jamshedpur were to be run on similar lines with the same structure of wages and amenities, he did not see why he should prefer nationalized industries to the public sector.

Expressing his keen desire for a merger of the Socialist Party and the P-SP, he appealed to the leaders of the P-SP to work out a way for this.

He clarified his inaugural speech on the question of the "united front." He said the Socialist Party had decided not on a policy of united front of all parties but on a policy of "united action" in respect of programmes.

The Socialist Party had also decided on a policy of electoral adjustment and "discriminating support."

The concluding session of the Conference was also addressed by Mr. Nollasivam, the new Chairman of the Party, and Mr. Maniram Bagri, MP.

Mr. Nollasivam declared that the ruling party had failed to bring any good to the people and therefore had to be dislodged.

Mr. Bagri called on the people to march to Delhi and oust the Congress from power.

New Chairman Elected:

On December 31, 1963, Mr. Nollasivam, MLA (Madras), was elected Chairman of the Socialist Party.

Mr. Golab Barbara (Assam) was elected General Secretary.

R. Jan Sangh Annual Conference: The President of the All-India Jan Sangh, Mr. Deva Prasad Ghosh, at the annual Conference of the party in Ahmedabad on December 29, 1963 called upon all nationalist parties in the country to "come nearer to one another and marshal their ranks" because a "veritable Congress-Communist axis is in the offing."

He said nationalist parties with similar aims and ideals should work in concert inside and outside the legislatures especially on issues where a "broad agreement existed between them." In electoral contests, they should come to an understanding so that nationalist votes should not be split.

In a criticism of the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, he said: "Communists in India after the Chinese invasion have, in sheer instinct of self-preservation, flocked round Mr. Nehru as their saviour."

He said under the cover of the Kamaraj Plan, Mr. Nehru had removed and appointed Ministers to suit the likes and dislikes of Moscow. "Both in theory and in practice," he said, "Mr. Nehru is leading us all down the slippery slope of communism."

He characterised as a "hoax" Mr. Nehru's remarks that he would not rest content or relax in his endeavour till India's soil was free from the aggressors' grip. It was meant to deceive the nation and lull it into a false sense of security.

"Mr. Nehru hopes that, in course of time, the people will forget all about the Chinese occupation, just as they have almost forgotten about Pakistani occupation of Kashmir, and worry about it no longer."

About Kashmir, Mr. Ghosh said Article 370 of the Constitution must go and all further parleys with Pakistan about the future of Kashmir must be abandoned.

He also criticized the idea of democratic socialism as a contradiction in terms and compared it with Orwellian concept as "luminous darkness or truthful lie."

Resolutions:

The plenary session of the Conference ratified the merger of the Jammu and Kashmir Praja Parishad with the Jan Sangh.

A resolution congratulated the Parishad for "its constructive lead" and said that this action would go a long way in forging direct political links between the people of Kashmir and the rest of India.

The resolution also demanded abrogation of Article 370 of the Constitution and construction of new roads linking Kashmir with the neighbouring States of Punjab and Himachal Pradesh.

By an amendment moved by Mr. Abdul Rehman, a delegate from Kashmir, the resolution demanded application of the Indian Constitution to Kashmir.

The delegates' session adopted a resolution demanding a thorough reappraisal of India's policy towards Pakistan. The policy should be realistic and based on the principle of reciprocity.

The resolution, adopted after incorporating some amendments, wanted the Government to treat Pakistan as a "hostile country" like China and take effective steps to get Pakistani aggression in Kashmir and elsewhere vacated.

Earlier, the party's working committee adopted a resolution on what it called "political gangsterism and police excesses."

The resolution said: "The committee is shocked over continuing reports from Uttar Pradesh, Punjab and Jammu and Kashmir about political gangsterism thriving with the active collaboration, or passive connivance, of the party in power and the custodians of law.

"As in all these States, political opposition to the ruling party is spearheaded by the Jan Sangh, our party has had to pay the heaviest toll to this outburst of goondaism manifested latterly in a series of murderous assaults on Jan Sangh workers."

S. Land Reforms In UP: The President has given assent to the Uttar Pradesh Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms (Amendment) Bill, 1963.

In a recent ruling the High Court of Allahabad held that certain zamindari areas in the State were not covered by the existing definition of the word "estate" occurring in the UP Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms (Amendment) Act 1958.

For the implementation of the scheme of land reforms throughout the State, it was considered necessary to amend the definition of the word "estate" so as to include all those zamindari areas which had been held not to be included within the present definition of that word and to provide for consequential matters. The Bill seeks to achieve this object.

T. Tikkarpara Dam Project In Orissa: The Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, laid on January 5 the foundation stone of Orissa's biggest multipurpose dam across the Mahanadi at Tikkarpara, about 133 miles west of Bhuvaneswar.

Estimated to cost Rs. 175 crores, the Dam is the core of the State's ten-year Development Plan styled as "Orissa's decade of destiny." Besides helping in flood control, the Dam is designed to produce initially 2,000 megawatt of hydel power and irrigate about nine million acres of land. Situated about 80 miles downstream from the Hirakud Dam, the Tikkarpara Dam will be 4,170 feet long, and 450 feet above sea level.

Earlier, Mr. Nehru laid the foundation stone of a 250-mw thermal power plant at Talcher in Orissa. He said that the electric power was a prime need for India's industrial development.

The Rs. 30.35-crore power station is being financed with a loan of $33 million by the US Agency for International Development. The first of the four units of the project each with a capacity of 62.5 mw is expected to be commissioned by August, 1965.

JAPAN

A. Withdrawal Of US Air Force Personnel: According to a US-Japanese announcement made in Tokyo on December 31, 1963, USA will withdraw about 3,000 Air Force men and nearly 2,000 civilian dependants from Japan next Spring.

At the same time some US Air Force units will be moved from Kyushu Island to Yokota near Tokyo.

Three US Air Force squadrons of the new F-105 fighter aircraft will be moved to Japan, while bomber units of the B-57 type will be withdrawn.

The shifting has been enabled by "the improved capabilities of the Japanese armed forces to defend their country."

The statement said there would be "no radical decrease" in the overall US forces and there would be no reduction in the capability of US forces "to carry out their responsibilities under the Japan-United States mutual defence relationship." Improved capabilities of the Japanese defence forces had made possible the reduction.

There are about 50,000 American troops in Japan now.

B. Court Ruling On Stationing Of US Forces: The Supreme Court ruled on December 26, 1963 that the stationing of US forces in Japan was constitutional.

The case known as the "Sunakawa case" dates back to July, 1957 when 360 students and trade unionists trespassed on a US Air Force base in Tachikawa in the outskirts of Tokyo opposing a runway expansion plan. Seven persons were arrested and tried on charges of violation of the special criminal law of USA-Japan administrative agreement.

Judge Akio Date of the Tokyo District Court acquitted all the seven defendants in March, 1959 ruling that the stationing of US forces in Japan was a violation of the Japanese Constitution.

The prosecution immediately appealed to the Supreme Court, bypassing the Tokyo Higher Court.

The Supreme Court in December, 1959 reversed the verdict and ordered a retrial.

In the retrial the Tokyo District Court in March, 1961 found all the seven defendants guilty of the charges and sentenced them to a fine of 2000 yen each The prosecution had demanded six months' imprisonment.

Both the prosecution and defence were dissatisfied with the verdict and appealed to the Tokyo Higher Court which in February, 1962 rejected the appeals and supported the lower court verdict.

The defence then appealed to the Supreme Court.

C. Return Of Defector To China: The Government announced on December 30, 1963 that it had decided to allow a Chinese Communist defector, Chou Hung-ching, to leave Japan for the mainland after January 1.

The Government took final action in the controversial case of the wavering defector 85 days after he scrambled over the wall of the Soviet Embassy in Tokyo asking for asylum.

Chou, a 44-year-old Japanese language interpreter who came to Tokyo with a Chinese technical mission, had become the object of a tug of war between Peking and Formosa.

The Foreign Ministry said the decision had been made after it was "ascertained that finally Chou's intention is to return to China."

Chou, after the Russians turned him over to the Japanese authorities, first said he wanted to go to Formosa, then stay in Japan or go to some country which did not recognize Peking.

After being visited by representatives of China, he suddenly demanded to be sent back immediately to the mainland and has since stuck to that stand.

D. Revolutionary Changes In Agriculture: Japan is passing through an agricultural revolution.

There is a radical change from traditional agricultural ways that until now have been considered an integral part of the very fabric of Japanese life.

Two weapons are being used—the internal combustion engine and chemical fertilizer. Using both in ever-increasing quantities, farmers have fashioned a new life for themselves. Production is up, costs are down, and hundreds of thousands of young people are leaving for the factories and mills of the cities.

Probably more than any single device, the tractor has made the difference for farmers. Japanese farms average only 2.5 acres each and in days now fast vanishing it was customary for all members of a farm family to enter the fields at sunrise and labour like beasts of burden until sundown.

Rice fields were ploughed with oxen or horses. The harvest was gathered on men's backs and threshed by sweating women. Today, more than 60 per cent of all Japanese farmers own tractors—more than 1.2 million machines. They are small machines, about 5 horse-power and the type a farmer walks behind as it crawls through the rice fields.

In searching for a solution to its own farm problems, Japan has developed skills and techniques that are eagerly sought after in other rice-eating countries. So, Japan now exports agricultural machines and advice along with rice.

E. Re-organization Of Shipping Companies: The re-organization of Japan's 90 shipping companies into six powerful enterprises each with a fleet of over one million tons and capable of effectively competing with the world's shipping lines was virtually completed on December 19, 1963 when Osaka Shosen Kaisha (OSK) and Mitsui Steamship Company signed a merger agreement.

The new firm which will start functioning on April 1 will control a giant fleet of 204 ships totalling 2,329,000 deadweight tons. The new firm, Mitsui-OSK, will thus be in the same class as the British P. and O.-Orient group which has a total tonnage of 2,194,320.

Two other groups headed by Nitto Shosen and Daido Kaiun merged on December 18, 1963 to give birth to the Japan Line, another of the six new giants.

A. National Assembly Elections: President Park Chung Hee's Democratic Republican Party secured an absolute majority in the National Assembly in the elections held in the last week of November, 1963.

Of the 175 seats, his party won 110 seats, while the Opposition Civil Rule Party won 41 seats. The remaining seats were to be divided in proportion to the seats won.

General Park won the Presidential elections in October, 1963 over the Civil Rule Party leader, Po Sun Yun by a margin of 1.4 per cent of the total 11,036,175 votes cast.

[The last legislative elections staged in August, 1960 had resulted in an endless squabble between factions of the Conservative Party to which General Park put an end in May 16, 1961 by staging the coup d'etat, and dissolving the Assembly].

All competing parties were pro-American and anti-Communist, but while the Democratic Republican Party sought strong powers for the President, the Opposition wanted the Assembly to check the executive, even threatening to impeach General Park as soon as the new Parliament is convened.

President Kennedy's assassination abruptly brought a truce in the electoral campaign when loud Opposition claims that the Government was planning to interfere in the voting had created a tense atmosphere.

The Home Minister and the Director of the National Police resigned in the wake of alleged exposes of Government instructions on the mobilization of votes.

Though the real fight was between the two parties, as many 12 parties were in the field.

The new National Assembly began its four-year term on December 17, 1963.

Gen. Park also took over as President on December 17. He declared that he would not permit dictatorship or what he termed incompetence masquerading under the name of democracy.

His assumption of power came two years and seven months after he seized the Government in a coup that, he said, was designed to protect South Korea from Communism and corrupt politicians.

He stressed the need for South Korea to achieve "autonomy, independence and prosperity" through its own toil.

He stressed two themes of his political philosophy: (1) South Korea must achieve greater independence from foreign influence and 'unsuitable foreign customs and manners"; and (2) the nation's ultimate goal is defeat of communism and reunification of the divided Korean peninsula.

The 46-year-old President dissolved his Revolutionary Council on December 16, 1963 but kept most of his colleagues in the Government's inner circle.

MALAYSIA

A. British Support: It was officially announced in Kuala Lumpur on January 6 that Malaysia and Britain had reached full agreement on measures to meet "Indonesian aggression with resolution and in unity."

They re-iterated their determination to resist the Indonesian confrontation campaign against Malaysia.

The decisions were announced in a joint communique issued at the end of the talks the British Defence Minister, Mr. Peter Thorneycroft, had with the Malaysian Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman.

Later, on his arrival in Singapore, Mr. Thorneycroft said there was no need for British troop re-inforcements in the Borneo territories, where security forces are opposing "intruders."

He said the forces there were adequate to the task assigned to them at present.

Asked about the possibility of Australian and New Zealand troops becoming involved in Sabah and Sarawak, he had "nothing to say."

Asked if there was evidence that Indonesian troops were participating in the attacks in the Borneo territories, he said it was a "question of insurgency" and it was "difficult to itemise." However, there was "little doubt" Indonesia was "playing a substantial part."

He described the position in Sabah (formerly North Borneo) as "a continuing situation." He added, in reply to questions, that a situation was always grave where one State was acting in an aggressive manner towards another.

Earlier on January 5 Mr. Thorneycroft, pledged that Britain would "stand shoulder to shoulder" with Malaysia in its struggle against Indonesia.

At an airport news conference, he said: "I come as a partner and an ally."

He said he would later go to Sabah State.

Asked about speculations that increased Commonwealth military assistance to Malaysia, particularly from Australia and New Zealand, would be forthcoming, he said it would be up to the Malaysians to request such a contribution.

He added: "Between us, Britain and Malaysia, we have sufficient forces to do the job that confronts us."

On Britain's defence commitments to Malaysia, he said: "There is no doubt about our intentions to honour to the hilt our commitments to you. We shall stand shoulder to shoulder in the gallant struggle you are making. That we shall do."

Indonesian View:

The Indonesian Defence Minister, Gen. Abdul Harris Nasution on December 4, 1963 blamed Britain for his country's conflict with Malaysia.

He called the British "the leaders of colonialism in South-East Asia" in an interview published in the latest issue of the Philippines Free Press.

He said Indonesia had no fear of attack by Malaysia.

The British, he said, were behind a plot to sabotage Maphilindo. "They wanted Malaya to be hostile to Indonesia and the Philippines. They pursue the policy of separatism. They want us to fight each other.

"We were ready to accept the United Nations survey results (on whether the people of North Borneo and Sarawak wanted to join Malaysia), but the British sabotaged the whole thing by announcing the formation of Malaysia even before the UN survey was through.

"They prevented our representatives on technical grounds from entering the Borneo territories during the UN survey."

He compared Indonesia's experience with colonialism with that of President G. A. Nasser's in Egypt.

British Payments:

In a written reply in the House of Commons on December 16, 1963 the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and the Colonies, Mr. Duncan Sandys, said Britain would make payments totalling about £1.5 million to Malaysian territories before the end of the current financial year.

He said Parliament would be asked in due course to vote the necessary supplementary estimates.

Advances totalling about £1,416,000 will be made from the Civil Contingencies Fund in respect of, among other things, the gift offered to the Borneo territories, the grants offered to Singapore, and the compensation scheme for Borneo expatriates.

He said: "An advance from the Civil Contingencies Fund may also be required in respect of the supply of arms and equipment."

Defence Expenditure:

The Malaysian Deputy Prime Minister and Defence Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, outlined in the House of Representatives on December 23, 1963 an expansion programme for the armed forces which will cost nearly £20 million. He warned that if the situation arising from the Indonesian "confrontation" deteriorated, he might have to seek supplementary funds during 1964. His proposals were approved.

They included the raising of an additional army brigade, which would be fully operational by 1966 and bring the number of brigades in the Royal Malaysian Army to five. Two battalions, to be known as the Royal Malaysian Rangers, would also be raised in the Borneo territories. Tun Abdul Razak did not say so, but it was generally assumed that one battalion will be recruited in Sarawak and one in Sabah (North Borneo).

There will be further expansion of the Territorial Army in Malaya and the Border Scouts in Borneo. The Navy and Air Force are also to be strengthened, and Labuan is to be developed as the main base in the Borneo territories.

B. Budget Estimates: The Finance Minister, Mr. Tan Siew, told Parliament on December 16, 1963 that the Federation Government was budgeting for an overall deficit of $511 million (Malaysian) (about £60 million) in 1964.

Of this, $226 million would be met by borrowing, and the remainder drawn from reserves.

He announced increases in the duty on alcohol and cigars and in taxes for non-residents.

He told Parliament that the Indonesian "confrontation" would cost the Federation $250 million (Malaysian) in a year. It had already thrown 10,000 Malaysians out of employment. According to him, Indonesia will be the major loser in its trade embargo against Malaysia. He added: "At the same time, it must be conceded that confrontation has had its adverse effects on our economy, too."

He said Singapore and Penang were the hardest hit, as they were the heavy traders with Indonesia. Elsewhere, the embargo's effects were limited to rubber mills in Johore State, to Malacca fishermen and to overland rubber importers in Sarawak. The effect of the embargo on living costs had been small.

He said that Britain had agreed to provide £15 million in capital aid for defence, and to bear the cost of raising, maintaining and training two new infantry battalions in the Borneo States of Sarawak and Sabah until the end of 1965.

It had also agreed to provide £2 million a year for five years for development of Sarawak and Sabah and had extended the period in which the Singapore Government could draw a loan of up to £5 million.

A. Hural Chairman Relieved Of Post: Tass said on December 25, 1963 that Mr. L. Tsende had been relieved of his post as Chairman of the Great People's Hural (Council). No reason was given.

The report from the Mongolian capital, Ulan Bator said Mr. Batochiryn Altangerel who was not previously listed as a member of the Administration, had been appointed to succeed Mr. Tsende.

The assembly of the Hural, which took the decisions, also appointed Mr. Sonomyn Luvsan as First Deputy Premier.

There are four other Deputy Premiers.

A. Issue Of Development Loan Bonds: The Government will issue development loan bonds from January 29 to raise Rs. 1 crore in Nepalese currency.

The bonds will carry an interest of 6 per cent payable every six months. This was the first time that Nepal is taking to public debt to mobilise resources for the three-year Development Plan, the second since the Kingdom's liberation from the Rana regime.

Nepal's First Plan was launched in 1956 while the current Rs. 67,00,00,000 (Nepali) Plan was launched by King Mahendra after his take-over in 1962.

The Plan is expected to lay a sound basis for achieving the long-range economic objective of providing employment to 150,000 persons annually.

Of the total outlay, Rs. 50 crores (Nepali) is to be met out of foreign aid; Rs. 21 crores is to come from the United States, Rs. 14 crores from India, Rs. 21 crores from the Soviet Union, Rs. 4 crores from China, Rs. 1.5 crores from the United Kingdom, Rs. 1 crore from United Nations agencies and Rs. 50,00,000 from other sources.

The total amount of foreign aid already made available is, however, far in excess of the estimated Rs. 50 crores which the Plan takes into account.

The amount committed under the Indian aid programme is about Rs. 29 crores, of which only Rs. 14 crores is included in the Plan. Similarly, the Chinese have promised an equivalent of Rs. 30 crores of which only Rs. 4 crores has been accounted for in the Plan.

B. First Divorce Case: Nepal, which had preserved its ancient laws until two years ago, had its first divorce case in the third week of December, 1963.

A regional criminal court confirmed the divorce of a Rana couple who had fallen in love and married only four years ago. They have a child under three.

Polygamy was prevalent in Nepal and divorce was impossible until two years ago, when King Mahendra introduced revolutionary legal reforms abolishing many customary practices and laws.

The King also introduced equality of law and equality before the law for all citizens irrespective of caste. Until then Brahmins stood on a different footing in the application of various laws and were exempt from capital punishment, however serious the offence.

C. New Data On Mara Civilization—Japanese Expedition Fails: Two members of the successful Japanese expedition to Mount Saipal returned to Khatmandu on December 26, 1963 after a vain search for some new data on Mara civilization, earliest known human settlement in western Nepal.

The two members, K. Fukuda and T. Matsumura, were part of the six-member expedition of Japanese students of Doshisha University. Two others, including the leader, K. Kojima, who climbed the peak, returned three weeks earlier.

Fukuda and Matsumura stayed back to collect information on the Mara civilization. Matsumura said all papers pertaining to the civilization were reportedly taken away by the Nepalese authorities from the local people. Mara kingdom used to exist in a place now called Gumagaon. The Japanese students could not get to another village also connected with the civilization.

PHILIPPINES

A. Land Reform Implementation: President Macapagal signed on October 14, 1963 an order requiring all executive departments, bureaux and offices to render full assistance to Government agencies implementing the Agricultural Land Reform Code.

The order was issued by the Executive Secretary, Mr. Rufino G. Hechanova "by authority of the President."

It stressed that the reforms contemplated by the Agricultural Land Reform Code were important and extensive. "Such complement and resources may be made available from other executive agencies of the Government without unduly impairing the public service."

Mr. Hechanova said the assistance of other offices under the executive department was essential to achieve economy and avoid duplication of efforts in the implementation of the intended reforms.

He ordered that the assistance be in the form of personnel and other resources available from the department, bureau or office concerned, and in terms of non-power, resources and other requirements of the project.

He added that the expenses to be incurred as a result of such assistance shall be changed to the account of the department, bureau or office providing the same, or to both in accordance with special arrangements made under existing laws or rules and regulations.

The new order authorized all executive departments, bureaux and offices to give full priority and immediate attention to any such request of the Land Reform Council made in proper form and by its authority.

B. New Diplomatic Posts: The Acting Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Librado D. Cayco, proposed to President Macapagal on November 1, 1963 the opening of 17 new diplomatic and consular establishments, including one in Kuching (Sarawak), a member of the Federation of Malaysia.

In a memorandum to the Chief Executive, Mr. Cayco sought the opening of diplomatic missions in Ottawa, Canada; Stockholm, Sweden; Vienna, Austria; Lisbon, Portugal; Ankara, Turkey; Brasilia, Brazil; Copenhagen, Denmark; and Kabul, Afghanistan.

He also recommended the opening of consulates-general in Calcutta, India; Rotterdam, Netherlands; Liverpool, England; Barcelona, Spain; Athens, Greece; Auckland, New Zealand; Miami, USA; St. Louis, USA; and Kuching.

Of the eight diplomatic and nine consular posts proposed by Mr. Cayco, four were in the Western hemisphere—one in South America, one in Canada, and two in the United States—and eight in Europe and five in Asia, including Australia.

The establishment of a consulate-general in Kuching (Sarawak) was considered significant, according to Foreign Office observers. Sarawak recently became a part of the new Federation of Malaysia, with which the Philippines has no diplomatic relations at present.

This indicated, the observers said, that diplomatic ties might be restored between the two countries.

THAILAND

A. Colombo Plan Consultative Committee Meeting: Ministers representing 19 member-Governments met in Bangkok from November 12 to 14, 1963 for a conference of the Colombo Plan Consultative Committee.

They discussed problems of economic development in South and South-East Asia.

Member-countries represented at the meeting were Australia, Burma, Canada, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Japan, Laos, Malaysia, Nepal, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand, UK, USA and Viet-Nam (RVN). Cambodia, another member, did not send a representative to the conference.

A communique issued after the conference said that the Committee reviewed economic development in the region during the past year and the progress of the Colombo Plan and that an assessment was made of the tasks ahead of the countries of the region.

The Committee noted that comprehensive and integrated national planning for economic and social growth was now a feature of the countries of the region. The rate of economic growth in the countries of the Colombo Plan area showed some variations with increase in gross national product of up to 9 per cent in the year under review.

On a per capita basis, changes in the national income ranged from a rise of up to 5 per cent to an actual decline in some areas. This was due partly to the high rate of population growth and partly to fluctuations in agricultural production which achieved at best no more than a slow rate of growth.

The rate of capital investment in many countries, however, showed significant increase.

In most countries of the area the share of industrial production, the value of national product showed a marked increase. Most of the development programmes emphasized the need to develop irrigation, the use of water resources and the introduction of improved agricultural techniques and reform and rural development co-operative enterprises and full exploitation of mineral resources.

There was a common concern with the creation of industrial infrastructures and the development of transport and power. There was growing awareness of the region to develop human resources through education, training and health and community training programmes.

The main factors contributing to the inflationary pressures in many countries of the region continued to be the relative inadequacy of domestic savings and the excess of Government expenditure over revenue.

Most countries have maintained food production at the 1963 record level in spite of less favourable weather conditions.

Although there has been an average annual increase in food production of about 3 per cent over the past decade for the region as a whole, rising population has absorbed two-thirds of this increase and the per capita rise in food output has been about one per cent.

The industrial sector has, however, continued to grow at the rate of about 8 per cent per year.

The communique also said that the value of exports from the Colombo Plan area rose by between 2 and 3 per cent. Imports into the area as a whole were between 5 and 6 per cent higher in value in 1962 than in 1961.

Foreign exchange reserves as a whole were much the same at the end of 1962 as at the end of 1961.

However, most countries in the area showed a rise in reserves in early 1963.

The total of all economic aid including technical assistance provided by donor-countries under the Colombo Plan since its inception has been $13,830 million. The value of such aid in the year 1962-63 amounted to $1,830 million.

The developed countries can contribute to the expansion of trade opportunities for developing countries by reducing the artificial restraints such as high tariffs, import quotas and high internal taxes.

Greater efforts should also be made by the developing countries to expand trading opportunities with neighbouring countries.

Continued attention should be paid to the important role of non-project assistance in aid programmes. Some countries have reached a stage in which the growing burden of foreign debt puts severe limitations on their capacity to borrow further and thus to press ahead with economic development.

Some donor-countries have improved the terms of their aid in recent years to face this problem of the developing countries, but more needs to be done.

Expenditure on technical assistance during the year under review increased by about $17 million to a peak of $118 million.

New training places provided under the Colombo Plan numbered 4,433 compared with 4,539 in 1961-62.

The next meeting of the Committee will be held in London in 1964.

Annual Report:

The following is a summary of the 12th annual report of the Committee which the members discussed:

The first chapter of the annual report for 1962-63 highlights the programmes of economic development in various countries, their problems and the prospects.

Another chapter deals with the progress of international co-operation under the Colombo Plan and the aid given by them to developing member-countries of the region.

The report says that the developing countries have continued to show progress in their economic development. However, the economic growth in the Colombo Plan region as a whole has fallen short of the goals of achievement most countries had set for themselves.

While economic progress has been tangible and the rising national incomes serve as a tribute to the efforts of these countries there is a general feeling that the performance can and must be improved. Monetary and fiscal policies and encouragement of savings must be used to counter inflationary pressures.

There should be a proper balance between consumption and investment and sufficient resources devoted to exports, the report said. Administration within the Government and within the economy must be regarded to the requirements of rapid economic growth.

Although there has been an average annual increase in agricultural production of about three per cent over the past decade for the region as a whole the rising population has absorbed about two-thirds of this increase and the per capita rise in food output has been about one per cent per year.

The growth of agricultural production is essential as a basis and counterpart of effective industrialization. Improved methods of cultivation and better organization are, therefore, necessary.

In the development of human resources there must be continued effort within a country to expand and improve programmes for development of human resources.

Further efforts by developing countries to increase their export earning are needed. Greater effort should be made to cultivate trading opportunities with neighbouring countries.

The countries of the Colombo Plan region should also approach more progressively the fostering of their tourist industries. These countries need the broadest possible market opportunities as well as appropriate internal policies to expand export earnings.

Artificial restraints such as high tariffs and import quotas constrain economic growth opportunities in developing countries and are likely to result in wasteful allocation or underemployment of the resources available to a country.

There is a scope for further improvement in the granting of capital aid and technical assistance from abroad. Non-project assistance in aid programmes to developing countries should be stepped up.

The report places high hopes on the forthcoming United Nations Conference on Trade and Development which will provide a forum for developing countries and more industrialized countries to discuss issues of common concern relating to an increase in world trade and the stimulation of economic development.

Colombo Plan Ministerial Conference:

The Colombo Plan Ministerial Council met in Bangkok from November 11 to 14, 1963.

Delegates reported to the conference the economic and financial position of the member-countries.

In their opening day speeches, the delegates stressed on development through trade and not aid.

Addressing the opening session, the late Prime Minister, Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat and the Thai Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, urged a stabilization of commodity prices and an opening of markets to manufactured goods from developing countries.

Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat said: "We all look forward to the implementation of such a policy, and I earnestly hope this conference will give the matter its serious consideration."

Mr. Khoman, who presided over the conference, said if the present trade trend of falling commodity prices and rising prices of manufactured goods could be arrested and reversed, "the development of less privileged nations would be more realistically assured than through minimal aid."

Indonesia's Air Communications Minister, Mr. Iskander, made an oblique reference to his country's break in trade relations with Malaysia. He stressed the "common heritage" and "close economic ties" between Indonesia and Thailand and expressed the hope that these would "become even closer."

Mr. Iskander, Malaysia's Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, and the Philippines' Foreign Under-Secretary, Mr. Librado Cayco, voiced full agreement with Mr. Sarit's statement stressing the need for stabilising the export earnings from primary goods.

Tun Razak also cited the high rate of population growth, lack of capital and shortage of skilled personnel as handicaps which South-East Asia's developing countries must overcome.

Mr. Cayco said "as a trading nation, we (the Philippines) are wedded to the philosophy of inter-dependence among nations. We fully realise that no country can be truly self-sufficient, nor can it long exist in isolation from its neighbours."

Communique:

A communique issued at the close of the conference on November 24 said that the economic development of several Asian countries had been hampered by their "growing burden" of foreign debt.

It said: "Some developing countries have reached a stage at which the growing burden of foreign debt puts severe limitations on their capacity to borrow further and thus to press ahead with economic development.

"Many of these countries are obliged to devote a substantial proportion of ourrent foreign exchange earnings to repay foreign debt."

The communique said agriculture appeared to be the "most sluggish and resistant to rapid growth" in countries of the Colombo Plan region. Although there had been an average annual increase in production of about three per cent over the past decade, rising population in the region had absorbed two-thirds of this increase.

"The industrial sector has shown considerable dynamism and continued to grow at a rate of about eight per cent per annum."

It urged developed countries to contribute to the expansion of trade opportunities of developing countries by reducing various artificial restraints such as high tariffs, import quotas and high internal taxes.

It said that the rising level of development expenditures imposed some strains on the stability of prices in a number of countries in the area.

"The main factors contributing to the inflationary pressures in many countries in the area continued to be the relative inadequacy of domestic savings and the excess of Government expenditure over revenues."

A statement entitled "Review of Economic Progress", issued at the end of the conference, said that there had been a steady increase in population in all countries in the region.

The statement said the last census carried out in 1960 showed that population was increasing at more than 2.5 per cent per annum in several Colombo Plan countries. But "there is an increasing awareness of the implications of population growth for economic progress as a whole."

B. Trade With UK: Trade with UK has expanded steadily.

Exports of Thai produce to the UK market have risen by 14 per cent, while imports to UK goods rose by 10 per cent.

In 1962 Thailand exported approximately 515 million baht worth (£8.5 million) of commodities to UK, compared with 435 million baht worth (£7.25 million) shipped in 1961.

Imports of British goods increased from 790 million baht (£14.7 million) in 1961, to 880 million baht (£14.75 million) in 1962.

Thai exports were mainly foodstuffs and timber, while imports from UK were chiefly chemicals, textiles, machines and automobiles.

TURKEY

A. Inonu Government Resigns: Mr. Ismet Inonu, the Prime Minister, and his Government resigned on December 2, 1963 and the resignations were accepted by President C. Gursel.

Mr. Inonu later had talks with Gen. Cevdet Sunay, Chief of the General Staff, and with political leaders.

The collapse of the coalition Government came about because two parties in it, the New Turkey Party and the Republican Peasants' Party, withdrew the previous week after suffering heavy losses in the provincial elections.

In the elections, the Justice Party won mayorships in 42 cities, against 23 taken by Mr. Inonu's party.

The administrative committee of the parliamentary group of the Republican Peasants' National Party decided on November 26, 1963 that the Party should withdraw from Mr. Inonu's ruling three-party coalition. A statement said the decision was taken because of the results of the previous week's local elections, in which the opposition Justice Party made substantial gains.

Mr. Ekrem Alican, leader of the New Turkey Party, which also belongs to the coalition, said a week earlier that he thought his Party would withdraw, as it had lost an important number of votes in the elections. The third Government party, and the biggest, is the Republican People's Party, led by Mr. Inonu.

Mr. Inonu told President Gursel on December 9 that his Party was not prepared to form a new coalition Government.

This was in reply to the President's request on December 7 that Mr. Inonu should form a new Government.

Justice Party Leader Asked To Form Government—Fails:

Mr. Ragip Gumushpala, a retired general and leader of the Opposition Justice Party, was asked by President Cemal Gursel on December 10 to form a new Government.

The Justice Party was called upon by President Gursel after a statement on December 9 by the Republican People's Party, the leading party in the outgoing coalition, that it would not enter another coalition until other parties had failed to form a Government. This followed the statement by Mr. Inonu that he had no wish to try to form another Government.

The Justice Party, with only 145 seats out of 450 in the National Assembly (Lower House) will not be in a position to form an administration alone, and the Prime Minister-elect therefore was expected to have a difficult time in the next few days in his attempts to put together a new coalition.

General Ragip Gumushpala, leader of the Justice Party, was the Chief of Staff before the Army overthrew Mr. Adnan Menderes in 1960.

He was prematurely retired when he refused to co-operate with the military junta and opposed the execution of Mr. Menderes after the Yassiada trials. President Gursel's invitation to him to form a Government indicated that the Army had at last been compelled to recognize the hard facts of Turkish political life and admit that it can no longer rule without the co-operation of the Justice Party.

President Gursel again called on Mr. Ismet Inonu on December 14, 1963 to form a new coalition Cabinet, following the inability of Mr. R. Gumushpala to do so.

The official announcement stating that Mr. Inonu, who resigned as Prime Minister on December 2, 1963 had been asked to form a Government said he told President Gursel he would give his reply after consulting his party.

Cabinet Crisis Deepens:

Fears that the ministerial crisis, already in its 22nd day, was about to enter a new phase were expressed on December 22 following the New Turkey Party's decision to set two conditions for signing a coalition agreement with the People's Republican Party.

After a long meeting on December 21, 1963 the New Turkey Party led by Mr. Ekrem Alican announced the conditions as: (1) the post of Vice-Premier should not go to the Republican Party, which already supplied the Premier; (2) application and execution of the five-year plan should be carried out by a Minister chosen from the New Turkey Party and not from the Republican Party.

Political circles considered the conditions to be an ultimatum aimed in particular at Mr. Ismet Inonu's righthand man, Mr. Turhan Feyzioglu, who in the former Cabinet held the post of Vice-Premier and was concerned with the five-year plan.

Mr. I. Inonu Forms Minority Government:

Mr. Ismet Inonu announced on December 23, 1963 the formation of a minority Government composed of his own Republican People's Party and a group of 32 Independents.

Out of the 450 seats in the National Assembly, he holds 207. In the event of a vote of no-confidence he will call for a General Election.

An absolute majority, since nine seats are vacant, is 221.

The Minister of Finance in the new Government is Mr. Ferit Melon; the Foreign Affairs Minister Mr. Feruin Cemal Erkin; the Minister of Commerce Mr. Senni Islimyeli; and the Minister of Industry Mr. Muammer Erten.

The Cabinet crisis lasted 23 days and in its last phases was influenced by the events in Cyprus and the mounting pressure for Turkish action in the Island.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Government Re-shuffle: The "Provisional" Government and the armed forces high command were re-shuffled on January 6 with a view to speeding up the war against the Viet-Cong.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Nguyen Ngoe Tho, announced at a news conference on January 7 the dismissal of the Information Minister, Maj-Gen. Tran Tu Ooat and the transfer of a few more portfolios to the Security Minister, Maj-Gen. Ton That Dinh.

Earlier in the day, Gen. Dinh relinquished his post as commander of the key Third Corps region. US authorities were known to have been urging Gen. Dinh to work either at his army post or in the Government.

The Head of State, Maj-Gen. Duong Van Minh, in a decree on January 7 gave overall command of the armed forces to Maj.-Gen. Tran Van Don.

Command of the Third Corps went to Maj.-Gen. Tran Thieh Khiem, former military security chief. The new Information Minister is Brig.-Gen. Doimau.

ASIAN RECORDER

January 29—February 4, 1964

ADEN

A. Airport Bomb Explosion—Yemeni Participation Alleged: Sharif Hussain bin Ahmad al Habili, Minister of the Interior in the Government of the South Arabian Federation, accused the Yemen Republic on December 15, 1963 of having plotted the "shameful and inhuman" bomb outrage at Aden airport on December 10, which killed one woman and injured 53 other people, including Sir Kennedy Trevaskis, the British High Commissioner for Aden and the South Arabian Protectorates.

Sharif al Habili said at a news conference: "We have not the slightest doubt about this and supporting evidence is as bright as the Sun. If any one is doubtful, let him just hear Sanaa Radio."

The Federal Government on December 15, for the first time, named the three suspects whom the police have been questioning "in direct connexion with the bomb attack". They were Khalifah Abdullah Hassan Khalifa, Muhammad Abdul Majid Mia, and Ahmad Nassir Kashbari. It is alleged that the first two are members of the pro-Yemen Republic People's Socialist Party (PSP) and the third man a member of the South Arabian League. A Federal Government Press release said that the police believe the bomb was thrown from the public gallery at Aden airport, where the three men were employed. They were present in the building at the time of the incident.

A statement distributed at Sharif al Habili's news conference said there was "overwhelming evidence" that the Yemen Republican authorities had deliberately instigated acts of violence against the Federation. Their agents had laid mines in federal territory, resulting in damage and many casualties. They had provided arms for, and engaged the service of, mercenaries from federal tribes to undertake subversive acts and stir up trouble.

The statement said that during the recent strike of labourers at the British military base, Sanaa Radio had tried to incite the workers to armed revolt. Facilities for training terrorists and saboteurs had been arranged and the Yemen Republicans had sent hand grenades into the Federation. Some of these grenades were recently seized from persons crossing into the Federation and these proved to be of the same type as that used on December 10.

In all these activities, the statement said, the Yemen authorities had had the collaboration of certain elements in Aden and elsewhere in the Federation, particularly the PSP, who had provided a locally slavish mouthpiece for the Yemen's abuse of the Federation. The recent airport outrage was clearly part of a plan directed against the Federation and calculated to undermine public confidence. It fitted with the openly declared intentions of the Yemen authorities and their collaborators in Aden.

Meanwhile, the Aden Trade Union Congress (ATUC) official has alleged that the police had raided the ATUC premises and confiscated Arabic typewriters, duplicators, and stencils. Police sources on December 15 confirmed the arrest the previous night of a member of a three-man ATUC delegation which met Sir Kennedy Trevaskis to protest against the recent detentions and deportations of ATUC members. Sir Kennedy told the delegation that the Federal Government had taken those measures, albeit with his support, and they were the correct authority to approach on the matter.

Statement In British House Of Commons:

The Joint Under-Secretary of State at the British Colonial Office, Mr. Nigel Fisher, said in the House of Commons:

"There is some reason to suppose that the bomb explosion at Aden airport on December 10 was, in fact, part of an organized conspiracy, rather than the work of an isolated individual."

He added that it was a "provisional assumption" as police investigations were continuing.

He gave the information in reply to a private question from a member who wanted to know why Mr. Abdullah al Asnag, the Secretary-General of the Aden Trades Union Congress and People's Socialist Party, had been taken, together with other leaders, to Kamaran Island.

Mr. Fisher told him that he had been misinformed. They were being kept inside the Federation. They were being detained because the High Commissioner and the Federal authorities "consider it a necessary step in the immediate interests of security."

The member, Mr. Thomson, expressing concern about this "apparently large-scale reprisal against the political leaders of the Socialist Party in Aden", wanted to know whether charges were to be preferred against them. Were the normal processes of law to be followed? he asked.

Agreeing that the measures being taken might appear "somewhat drastic to us in London", Mr. Fisher said the House should appreciate that they were being taken by the Federal authorities in consultation with the High Commissioner, in the light of their local knowledge and their responsibility for ensuring public security. It was something they must leave "to the judgment and assessment of the chaps on the spot".

More Bomb Threats:

Another secret leaflet appeared in Aden on December 21, 1963 threatening to blow up important Government establishments and saying that the grenade attack at Aden airport was "not the first of its kind".

The leaflet, type-written in English, was signed "Bomber" and said: "Give us the right to elect and be free from Bedouin Ministers."

A Federal Government spokesman commented that the leaflet was a further evidence of subversive elements still at large in Aden, bent on undermining stability.

Cabinet Resignation Averted:

An Aden despatch said on December 26, 1963 that Sir Kennedy Trevaskis was finding himself in a difficult political situation of his own creation. It arose when he allowed the South Arabian Federal Government to declare a State of Emergency after the hand-grenade outrage at Aden airport. On December 24 he averted the resignation of the whole Aden Cabinet, which demanded that Sir Kennedy should within 24 hours transfer all detainees to Aden State, release those against whom there was no evidence and try those against whom evidence was available, and lift the State of Emergency as soon as possible. The Aden Ministers agreed to extend their ultimatum pending another meeting which was held on December 26.

After this joint meeting of the Federal and Aden Ministers, Sharif Husain bin Ahmad al Habili, Federal Minister of the Interior and acting Minister of National Guidance and Information, said that after negotiations the Aden Ministers withdrew their threat of resignation and both parties agreed to meet soon with the Federal Minister of Internal Security to examine the general situation regarding detainees.

The Aden Cabinet threatened resignation after a visit by a delegation including Aden and Federal Ministers and Opposition members of the Aden Legislative Council to 30 out of the 57 detainees in Ahwar, capital of the Lower Aulaqi Sultanate of the Federation, on December 24. The delegation reported that the condition of the detainees, who were on hunger strike, was "bad". In solidarity with the Aden Cabinet, 16 Aden municipal councillors and 18 Aden representatives in the Federal Council (legislative body), too, have threatened resignation if the Aden Government's demands are not met.

The Federal authorities, having assumed power, appear to be strongly resisting Aden demands put through Sir Kennedy, who is thus under pressure from both the Federal and the Aden Governments. A compromise in at least transferring detainees to Aden appears to be an immediate necessity if the political tension and confusion in Aden is to be lessened. Already the Federal and Aden Ministers of Finance have resigned their posts allegedly in protest against the situation.

Mr. Ali Salem Ali Resigns:

On December 18, 1963, the Minister of Labour, Welfare and Immigration in the Aden State Government, Mr. Ali Salem Ali, tendered his resignation by telegram to Sir Kennedy Trevaskis, the British High Commissioner.

He said he had also sent his resignation to Mr. Zain Abdul Baharoon, Chief Minister of Aden, who was then in London for talks at the Colonial Office. In neither telegram did he state his reasons for resigning.

An independent politician, Mr. Ali Salem Ali joined the Cabinet in July, 1963. His presence was construed as tacit support of the Baharoon Government by the pro-Yemen Republic People's Socialist Party (PSP) and its Labour wing, the Aden Trades Union Congress. It was believed that his resignation was precipitated by the declaration of a State of Emergency throughout the Federation by the Federal Government after the bomb outrage at Aden airport. The Federal Government's action had provoked much resentment among Adenis, who considered it interference in Aden's internal security.

Mr. Ali Salem Ali's younger brother, Muhammad Salem Ali, vice-president of the PSP, was among the 52 people, mainly ATUC and PSP leaders, detained after the bomb attack.

A Federal frontier post at Kirsh, about 70 miles north-west of Aden, has opened for incoming traffic from Yemen. Four other posts were opened later. The Federation closed its frontiers with Yemen after the bomb incident, but two days later opened the frontier to outgoing traffic.

Curbs On Correspondents:

South Arabian Federal authorities on December 17, 1963 refused foreign correspondents in Aden permission to visit about 50 people detained outside the State of Aden following the bomb explosion at the airport.

A Federal Government spokesman said the detainees were still being interrogated and, therefore, no visits could be permitted.

Correspondents had asked to visit the detainees after an allegation by the Trade Union Congress that its Secretary-General, Mr. Abdullah Abdul Majid Alasnag, and two others were being "tortured".

The spokesman denied the allegation, and said a medical officer had examined the detainees.

A TUC spokesman said the police arrested the remaining two members of the three-man TUC delegation which at the week-end saw Sir Kennedy Trevaskis to protest against arrests and deportation.

The Government spokesman would not comment on the reports of the arrests and the raid.

A spokesman for the People's Socialist Party said the detainees in the Fadhli State of the Federation, about 35 miles east of Aden, had started a hunger-strike "until death" claiming they had been given poor food and living conditions.

The TUC spokesman said the Congress and the Socialist Party had cabled members of the British Parliament to send a commission to inquire immediately into the Aden situation.

Inquiry Into Torture Charge:

On December 29, 1963, the British High Commissioner, Sir Kennedy Trevaskis, asked the Chief Justice of Aden State to inquire into allegations of torture and brutal treatment of Adenis detained by the Federal authorities after the grenade incident.

An announcement said that Sir Kennedy's request was made with the agreement of the Federal Government.

Muhammad Hasson Ghanem, one of 14 detainees freed on December 23, 1963, speaking of conditions at Zingibar prison in Fadhli State, said the Arab officer in charge of the prison ordered Muhammed Salem Ali, Vice-President of the People's Socialist Party, to strip naked for refusing to surrender a transistor radio.

When other detainees protested, he yielded by allowing Ali to remain in his underwear, but later isolated him in a cell "full of mosquitoes and insects". Ghanem said he had not seen or heard of torture or beating of prisoners.

Three British Labour MPs arrived in Aden on December 29, 1963 on a fact-finding mission about the political situation in Aden, and two Scotland Yard detectives also came to help the Federal Government to investigate the grenade explosion.

The three Labour MPs who were stoned by tribesmen during a fact-finding mission to Aden returned to London on December 31, 1963 after completing their inquiries into the condition of political and labour leaders being detained in Fadhli State.

The MPs confirmed on arrival that they had nowhere found any evidence to support allegations of physical torture. They said, however, that the conditions in the early part of the detainees' imprisonment had been far from satisfactory.

Mr. Oram said: "Many were arrested at midnight or later and were driven 40 miles in open trucks wearing only their night clothes. For a certain number of days they were in very cramped conditions—up to 19 in a 15-foot square room. They had no beds or blankets."

Mr. Loughlin described the stone-throwing incident that prevented the Labour Party delegation from visiting the prison at Zingibar, the capital of Fadhli State. "It was clearly an organized demonstration", he said. "There were placards saying 'Down with colonialism' and 'Go back home'. As soon as our driver realized what was happening he put his foot down and went straight on. Things got a little out of hand."

Mr. Taverné said: "Now that we are back home we shall have talks with the Labour Party and also hope for a meeting at the Colonial Office with Mr. Nigel Fisher to discuss the whole situation in Aden, and in particular questions relating to Aden's internal security."

CAMBODIA

A. Proposal For Conference Of Geneva Participants—Clarification: The Government has issued a communique clarifying reports of its proposal for holding a conference to guarantee its neutrality (see page 5579).

The communique, released by the Cambodian news agency, pointed out that on August 20, 1962 the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, sent a message to the Heads of States or Governments of the countries which signed the Agreement on the neutrality of Laos.

It called on them to sign a similar Agreement guaranteeing Cambodia's neutrality and its boundary.

The communique said: "However, this proposal has failed to secure the unanimous concurrence of the countries concerned and has been shelved to this date.

"The replies to Prince Norodom Sihanouk's message of August 20, 1962 show that aside from our neighbours, Thailand and South Viet-Nam, which are extremely hostile to any international agreement in relation to Cambodia, certain Western and neutralist countries also deem it impossible to participate in the proposed conference. There is nothing to indicate that the situation has changed today.

"In view of this situation, the Royal Government believes that Cambodia's only and last recourse is to appeal to the 1954 Geneva Conference which ended the hostilities in Indo-China and explicitly guaranteed the peace and independence of the States in French Indo-China."

Judicially, it stated, the 1954 Conference still guaranteed respect for the signed Agreements and it was thus possible to appeal to the co-Chairmen of the Conference, Britain and the Soviet Union, to reconvene the Conference.

Therefore, the communique stated, the Cambodian Secretary for Foreign Affairs made a verbal communication to the British and Soviet Ambassador on November 22, 1963 and sent a message to the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference on November 24, 1963, calling in the name of the Royal Government for the convocation of an emergent meeting of the 1954 Geneva Conference participants "to study measures to ensure Cambodia's neutrality by international guarantee and supervision."

The communique stressed that the Royal Government would express great satisfaction if the co-Chairmen desired and were able to secure the participation in the proposed conference by the countries which signed the Geneva Agreement on the Laotian question on July 15, 1962. "In any case the only purpose of Cambodia is to obtain an international guarantee which will permit it to live in peace."

Non-Aggression Pact Offer To Thailand:

The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, offered on January 7 to sign an immediate non-aggression pact with Thailand to re-establish friendship between the two countries.

In an interview, he said that he would be willing to sign the pact to reassure Thailand "if Thailand does us the honour of considering us a militarily dangerous Power merely because we are going to receive modern French equipment."

He was referring to a statement by the Thai Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, expressing irritation at Cambodia's latest acquisition of French military aid.

Thai Reaction:

Mr. Thanat Khoman on January 11 rejected Cambodia's reported offer.

He told newsmen in Bangkok that there was no need to sign a pact because Thailand was party to the UN Charter which condemned aggression.

Thailand also did not have any designs on Cambodian territory.

Rapprochement With USA:

Addressing a conference of Buddhist monks on January 11, Prince Norodom Sihanouk said he was almost ready to patch up with USA and accept American aid.

[He had cancelled US aid (see page 5556) claiming that USA was supporting anti-Government plots.]

The Prince referred to a recent agreement for French aid, and said: "I am ready even today to accept any aid that the United States wants to give us under the same conditions that France is giving us—that is, without conditions.

"The United States will see that we are conciliatory and I hope it will not hesitate any more to take the tiny step remaining for us to hold out our hand."

CHINA

SUMMARY: Support To Splinter Groups In Communist Parties—Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit To Albania; Acting Premier Named; Population Control.

A. Support To Foreign Splinter Communist Groups: The Chinese Communist Party has come out more strongly than ever before in support of splinter groups forming in communist parties whose leaders follow the pro-Khruschev line regarded in Peking as "revisionist".

The Chinese Party hopes and apparently believes that these groups will gradually replace the present parties and their leaders who, it says, are becoming increasingly indistinguishable from Social Democrats.

Such a process, it believes, is already well-advanced in various Asian and Latin American countries and will also occur in Europe before long.

This is the interpretation given by observers to a speech by Mr. Chou Yang, Deputy Director of the Propaganda Department of the Chinese Communist Party's central committee.

He made a speech at an important meeting where Chinese social scientists, philosophers, historians, and other intellectuals were told to throw their weight fully behind the Chinese Party's struggle against "revisionism" (see page 5592).

China has given open verbal encouragement to rival communist parties or groups formed in Brazil, Ceylon, Belgium, and Australia among other countries.

Mr. Chou Yang justified the present split by saying that Marxism had always bred revisionists and opportunists. This was an inevitable process. "Everything tends to divide itself into two, and theories are no exception."

Chinese Communists, he added, now were the true standard-bearers of Marxism-Leninism against Mr. Khruschev and Soviet leaders who were trying to revise all Marxist tenets.

He said that Marxist-Leninists—in other words the Chinese Party and its supporters—"always treasure unity of the ranks of the proletariat but... must never cooperate with those who expunge the class struggle from the movement and must never surrender principle for the sake of unity."

He added: "It is precisely through repeated struggles against internal and external enemies of all shades that the forces of Marxism-Leninism have grown strong. 'True Marxist-Leninists' did not fear being temporarily isolated, for they knew that 'nobodies' like themselves represented the future. All great men were once 'nobodies'."

He implied that the policies of the Soviet Party meant that it was "bound to forfeit its place in the ranks of the vanguard of the international proletariat".

"In a number of countries the vanguard of the proletariat formerly standing at the forefront of the struggle is now corroded by modern revisionism while the proletariat and revolutionary people of many countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America... now stand in the front line of battle.

"In Europe, North America and Australasia, the leaders of certain communist parties are increasingly singing the same tune as Social Democrats in defence of the interests of imperialism and capitalism.

"They are expelling true Marxist-Leninists from the party and taking other measures to create splits. In these circumstances, political parties genuinely representing the revolutionary proletariat are bound to appear on these continents. Such a process is already taking place among some of the communists in Latin America and Asia.

"Some people who for a time fail to see things clearly and are misled by the revisionists will sooner or later learn from facts to part ways with revisionism and return to the road of Marxism-Leninism.

"In short, whatever the country or place may be, where there is oppression there will be resistance; where there is revisionism, there will be Marxism-Leninism fighting against it; and where the expulsion of Marxist-Leninists from the party and other measures are taken to create splits, new outstanding Marxist-Leninists and strong revolutionary parties are bound to emerge.

"Changes are taking place which are contrary to what the modern revisionists and modern dogmatists expected. These persons are creating their own opposites and will be buried by them in the end. This is the inexorable law."

Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit To Albania:

Albania, the only East European country to ally with China in the ideological struggle, played host to the Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai in the first week of January.

Mr. Chou En-lai took time off from his African tour to visit Albania for nine days from January 1.

On January 10 Communist leaders of China and Albania condemned the "rehabilitation" of Yugoslavia in the world Communist movement and called for a struggle against "modern revisionism and modern dogmatism."

This was stated in a joint communique signed by Mr. Chou En-lai and Mr. Mehmet Shehu, his Albanian counterpart.

The communique did not name the Soviet Union nor Mr. Khruschev, but observers noted that they were regarded in China and Albania as the chief exponents of modern revisionism, while modern dogmatists were party leaders who blindly followed the Soviet leadership.

The communique said: "The revisionist Tito clique of Yugoslavia has betrayed the socialist camp and become a special detachment of the US imperialism for sabotaging world revolution.

"The Tito clique opposed the socialist camp and did everything to undermine its unity. It also acted against liberation movements in Asia, Africa and Latin America and placed itself in the service of imperialism and neo-colonialism."

The communique was signed on January 8 following talks Mr. Chou and the Chinese Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi, had with Albanian leaders including Mr. Enver Hoxha, Communist Party First Secretary, and Mr. Shehu.

The talks covered bilateral relations, international affairs and questions of the international Communist movement and showed "full unanimity of views."

It condemned the Moscow partial nuclear test ban Treaty as a "delusion" which increased the danger of war, and called upon Communist countries and the international proletariat to support national and democratic revolutionary movements in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Speaking at Scutari, a lake town near the Yugoslav border on January 4, Mr. Chou En-lai said that Albania was not isolated, and though China was miles away the two countries were closely bound together by great friendship and unity.

He did not refer to Mr. Khruschev by name, but when he spoke of Yugoslavia and referred to Tito's clique he described the Yugoslav President as an "imperialist agent."

B. Acting Prime Minister Named: Mr. Teng Hsiao-ping was appointed acting Prime Minister of China during the African tour of Mr. Chou En-lai.

Diplomatic observers in Hong Kong said that Mr. Teng, who is 58, is the youngest of China's leaders. He led the Chinese delegation in the important ideological talks with the Soviet Union in Moscow during the Summer (see page 5376).

China had not appointed an acting Prime Minister since 1957, when Mr. Chen Yun, officially the most senior of the deputies, took over as he had done several times before, during Mr. Chou's absence abroad.

When Mr. Chou travelled to Nepal and Burma in 1960, and then to the Soviet Communist Party Congress in 1961, no one was named.

C. Oil Production: According to the Petroleum Press Service, China seems well on the way to becoming self-sufficient in the field of oil supplies, and thus dispensing with Soviet oil.

China's production of crude oil has grown from less than 1 million tons in 1955 to 5,800,000 tons in 1962, and about 7,000,000 tons in 1963.

At the same time its imports of Soviet oil which increased from 1,500,000 million tons in 1955 to about 3,000,000 tons in 1955, 1960 and 1961, declined to 1,855,000 tons in 1962. In 1963, these imports probably dropped still more. Soviet oil deliveries, which in 1955 represented half of China's oil supplies, represented only one-quarter of the supplies in 1962.

The Petroleum Press Service said that in 1962 the Chinese Government indicated that it would aim at self-sufficiency in five years but it now appeared that under the spur of its conflict with Russia, it was striving successfully to reach this goal in less than half the appointed time.

D. Population Control Campaign: Official publications and travellers from China report that a birth control campaign is being vigorously carried out throughout the country.

The Chinese Communists say they are not worried about over-population but are concerned about the "health of the mother."

China has an estimated population of 735 million. A recent issue of the newspaper Liberation Daily in Shanghai reported that more than 3,500 birth control centres had been set up in the city.

"Many local delegates to the National People's Congress," the paper said, "have made frequent tours of factories, schools and Government departments to inspect the progress of birth control there."

Another Communist publication in neighbouring Kwantung province said: "A documentary film on methods of birth control has broken box office records in the province."

Visitors from China report that sterilisation is offered free to all women.

E. British Exhibition Plans: A British Industrial Exhibition will be held in Peking from November 2 to 14 at the invitation of the Government of China.

The Exhibition will be sponsored on the British side by the Sino-British Trade Council whose members are the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, the China Association, the Federation of British Industries and the London Chamber of Commerce, and on the Chinese side by the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade (CCPIT). CCPIT is the Chinese organization through which the Ministry of Foreign Trade of China works to encourage overseas trade.

The Exhibition will be organized by Industrial and Trade Fairs Ltd., at the request of the Sino-British Trade Council and with the co-operation and full support of the Board of Trade.

The Exhibition will be held in the Peking Exhibition Centre and will occupy some 80,000 square feet of space. This is the first time any Western country has been invited to display its products in Peking on this scale.

The Exhibition will be concerned with capital goods produced by the engineering industries and with scientific instruments, measuring and control apparatus. It is intended that the exhibits should coincide as nearly as possible with the range of products normally purchased by the China National Machinery Import and Export Corporation (Machimpex). This includes all types of machinery, electric and non-electric, machine tools, agricultural machinery, vehicles, tele-communication and electronic equipment. No consumer goods or basic materials will be shown.

FORMOSA

A. Deposits Of Oil And Natural Gas: After a quest of more than 10 years, Formosa has succeeded in finding large deposits of natural gas and is increasingly hopeful that in due course oil will be struck in sizable quantities.

A geological survey indicates oil and gas-bearing strata underline nearly half of Formosa. The area includes the western plains and the eastern mountain range between Hualien and Taitung. Sandstone is the most important oil-bearing rock. Geologists have discovered more than 80 oil-potential anticlinal structures on the island.

Oil was first discovered on Taiwan in 1817 but was produced in only small quantities during the half-century of Japanese occupation. The Japanese drilled some 250 wells in various localities. The highest production was 143,490 barrels in 1927. Natural gas set a Japanese era record of 4,750 million cubic feet in 1940. After that, production of both oil and gas began to decline. By the time Formosa was restored to China in 1945, most fields were virtually depleted.

The Government-owned Chinese Petroleum Corporation (CPC) undertook an intensive search for oil. From 1948 to 1963, it drilled 50 wells. However, most produce natural gas and only small amounts of oil.

The Tiehchenshan field is the largest gas producer. Developed in 1962, this field is also the first discovery made by CPC geologists at a new anticline. CPC also has five Japanese-developed gas fields. The Chuhuangkeng field is in Miaoli county. Since VJ-day, CPC has drilled nine new wells, of which two have a combined daily output of 100,000 cubic meters. Also in Miaoli county is the Chinshui field, which covers 2,223 acres. It has 50 wells, but CPC keeps only eight in production.

Chinshui was the first field chosen by CPC for deeper horizon oil prospecting. Test drilling was conducted at Well No. 38 in the Spring of 1959. After two months, a rich deposit of natural gas was tapped at 4,063 meters. Geologists believe it contains approximately 6,026,000 kiloliters of crude oil and 903,900,000 cubic feet of gas. Current daily production is 100,000 cubic feet of gas and 65 barrels of oil. Other wells in this area turn out 600,000 cubic meters of gas and 164 barrels of crude daily.

In Hsinchu county, 50 miles south of Taipei, are the Chutung and Hsinying gas fields. The Hsinying field has 26 gas wells, nine of which are producing in small quantities. The only gas-producing field in the southern part of Formosa is the Chutouchi field. Five of its eight wells are producing a total of 10,000 cubic feet a day.

CPC made its biggest strike at Tiehchenshan, 30 miles east of Miaoli. The drilling of the 4,241.3-meter TCS-1 well, the deepest in South-East Asia, cost more than $437,500. Gas was found at a depth of 2,800 meters. The field now produces 130,000 cubic meters of natural gas a day.

Natural gas is an important natural material of high industrial value. Through condensation and extraction processes, the gas can be converted into gasoline, fertilizers, and many raw materials for the manufacture of petro-chemicals.

Formosa also converts natural gas into carbon black by channel process and compresses it into steel cylinders under a pressure of 110 kg/cm for fuel to operate trucks. A large proportion of the gas has been used to manufacture fertilizers.

In 1961, CPC signed a contract with the Mobil Chemical Investment Incorporation and the Allied Chemical Corporation of the United States to build a large urea plant at CPC's No. 52 natural gas well in Chinshui. Total capital is $22.5 million.

The plant, which was completed in October, 1963, has annual capacity of 100,000 metric tons of urea and 106,000 metric tons of ammonia to be used in the manufacture of fertilizer.

Natural gas also is a clean, economical source of fuel for household cooking and heating. One hundred cubic feet of gas is equal to from 8 to 13 lbs of coal.

CPC is planning a pipeline net-work linking Formosa's principal cities and will supply natural gas for industrial and household use.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Indian National Congress Session; Trade Agreement With Ceylon; Two Rockets Launched; Military Awards.

A. Indian National Congress Session: The 68th session of the Indian National Congress met near Bhuvaneshwar in Orissa under the presidentship of Mr. K. Kamaraj on January 9 and 10.

Mr. Kamaraj had been unanimously elected to that office by State units of the organization (see page 5583).

It was one of the most significant sessions in the history of the party, for it defined the party's goal in clear terms as "the establishment of a socialist State through parliamentary democracy".

It adopted several amendments to the party constitution to suit the requirements of the times and its new objectives.

It unanimously passed a resolution on democracy and socialism which "unfolds the vision of a society to be established on the basis of democracy, dignity of the human individual and social justice."

It re-iterated its faith in non-alignment through a resolution on international relations.

Another major highlight of the session was that it brought into sharp focus the differences between those wanting to quicken the pace of socialization and the others seeking transformation of society through a gradual process. They entered into a heated discussion on the resolution on "democracy and socialism" at the Subjects Committee stage. The draft of the resolution had been prepared by the Working Committee.

Critics called it rather vague and pressed for certain definite steps such as nationalization of banks.

The resolution was debated by the Subjects Committee for three days. Over 70 persons participated in the debate before the draft resolution was unanimously passed.

During the debate, the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T.T. Krishnamachari said: "The big danger today is posed by rising prices, the large amount of unaccounted money by commodity trade and tax evasion. We have to put it down."

He described the resolution as the blueprint for action for the next year or the next few years. The growth of the economy had been stupendous and the quantum of achievement something to be proud of.

The goal of providing a minimum national living standard was not so distant. It might be reached at the end of the Fifth or the Sixth Plan.

He did not think nationalization of banks advisable at this stage, but said it would be beneficial if such credit institutions brought more money into the field and could be used for development purposes.

Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon, former Defence Minister, and Mr. K. D. Malaviya, another ex-Minister, were among those described as the "Left" group, who wanted effective measures to curb monopolies and nationalization of banks. Those who opposed immediate bank nationalization included two former Ministers, Mr. S. K. Patil and Mr. Morarji Desai.

All the amendments (including the substitute resolution) except one were withdrawn after the mover, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, had given an assurance that the Congress Parliamentary Board would take active interest in the implementation of Congress policies and not confine itself to solving organizational wrangles alone.

The lone amendment, which was voted upon, was lost by an overwhelming majority and the resolution adopted amidst cheers.

After the Jaipur session, (see page 5522) several Pradesh Congress Committees had forwarded their recommendations to the A-ICC. Maharashtra asked for nationalization of banks, State trading in essential commodities and foreign trade and co-operativisation of consumer goods industries, the object being "to curb the ever-assertive monopolistic trends in the economy" and to "infuse a sense of urgency and definiteness." Rajasthan wanted "a ceiling on ownership of industrial units and other means of production or trade or business to safeguard against the development of monopolistic trends in trade, besides a ceiling on incomes of all sections of society." Orissa went even farther. The Congress legislature party in Punjab unanimously passed a resolution demanding the imposition of a ceiling on private wealth, nationalization of banks, export and import trade, etc. Gujerat struck a note of caution against over-enthusiasm for ushering in socialism, pointing out that it was incorrect to believe that nationalization of industries was the only path to socialism. However, it wanted definite steps to remove the disparity between the highest and lowest incomes, though the ceilings "must be reasonable and just."

Mr. K. D. Malaviya's Draft Resolution:

In a draft resolution entitled "Democracy and Socialism" which he moved at the Congress session, Mr. Keshav Dev Malaviya, former Central Minister, would have the A-ICC re-iterate the need to work "more vigorously and purposefully" for a socialist society which must "commit the Government to a concrete programme of socialism."

He said the programme of socialism must consist of:

(1) A more commanding height to the public sector;

(2) Wholesale trading in foodgrains along with fixation of prices for farm produce;

(3) Credit facilities to farmers;

(4) Nationalization of banks;

(5) Ceilings on the value of industrial licences given to individuals;

(6) Re-organization of services; and

(7) Delinking of the Press from industrial and business houses.

Presidential Address:

In his presidential address, Mr. K. Kamaraj suggested the appointment of a commission, on the British pattern, to keep a check on monopolies, a Ministry for development of backward areas, free education up to the secondary stage, a re-adjustment of taxation and other policies to reduce economic disparities and pensions for the old and the infirm.

He spoke in Tamil.

He hoped that it would be possible to establish a socialist society without class conflict.

He wanted State Governments to be encouraged to go in for several medium-size industries as public sector projects. Congress policies, he said, were not directed against private enterprise as long as it was identified with individuals exercising an initiative for the common objective of planned progress.

He commended the idea of Congress leaders in the administration periodically exchanging positions with those in the organization, so that the tendency to form groups in the organizational and legislative wings would be greatly reduced.

He appealed to all those who had faith in democracy and socialism to join the Congress. This appeal was particularly directed at those who had left the party because of a feeling that the party would not take a definite stand in favour of socialism.

Working Committee Members:

Of the 20 members of the Congress Working Committee, apart from Mr. K. Kamaraj, 13 are nominated and seven elected.

The members elected by the Bhuvaneshwar session were Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Mr. Sadiq Ali, Mr. G. Rajagopalan, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, Mr. B. Patnaik and Mr. Mohanlal Sukhadia.

Thirteen members contested the election, the others being Mr. C. B. Gupta, Mr. Mahavir Tyagi, Mr. K. D. Malaviya, Mr. S. N. Mishra, Mr. K. Hanumanthaiya and Dr. H. K. Mahatab.

Among the newly elected, five were members of the outgoing Working Committee. They were Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Chavan, Mr. Rajagopalan, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh and Mr. Sadiq Ali.

Mr. Patnaik and Mr. Sukhadia replaced the other two elected members, Dr. Harekrushna Mahatab and Mr. Darbara Singh.

Four hundred and thirty members of the A-ICC participated in the voting.

The following are the votes polled by each candidate:

Mrs. Indira Gandhi (347), Mr. Sadiq Ali (324), Mr. G. Rajagopalan (318), Dr. Ram Subhag Singh (318), Mr. Y. B. Chavan (313), Mr. Biju Patnaik (293), Mr. Mohanlal Sukhadia (268), Mr. C. B. Gupta (160), Mr. Mahavir Tyagi (195), Mr. K. D. Malaviya (107), Mr. Shyam Nandan Mishra (105), Dr. H. K. Mahatab (88) and Mr. K. Hanumanthaiya (78).

On January 11, Mr. Kamaraj nominated the following persons to the Congress Working Committee:

Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Mr. Morarji Desai, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. S. K. Patil, Mr. D. Sanjivayya, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy, Mr. Atulya Ghosh, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Mr. S. Nijalingappa and Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda.

Mr. G. Rajagopalan was appointed General Secretary and Mr. Atulya Ghosh was named Treasurer.

Resolution On "Democracy And Socialism":

In the principal policy resolution on "Democracy and Socialism," the Congress gave the highest priority to assuring as speedily as possible a national minimum in essential requirements to every citizen in respect of food, clothing, housing, education and health.

The 3,000-word resolution, prepared by the Nehru drafting committee set up by the Congress Working Committee, and unanimously adopted on January 10 indicated the broad pattern of action and policies to be pursued by the Congress as the ruling party at the Centre and in the States to establish a "socialist State based on parliamentary democracy."

It laid stress on reducing the "vast disparities in income and wealth which exist now."

It indicated that the objective of attaining the national minimum was expected to be realized by the end of the Fifth Plan. "Otherwise the planning and progress will become devoid of meaning for the common man."

The resolution seeks to limit private incomes on properties. "This limitation should apply especially in respect of inherited wealth and urban property. The State should secure a large share of capital gains and appropriate a much larger proportion of unearned income than is being done at present.

"Government should place itself in a position more effectively than is the case now to direct the means of credit and investible resources of the country along the lines of national priorities and our social purposes.

"At present small entrepreneurs and newcomers are placed under a serious disadvantage in respect of availability of financial resources. There is also need for further steps for the removal of abuses and malpractices in financial institutions."

The resolution suggested systematic and strong action against "anti-social forces which pose a threat to democracy and socialism."

"Speculative gains, the illegitimate incomes in a variety of forms and evasions of obligations under various laws have led to the presence of large amounts of unaccounted money in the hands of unscrupulous individuals.

"The activities of such anti-social elements result in large distortions in the economy and the unhealthy tendencies which they release can undermine the foundations of the social and political life of the country."

It called upon the State to take over progressively operation of rice mills and other units for processing agricultural produce, and suggested that the State should run these units until it was feasible to operate them under "co-operative management." Marketing of all agricultural produce should be through the agency of co-operatives to the utmost possible extent.

These are some of the steps that have been suggested "to obviate the excessive margin of middlemen and to help to ensure a fair line for the producer as well as the consumer."

The resolution gave to the public sector a strategic and predominant role in trade and industry. "The public sector must grow progressively in large-scale industry and trade as well as in the field of heavy and basic industries and trade in essential commodities.

"The private sector has an important role in the economy of the country. It will have to play its part within the broad strategy of the national plan of development."

Resolution On International Affairs:

Moving the resolution on international affairs on January 9, Mr. Morarji Desai expressed grave concern at the attacks on minorities in Khulna and Jessore in East Pakistan and hoped that Pakistan would take steps to curb these incidents lest they should lead to more serious consequences.

He said: "The happenings in Khulna and Jessore have pained us extremely. Pakistan must realize that this kind of thing, if not curbed, can lead to very bad consequences".

The manner in which some people in Pakistan were trying to exploit the unhappy incident at the Hazratbal shrine in Kashmir was extremely regrettable.

Unfortunately, Pakistan's attitude towards India had always been such that she exploited every possible opportunity to create difficulties for India. Her hob-nobbing with China was a glaring example.

"We wish to live in peace with Pakistan. We have made repeated offers of a no-war pact, but she has been rejecting them. We want to settle all our differences with Pakistan amicably. We are hopeful that she will some day see reason, realize the folly of her attitude and accept the hand of friendship extended by India".

He said that with China also India was anxious to settle her dispute amicably. But if the Chinese refused to vacate Indian territory "we should keep ourselves prepared to turn them out by force".

The resolution, the key-note of which was promotion of peace in the world, said that India had adopted and consistently pursued a policy of freedom from entanglements with the world blocs. It gave full support to UN in its effort to rid the world of the "scourge of war" and said this could only be realized by full and complete disarmament and the outlawing of war.

It welcomed the statements made by the US President, Mr. L. B. Johnson that he intended to pursue the policy and the approach that had led to the partial nuclear test ban agreement and to follow up the good results of the atmosphere created.

It also welcomed the initiative taken by the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev in proposing the adherence of nations to a

"no war" agreement, thereby renouncing the use of force in settling international disputes.

It also re-iterated the party's support to the Government's acceptance of the Colombo proposals, which made it clear that while India sought a peaceful approach to the problem, it was equally resolved not to yield to aggression or acquiesce in the surrender of national sovereignty.

The resolution was unanimously adopted on January 10.

Amendments To Party Constitution:

On January 9, the Congress passed a resolution on amendments to the party's constitution.

One of the amendments to the party constitution related to the object of the Congress which, in future, shall be "the establishment in India, by peaceful and constitutional means, of a socialist State based on parliamentary democracy".

Another amendment prescribed the qualifications of an active member of the Congress, who is to collect Rs. 12 annually and enrol 50 primary members each year.

The session also adopted resolutions condoling the death of Dr. Rajendra Prasad, Mr. Purushottam Das Tandon, Dr. B. C. Roy, Mr. M. S. Kannamwar and several other Congressmen who had died since the last session at Patna.

A separate resolution, condoling the death of President J. F. Kennedy, said that the late President in his short term of office "contributed greatly to the reduction of world tension and to the promotion of world peace."

Session Ends:

The 68th session of the Congress ended on January 10 with an appeal by Mr. K. Kamaraj in his closing address to all those who genuinely believed in democratic socialism to unite in the common effort to establish a socialist State in the shortest possible time.

He said that a truly socialist society could only be built up if the people were vigilant and alert and were conscious of their rights and responsibilities.

His directive to Congressmen was to spread out and work with the people in the task of establishing a socialist State.

He said that the first duty was to raise the standard of life of the people through effective industrialization.

He declared that it was only on the basis of industrialization that the national wealth could be increased, and the poverty and ignorance in which the people were steeped could be eradicated.

For the last 15 years or so, owing to various measures taken by the Government, the national wealth had increased. "But that wealth is now being used by a very few people."

He said that as a result of the various steps that are being taken, and would be taken, wealth was bound to accumulate in the future. The problem was how this increased wealth should be used for the benefit of all the people. On this depended the establishment of a socialist State.

He said: "We are trying to prevent the accumulation of wealth in a few hands. Those who are in possession of this wealth will naturally oppose our efforts. Therefore we have to be vigilant."

He said to achieve equitable distribution of wealth, all those who believed in democratic socialism should come together. "Some people have gone away from this organization. There are others outside the Congress who believe in socialism. It is necessary for all of them to unite. I appeal to them to come and join the Congress in great numbers."

Mr. Nehru's absence from the session somewhat robbed the proceedings of its vigour and dimmed the enthusiasm of the people. This was the first time in the post-independence history of the Congress that the Prime Minister was absent from an annual session.

The session was described by many delegates as one of the most important and significant in recent years both from the point of view of the organization and the economic policies of the Government.

Mr. Nehru's Illness:

The Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru who had come for the Congress session was taken ill on January 7. He could not attend the rest of the Subjects Committee meetings and the plenary session for the first time in several years.

A medical bulletin issued on January 7 said: "The Prime Minister has been working under great strain for some weeks as a result of which his blood pressure has shown a tendency to be high. This morning he felt very tired and weak. It was, therefore, decided to send for the doctors who have been attending on him in Delhi. They have examined him and are hopeful of quick recovery within a short time. They have, however, advised complete rest and cancellation of all engagements for the present. The Prime Minister is cheerful and in good spirits."

Subsequent bulletins reported steady progress in his condition. He returned to New Delhi on January 12.

B. Trade Agreement With Ceylon: The Indo-Ceylonese trade talks concluded in New Delhi on January 13 with an Agreement on the goods to be exchanged between the two countries during the current calendar year.

Measures for a smoother and quicker flow of goods on either side were also discussed.

Details of the arrangement for 1964 are more or less on the lines of those for 1963. This is subject to the ratification of the two Governments.

The arrangement for 1963 provided for the exchange of certain specific commodities like dried fish, cane, jaggery and tamarind from India and rubber and copra from Ceylon.

In the agreed minutes signed by the two delegations the exchange of specific commodities between the two countries in 1964 would amount to Rs. 7 crores out of an overall annual trade of about Rs. 22 crores both ways. The working of the arrangement is to be reviewed once in three months.

Ceylon was understood to have submitted a list of engineering goods, machine tools, textile looms and lathes which she would like to buy from India. The purchases are to be made under the credit of Rs. 5 crores offered to Ceylon by India under the Indo-Ceylonese Trade Agreement of 1961. India will examine whether she is in a position to supply these goods and further discussions will be held later.

The Ceylon delegation for the talks were led by Mr. G. V. P. Samarasinghe, Director of Commerce, and the Indian delegation by Mr. D. K. Srinivasachar, Joint Secretary, Ministry of International Trade.

C. Mechanical Instruments Plant In Kerala—Contract With USSR Signed: A contract with USSR for the preparation of the detailed project report and working drawings for the establishment of a mechanical instruments plant in Palghat (Kerala) was signed in New Delhi on January 10.

The contract was signed by Mr. S. Ranganathan, Secretary, Ministry of Industry, on behalf of the Government of India and Mr. N. M. Silouianov, Counsellor for Economic Affairs of the USSR Embassy.

Soviet technical assistance for the project will be financed out of the credit already extended by USSR to India.

The Palghat project, which will be the second instruments plant to be set up in the public sector with Soviet assistance, will have a total annual production capacity of 2,871 tons of mechanical, hydraulic and pneumatic instruments including pressure, vacuum, flow and level measuring instruments, control apparatus, automatic hydraulic regulating units and control desks for various devices.

The detailed project report of the plant will be prepared by a Soviet designing institute on the basis of the memorandum of instructions recently approved by the Government of India and will provide for the establishment of machine and assembly shops, auxiliary shops, designing department, special designing bureau and other services necessary for the running of the plant.

The project report for the Kotah precision instruments plant to be established in Rajasthan has been received and is under consideration; when these two plants go into full production, the increasing needs of process control instruments for Indian industries can be largely met and a saving of foreign exchange of Rs. 20 crores annually can be effected.

D. Second Rocket Launched: India made further progress in rocketry and outer space research on January 8 when it fired the second sounding rocket from the Equatorial rocket launching station at Thumba, 15 miles from Trivandrum.

The rocket was as successful as the first one fired on November 21, 1963.

The photographs taken from the four observation stations at Kanyakumari, Kottayam, Kodaikanal and Palayamkottai were better and clearer this time than those of the first rocket firing.

Dr. Vikram A. Sarabhai, Chairman of the Indian National Committee for Space Research (INCOSPAR) said the shot appeared to have gone right through the electro-jet unlike the last one. He said some difference was also noticed in respect of the ejection of vapour. The reasons for this could be definitely known on comparing the illuminosity from the photographs taken on the previous occasion and now.

Third Rocket:

The first series of rocket launchings from the Equatorial sounding rocket base at Thumba to probe outer space ended on January 12 with the launching of the third rocket.

The rockets, launched with sodium vapour payloads, were for the study of atmospheric winds, turbulence, diffusivity and temperature at high altitudes.

The vapour clouds released by the rockets had been photographed by special cameras from Kanyakumari, Palayamkottai, Kottayam and Kodaikanal. It will take six months to analyse the photographs and obtain results.

Magnetometer experiments were due to be conducted from Thumba from January 25.

The third rocket had a perfect launching according to Mr. H. G. S. Moorthy, test director of the project.

He said there was no simultaneous firing of a rocket from the launching base near Karachi. Pakistani scientists, he added, informed them at 1-45 a.m. that they were not prepared for the simultaneous launching.

F. Role Of Private Sector In National Income: The private sector, including the agricultural and services sectors, is responsible for 90 per cent of the national income, organized industries alone contributing 20 per cent.

Reviewing the part played by private enterprise in building up the country, a brochure by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry released in New Delhi on January 5 claimed that private investment has proved to be more productive than Government effort. In the first two Plans, the private sector accounted for 50 per cent of the national investment and more than 80 per cent of the additional income.

The Federation study made a pointed reference to the handicaps which had slowed down the progress of private enterprise. Apart from the Industrial Policy Resolution which has reserved some areas exclusively for the State, these included the delay caused by Government procedures in granting industrial licences, permission for capital issue and in clearing foreign collaboration arrangements.

Total investment by the private sector during the first decade of development aggregated Rs. 4,900 crores, including Rs. 1,400 crores or 28 per cent in the organized sector, mining and small industries. The output of private industrial units and mines went up by 100 per cent during the first two Plans and was expected to register a further rise of 60 per cent in the Third Plan.

Nearly 95 per cent of the output of organized industries was in the private sector in 1960-61 and their contribution to the national income went up from 5.8 per cent in 1950-51 to 10.5 per cent in 1960-61. The contribution of the small entrepreneur to the national income increased by 24 per cent.

Particularly significant production increases occurred in electrical equipment, transport equipment and non-metallic minerals, the output going up respectively 5.1 times, 4.1 times and 4.1 times. Increases in other sectors were: base metals 2.4 times, machinery 2.2 times, chemicals 1.9 times, rubber and leather products 2.1 times and food-processing industries 2.4 times.

Between 1956 and 1960 no less than 188 new items of manufacture were added in the private sector, 106 being in the engineering sector and 82 in chemicals and other industries.

A major part of the resources needed to finance this development and expansion was provided by industry itself. Undistributed profits and surpluses accounted for 62 per cent of the total investment in the First Plan and 47 per cent in the Second. The figure for the current five-year period is expected to be about 48 per cent.

The private sector also helped by providing almost the whole of Government's income-tax revenue accruing from industries. This came to Rs. 788 crores during the first decade of planning. The contribution by way of excise duties was Rs. 2,020 crores. Additional employment provided by private organized industries was 10,00,000.

G. Bhilai Steel Plant Targets Fulfilled: The Bhilai Steel Plant successfully fulfilled its production targets for all major products for 1963, according to an official annual report released in Raipur on January 2.

During the year 153,000 tons of pig-iron, 124,000 tons of steel and 80,000 tons of saleable steel were produced, which were above the annual rated capacities of the respective shops. Expansion works were in progress.

The actual production of 'hot metal' (pig-iron) during the year was 1,263,989 tons against the annual rated capacity of 1,110,000 tons.

H. Lt.-Governor's Address To Goa Legislature: The Lieutenant-Governor of Goa, Mr. M. R. Sachdeva, said in his address to the State Assembly in Panjim on January 13 that the Central Government was taking steps to develop Marmagao as a civil port and naval base.

A development committee had been formed with himself as chairman to tackle development problems.

He said that the welfare of the people of the Union Territory must be paramount. "This will require patience, hard work, skill and, above all, deep understanding of the problems involved.

"The torch of freedom has been lit. You are the first torch-bearers of the freedom that has come to the territory. Let the torch always remain alight and ever burn brighter and brighter".

During the two years following liberation, steps had been taken to bring the administration and the pattern of work more or less in line with the rest of the country. A three-year Plan, corresponding to the country's Five-Year Plan had been introduced and steps taken to implement it.

He said that for 1964-65 the Planning Commission had approved an outlay of Rs. 7,61,63,000 to be spent on intensification of agricultural production and development of power, tourism, industries, education, health and fisheries. Money had been provided for the construction of the Mandovi bridge and the Daman-Ganga bridge. Preliminary investigations for a bridge over the Zuari and on improvement of roads and communications in the territory had also been approved.

Energetic steps had been taken to develop electric power.

Deposits of iron-ore had been computed by the Geological Survey of India at 500 million tonnes of 58 per cent grade. Export of iron and manganese ores during 1962-63 was 5,334,000 tonnes against 5,278,000 tonnes in the previous year.

Goa had been selected, along with 45 districts in India, for a rural industries project.

IRAN

A. French And West German Credits: France has granted Iran credits for 300,000,000 francs ($60,000,000). A protocol to this effect was signed in Paris on December 13, 1963 by Dr. Alikhani, the Minister of Economy, and the French Minister of Industry, Mr. M. Bokanovsky.

The credit is to carry a five per cent interest and the sums used for each project are repayable in instalments over a period of ten years from the date of the completion of the project. The credits must be utilized for the purchase of French machinery or to meet the costs of French consulting engineering firms. Iran will continue to submit requirements to international tender and credits will only be used when and where French firms are awarded contracts. The protocol stipulates that the credits must be utilized in 1964 and 1965, no funds being available after December 31, 1965. Considerable expansion of Iran's petro-chemical industry, electrical power net-work and communications system is envisaged.

Meanwhile, the Director of the Plan Organization, Mr. Safi Asfia, was in West Germany to sign executive Agreements for DM123 million out of a total credit of DM200 million ($50 million) to Iran. The DM123 million have been earmarked for use on the Sefid Rud Dam project and its irrigation net-work. Discussions also took place on the utilization of the remaining DM77 million which were originally intended to help the NIOC finance its projected refinery-pipeline complex near Tehran, but since the NIOC has secured the necessary funds from a consortium of French and West German private firms, the Government has turned the credit over to the Plan Organization.

IRAQ

A. New Army Appointments: A message on December 17, 1963 said that another series of senior appointments in the Army had been announced and a new head of the Air Force named.

Brig. Abdul Rahman Arif was appointed Deputy Chief of Staff and Commander of Field Forces, and Colonel Arif Abdul Razzak, who was Minister of Agriculture, became Commander of the Air Force.

Colonel Arif is a brother of President Arif and as a Divisional Commander helped materially in November to seize power from the Baath. The Chief of Staff is presumably still Lieutenant-General Taher Yahya who in November became Prime Minister.

Colonel Razzak is the man who as Commander of the Habbaniya air base last February, sprang the revolt against Major-General Kassem. He then seemed to fall out with the Baathist Government, but after the November coup he appeared in the Cabinet in the unlikely post of Minister of Agriculture.

Brig. Hardan Takriti was the Air Force Commander and in November was made Minister of Defence. His position vis-a-vis both President Arif and the Baath has been obscure.

The other Army posts now filled are the commands of four of Iraq's five divisions. The new regime, in November decided that whoever filled the divisional commands should automatically be among those on the Revolutionary Council.

All these moves, said The Times, London, may mean a shift towards the Arab nationalists as opposed to the Baathists, in which case there would be a slight turn towards President Nasser.

ISRAEL

A. Budget For 1964: Presenting the State Budget totalling I£3,465,000,000 to the Knesset on December 23, 1963, the Finance Minister, Mr. Pinhas Sapir, appealed for restraint in claims for increased wages and profits to enable the country to maintain the economic stability of the previous year.

The following are the main points of Mr. Sapir's Budget speech:

"Our major effort during the past years has been directed first and foremost to the maintenance of stability—in wages, taxes, production costs and prices. Now, at the end of this year, I can say with confidence and satisfaction that these efforts have been crowned with success, in spite of weighty obstacles and pressures operating in the contrary direction.

"The principal aims of our economic activities are: rapid development of the economy; improvement of the balance of payments; full employment; a just distribution of incomes; a stable and realistic rate of exchange; dispersal of the population.

"The precondition for all these is wage and price stability.

"Development Of The Economy In 1963: While the Consumers' Price Index rose by 9 per cent and 10 per cent in 1961 and 1962 respectively, it rose in 1963 by less than 5 per cent, including 3.8 points due to a rise in the cost of housing and key money. The productive branches of the economy have maintained almost complete stability.

"The deficit in the balance of payments for goods fell to $300 million—$38 million, or 13 per cent, less than in 1962. This considerable fall is due to a considerable increase in the export of goods, which rose by $70 million to $343 million, combined with a moderate increase of $33 million in imports. This year 54 per cent of our imports have been covered by exports, and we are advancing, though gradually, along the second half of the road that leads to economic independence.

"There was also a reduction of the deficit on current account, which includes services, from $449 million to approximately $420 million—a fall of some 6.5 per cent. Import of goods and services rose by less than 7 per cent, while export of goods and services increased by the respectable figure of 19 per cent.

"Our foreign currency balances continue to grow. We now hold some $580 million—$80 million more than last year. As a result, we have been able to pay off in advance $50 million of foreign currency debts, which has not only meant savings in interest payments in foreign currency, but strengthened our good name and financial standing abroad.

"We have begun to pay back the capital of the Independence Bonds; this year we are redeeming $24 million worth in foreign currency, in addition to $30 million worth in Israel money. Next year we shall redeem $45 million worth in foreign currency and another $30 million in local currency.

"The Gross National Product increased, in real terms, by 10 per cent. The largest increase, 13 per cent, was in industrial output.

"Investments in fixed assets, including building, grew by some 4 per cent. During the year, the Government adopted a policy of selectivity in approving investments, with priority for those helping to promote employment, the dispersal of the population, exports, etc.

"The population increased by 3.7 per cent, or some hundred thousand souls, to approximately 2,430,000, while the numbers employed increased by a higher percentage. Unemployment fell to an average of 4,200 compared with 4,600 in 1962.

"The National Income increased by 20.5 per cent and real wages by an average of 6 per cent.

"The increase in personal consumption is estimated at 9.5 per cent, or 5-6 per cent per head. Although the rate of the increase in consumption appears to have fallen in comparison with previous years, it is still high and causes the diversion of too many resources from export and investment to current private consumption. This increase extended to all sections of the population, including recent immigrants.

"Means of payment increased during the year by 26 per cent; the average over the year was 30 per cent higher than in 1962. This is mainly the result of our growing foreign currency balances, which are of great benefit to the economy but also involve dangers.

"Economic Policy for the coming year: During the coming year we intend to persevere along the path we have followed, which has proved to be the right one. Our main efforts will be devoted to maintaining stability.

"Investments should grow, in real terms, by at least 12 per cent. We shall be receiving Zim's flagship Shalom, nine coastal ships, four citrus ships and five cargo ships, as well as others. We shall be getting ships and planes to the value of $68 million—$50 million more than last year.

"Imports of goods and services are expected to grow by some 14 per cent. If there are no upsets, exports can be increased by $100 million to $700 million. The deficit on current account may be expected to grow by some $40 million, which is more than accounted for by the increase of $50 million in the import of ships and planes.

"If the estimates are fulfilled, our exports in 1964 will be the same as our imports in 1960, just as this year's exports covered the amount we spent on imports in 1959. On the road to economic independence, our exports are thus about four years behind our imports. Had it not been for increased defence costs, the backlog would undoubtedly have been smaller.

"Imports of capital are estimated at $500 million. We are still far from saturation point in investments associated with modern industrial know-how and experience.

"The following measures will be adopted to restrain consumption: (a) a balanced budget; (b) credit restraint; (c) increased investment in stocks, short-term loans, and Government bonds; (d) sale of shares in Government companies; (e) loans to the Government, from the banks, within the limits of their liquidity ratios, to be used for development; (f) encouragement to holders of foreign currency not to exchange their holdings into local money; (g) encouragement for the raising of funds through the Stock Exchange; (h) encouragement for saving schemes.

"To prevent increases in production costs: (a) the Government will continue its efforts to prevent unjustified price increases; (b) it will encourage manufacturers to improve quality, efficiency and marketing; (c) tax stability will continue; (d) we shall continue to expose local manufacturers in various branches to competition from imports.

"The State Budget: The Budget is balanced, and in keeping with the Government's economic policy. It is designed first and foremost to maintain stability. This will be done by stable tax rates and payments for Government services, the financing of a greater part of the development budget from domestic sources, and the continuation of the policy of grants to keep down the prices of vital services and commodities.

"The Budget has a disinflationary tendency. Total budgetary outlays in foreign currency will be some I£400 million larger than foreign currency income. The Government will therefore have to acquire foreign currency in return for Israel Pounds which will come from the absorption of means of payment from the Israel public.

"The Budget, especially for social services and housing, is based on the assumption that the increased rate of immigration will continue. It makes a contribution to the redistribution of the national income and improvement in the position of lower-income groups.

"Taxes as a whole will not be raised this year. Income from taxation is estimated at I£1,909 million, 18.2 per cent higher than in 1963-64. The increase is almost entirely due to greater economic activity and more efficient collection.

"There will be an increased tax on foreign travel and a tax on large dwellings. Customs duties on spare parts for electronics manufacture will be cut, so as to encourage the industry.

"In order to balance the Budget without increasing taxes, we shall raise considerable sums on the local money market. We expect a net increase of I£140 million from short-term loans, I£150-160 million from the sale of other Government bonds, and about I£100 million from the sale of shares in Government companies. About I£50 million will be borrowed from the banks.

"The implementation of the Zadok Committee's Report on taxation will be possible only if it does not upset the monetary balance by an exorbitant increase in the purchasing power at the disposal of the public. If the Committee's recommendations are executed in addition to a rise in wages, an exaggerated increase in demand will lead to grave results.

"The income of the Development Budget will total I£1,373 million. Some 52 per cent will come from foreign sources, compared with 56.5 per cent in 1963-64.

"Expenditure: The Budget balances at I£3,465 million, compared with I£2,920 million in the current year—an increase of I£545 million, or 18.7 per cent. The increase is mainly devoted to defence expenditure, debt repayments, subsidies to cover increased costs, education and social services. Of increases totalling I£128.5 million in the cost of Government services apart from defence, some I£80 million will go for education, health and social welfare.

"Development Budget: I£675 million will be spent on development projects—I£45 million more than last year. This includes: I£144 million for agriculture and water; I£30 million for mines and quarries; I£42 million on electricity, mostly for the new 250,000 kwh power station to be constructed in Haifa, which will bring our electricity output up to about a million kwh; I£22.5 million for industry, in addition to large sums from banks, especially the Bank for Industrial Development, the Stock Exchange and foreign investments; I£290 million for housing. Ten thousand dwellings will be built for immigrants, covering over half the Ministry's budget, to provide a permanent home for every immigrant on arrival. Considerable sums will be spent on clearing the ma'barot, which will be liquidated within two years, and housing in development areas; I£65 million on post and telephones, covering equipment for about 32,000 new subscribers. Installation costs will be raised by I£100, and foreign postal rates will be adapted to the new rate of exchange, which was not done last year;

"I£60 million for ports and transportation, providing for the completion of Eliat Port, Stage A of Ashdod Port and Stage B of the Kishon Harbour, and the railroad from Beersheba to Dimona;

"I£9.5 million for housing, water, education, roads, electricity, etc., under the five-year plan for the development of Arab and Druse villages."

Summary of Budget Expenditures:
(in I£ millions and percentages)

	1964-65		1963-64

"Defence Expenditure: This constitutes the largest item in the budget. We are not masters of the scope of our defence expenditure. This is directed to us by the neighbouring countries, which are arming at an accelerated pace with new and modern arms. The cost of modern armaments grows rapidly, as does the cost of training the men to operate them. The result is a growth in the burden on the Budget, both in Israel pounds and in foreign currency.

"I can only hope, together with all our people, that the day is not far off when we shall be freed from this burden, and we shall be able to apply all our strength and resources to constructive endeavour raising the standard of living and fostering education and culture."

B. New Chief Of General Staff: Brigadier Itzhak Rabin (41) was named Chief of the General Staff on December 15, 1963 in succession to Major-General Tzvi Tzur, who is retiring.

The new Chief became Major-General when he took over on January 1, 1964.

General Rabin had been soldiering for 23 years, with the underground for the re-establishment of Israel and in the defence force since the proclamation of the Jewish State. He has attended a staff course at Camberley. During his days with the underground he alternately fought against the British and alongside them.

A. Cabinet Approval Of Budget: The Cabinet approved on December 29, 1963 a Budget for 1964 which allows for an increase of more than 14 per cent in Government spending.

The Budget total is 3,255,438 million yen.

The Cabinet also approved a Government investment and loan programme for 1964 totalling 1,340,200 million yen, an increase of 20.8 per cent over 1963.

The biggest increases in proposed expenditure are in the fields of social security, public works, education and grants to local government authorities.

Measures to promote medium and small enterprises and agriculture were especially emphasized in the Cabinet draft. The Government is relying almost entirely on the natural increase in revenue to finance its vastly expanded programme. Taxes were cut by approximately 100,000 million yen, considerably less than the cut promised by the Prime Minister Mr. Hayato Ikeda in his election campaign.

Economic Growth Rate:

Meanwhile, the Economic Planning Agency has reported that Japan's economic growth rate in fiscal 1962 was 5.9 per cent in real terms.

This is a long way short of the dramatic growth rate achieved in the pre-1958, when Japan's economic expansion slowed almost to a halt.

The cyclical pattern has come to be an accepted feature of Japan's growth rate, but it is causing increasing anxiety. During the past few months, since it became obvious that the economy was picking up speed again, bankers have argued constantly in favour of holding the growth rate down to about 6 per cent.

Mr. Kiichi Miyazawa, Director-General of the Economic Planning Agency, reported on the figures for 1962 at a Cabinet meeting on December 17, 1963. He said that the gross national product in 1962 was 19,315,200 million yen. Japan's gross national product was fifth highest in the world. The national income was 15,782,500 million yen, an average of 165,901 yen a head. The average was 10.1 per cent higher than the previous year in money terms.

The Finance Minister, Mr. Kakuei Tanaka, predicted on December 16, 1963 before a Diet budget committee that the growth rate in 1963 would be 6.5 to 7.2 per cent in real terms. A higher growth rate could not be expected because of the poor balance of payments situation and rising consumer prices.

B. Relaxation Of Restrictions On Investment: The Ministry of Finance has removed control restrictions from investment abroad of up to $US50,000 from January 4.

The step has been decided upon in line with the policy to simplify business procedures in preparation for Japan's shift to an "Article 8" status nation under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The Ministry has said, however, that the measure will apply only to direct investments for purposes such as the establishment of companies and undertaking of business ventures in foreign nations on condition that these business activities help expand Japan's exports, improve Japan's balance of payments position, and promote developments of newly rising nations.

According to the Ministry, restrictions will continue on indirect investments and large-scale direct investments to be made in instalments of under $50,000 each. These investments still require approval by both the Finance Ministry and the Bank of Japan.

KOREA (South)

A. Memorandum To UN On Communist Threat: On the eve of a debate on the Korean question in UN, South Korea, which is not a member of the world Organization, presented a memorandum to the UN Secretariat on December 22, 1963.

The 39-page memorandum warned that in view of the belligerent policy of China and North Korea, the threat of renewed Communist aggression is real and ever-present in Korea.

It said: "These (UN) forces are therefore, vital to the defence of the Republic of Korea against such Communist aggression.

"The continued presence of UN forces in Korea helps maintain peace and security—a primary United Nations responsibility—in that part of the world.

"The attitude of the Republic of Korea towards the United Nations contrasts markedly with that of the North Korean authorities, who have always rejected the competence and authority of the United Nations.

"To achieve their supreme objective of establishing a free and unified Korea, the people of the Republic of Korea have co-operated whole-heartedly in all United Nations endeavours. The Republic of Korea eschewing force, seeks only a peaceful solution of the Korean question within the frame-work of the United Nations.

"It firmly believes that the re-unification of Korea should be achieved through genuinely free elections throughout Korea under United Nations supervision in proportion to the indigenous population. In this endeavour the Republic of Korea accepts the competence and authority of the United Nations to bring about the unification of Korea.

"The attainment of a unified, independent and democratic Korea would contribute to the peace and security of Asia and the entire world. Such an achievement would represent a triumph for the United Nations and its hallowed principles."

It provided a detailed history of the development of Korea following World War II and during and after the Korean War.

It also outlined progress in the agricultural, social and economic fields made in South Korea during the past decade and contrasted it with developments in North Korea during the same period.

LAOS

A. Reported Cease-Fire Agreement: The New China News Agency said on January 2 that the neutralist General Kong Lae and the Pathet Lao General Singkapo have agreed on a cease-fire for their forces in Laos.

In a dispatch from the Laos Plain of Jars, the Agency said that the two men agreed to set up a committee to supervise the cease-fire. But they failed to agree on a statement on their meeting.

Press reports on January 12 said that the neutralist Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, had accepted an invitation from the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, to go to Sam Neua in northern Laos to discuss ways to stabilize the situation in Laos.

It gave no date for the visit, but said Prince Souvanna Phouma had told newsmen it would be in the "near future."

MALAYSIA

A. Indonesian Violation Of Air-Space And Border Raids—Protest To UN: The Permanent Malaysian Representative to UN, Dato Ong Yoke Lin, on December 31, 1963 called on the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, and conveyed to him a message from the Malaysian Government protesting against alleged violation of its air-space and border raids by Indonesia.

In Kuala Lumpur, the Defence Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, who sent the protest, said that he believed the raiders were Indonesian regular soldiers.

The Malaysian troops involved—Malayans—recently relieved elements of a battalion of the Royal Leicestershire Regiment. One of those killed was a major. The Malaysian Government radio said that of the attacking force at least two men had been killed and one captured.

Asked if he thought the present situation could grow into a real shooting war with Indonesia, Tun Abdul Razak said at Kuala Lumpur airport, while awaiting the arrival of the soldiers' bodies: "This is a real shooting war now." He said the attacks took place at Kalabakan timber mills, 30 miles from the Indonesian border.

Mr. Donald Stephens, the Chief Minister of Sabah, who accompanied Tun Abdul Razak, repeated: "Murder, Murder". He promised "blow for blow" if fighting continued in his state.

He said: "Our defence forces are ready to meet the Indonesians, and we have made plans to cope with open aggression in Sabah, though I cannot reveal what they are.

"We have evidence that the attackers who killed the eight members of the security forces were Indonesians. They wore uniforms and carried machine-guns."

At Alor Star, in north Malaya—the home town of the Malay Regiment engaged in the Sabah incident—the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, said: "As soon as aggression starts in a big way and the lives of people are lost in defence of our freedom and everything we hold dear, an appeal will be made to the United Nations to intervene. They must intervene."

An Indonesian Foreign Ministry representative in Djakarta denied that Indonesians took part in the attack. He said the attackers could not have been either Indonesian regular troops or Indonesian volunteers.

Indonesian Accusation:

Indonesia accused Britain and Malaysia on January 8 of "aggression" against its territory, in a document handed to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, by her chief delegate, Mr. Lambertus Palar.

A Government spokesman said in Djakarta that the document listed "violations of Indonesian air-space" by British and Malaysian aircraft. Four of them had been shot down.

Manila Talks:

The Indonesian President, Dr. Sukarno, accompanied by his Army Commander, Maj.-Gen. Achmad Jani and the Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, arrived in Manila on January 7 to seek the Philippines' co-operation in the economic aspect of his "confrontation policy" against Malaysia.

On his arrival. Dr. Subandrio said: "We will try to find a way out of the Malaysian impasse. We will not be scared by British arms. It is obsolete to think in terms of scaring away any Asian country with modern arms."

Asked whether there would be another tripartite meeting of the Heads of Governments of Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines, he said: "I do not know. The other side is arrogant because of British arms. They want to impose certain solutions on us. It is wrong for Kuala Lumpur to think that we will crawl on all fours and give (Malaysia) recognition. That will never come about.

"Indonesia wants consultations. But the main purpose of our visit here is to come to some economic arrangements. This has nothing to do with the disruption of Indonesia's trade through and with Singapore".

He was asked whether Indonesia wanted a settlement with Malaysia. He replied: "We are not crazy warmongers."

[Malaysian leaders have repeatedly said that there will be no talks either with the Philippines or Indonesia so long as they do not re-establish diplomatic relations with Malaysia. The two countries withdrew their Embassies from Kuala Lumpur on the proclamation of Malaysia.]

Indonesian and Philippine diplomats announced on January 8 that they had agreed to use the spirit of last Summer's Manila Agreement "as the vehicle for finding a peaceful solution to the Malaysian problem."

The statement was issued at the end of a 95-minute session of political panels headed by Dr. Subandrio and the Philippine Foreign Secretary, Mr. Salvador Lopez.

The statement said the panels agreed to re-affirm their adherence to the Manila Agreement to continue "efforts to give substance to Maphilindo as a living reality."

[Maphilindo was the association of the former Malaya, Indonesia and the Philippines formed at the summit meeting in August, 1963. It was shattered when Malaysia was formed the following month.]

The announcement said the discussions were "proceeding smoothly along constructive lines and are revolving around the theme of Asian solutions to Asian problems."

The Philippine Foreign Secretary, Mr. Lopez, acting as spokesman for both countries, said the delegations opened the talk "by giving detailed reports on events and developments that have taken place in Indonesia and the Philippines between the Manila summit conference last August and the present time."

"These talks are being conducted in the spirit of mushjawara (friendly consultation) which lies at the heart of the Manila Agreement."

The Manila Agreement called for "mushjawara" with the former Malaya as well as Indonesia and the Philippines.

Dr. Subandrio said: "We start with two. We hope to end with three."

President Sukarno and President Macapagal said on January 11 that they hoped for a new meeting with Tengku Abdul Rehman, for a settlement of the Malaysia dispute.

This hope was expressed in a joint communique issued at the close of Dr. Sukarno's "working State visit" to the Philippines.

After the two Presidents had drunk toasts, Dr. Sukarno said: "This statement strengthens the ties of friendship between Indonesia and the Philippines; it could also provide a solution to the problems of the area."

Meanwhile the British Defence Minister, Mr. Peter Thorneycroft said at Jesselton, Malaysia, that the Indonesian confrontation policy against Malaysia was "pretty serious and dangerous."

He renewed the pledge that Britain would stand "shoulder to shoulder" with Malaysia in the fight against guerrillas in the Borneo region.

Communist Opposition To Malaysia:

In Indonesia the Communist Party chief, Mr. D. N. Aidit, in a statement to the plenary session of the party published on December 6, 1963 in the party's organ, Harian Rakjat, said there were three approaches to the Malaysia crisis. They were the reformist, adventurist and revolutionary approaches.

He said the reformist position held the expectation that "the British imperialists and the Tengku will be prepared to settle the issue peacefully. This is contrary to President Sukarno's theory that the only way to settle it is through confrontation."

He said the adventurist theory was "actually designed to try to topple the Sukarno regime." The advocates of this approach, he said, "talk furiously about the Malaysia issue, but their real intention is to provoke armed measures from the British in order to create panic inside the country (Indonesia) as an opportunity to end Dr. Sukarno's Government and later present their victory to the USA."

He said it was wrong to exaggerate "the strength of the British imperialists. But it would be incorrect to think that the Malaysia issue can be solved over a short period because this will lead to reformist or adventurist views."

The revolutionary view held that only confrontation against Malaysia in all fields could solve the crisis. "In the political field this means continuing exposure of this neo-colonialist project by calling on the sympathy of friendly, new emerging forces. The most urgent task is recognition of the Kalimantan Utara (North Borneo) rebel movement backed by Indonesia."

He said confrontation should also cover the economic field, including expropriation of British enterprises and efforts to solve domestic economic difficulties.

NEPAL

A. Cigarette Factory With Soviet Aid: A major part of Nepal's demand for cigarettes will be met internally by 1966 when the Soviet-aided cigarette factory goes into full production.

According to an official of the factory, 90 per cent of the work on the plant has been completed and it is expected to go into production in September, 1964.

The factory has a capacity to produce 2,000 million cigarettes annually in four grades.

Nepal at present imports substantial quantities of cigarettes, the bulk of them from India. She had also imported recently some consignments of cigarettes from China and Pakistan.

Tobacco is now cultivated on a modest scale in Nepal. Eventually, it is expected to cover an area of 5,000 bighas.

PAKISTAN

SUMMARY: Consortium Aid For Indus Basin Projects; Import Policy; Ban On Jamaat-i-Islami.

A. Consortium Aid For Indus Basin Projects: The Chairman of the West Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority (WAPDA), Mr. Ghulam Ishaq, disclosed in Karachi on December 26, 1963 that the Aid-Pakistan Consortium would give an additional aid of $315,000,000 to cover the foreign exchange component of Indus Basin projects.

He said that the Indus Basin projects included the Tarbela Dam provided it was found feasible by the World Bank.

He returned to Pakistan on December 26 after a 16-day trip to Washington and London at the head of a 3-man WAPDA team. The other two members of the team were Lt-Gen. Intchsener, Chief Technical Adviser, and Mr. Kirmani, Chief Engineer, Indus Basin Projects.

On the Tarbela Dam, Mr. Ghulam Ishaq said details and terms of reference on the project had been studied and finalised. As a result of these studies the World Bank was organizing a group of consultants to visit Pakistan. He expected the group to be in Pakistan by the middle of January.

He said that the World Bank intended to undertake an overall survey of the Tarbela Dam which will take two years.

The new projects, he said, related to power distribution in West Pakistan and setting up of a 200-megawatt thermal station for the Lahore and Lyallpur region. He said WAPDA had requested AID to provide $15 million for its power distribution project. The WAPDA needed this money to cover the project's cost for the next two years.

B. China Biggest Buyer Of Pakistan Cotton: It was stated in Karachi on December 29, 1963 that China had become the biggest buyer of Pakistan cotton in 1963. It had purchased about 280,000 bales, after the signing of a Trade Pact with Pakistan earlier in 1963.

While 30,000 bales were purchased out of the old crop in 1963, about 2,50,000 bales were understood to have been bought from the current crop.

Nearly 70,000 bales of cotton, which had already been registered by the State Bank of Pakistan, were shipped to China from Karachi during the following week.

The registration for the remaining bales of cotton, to be supplied to China by Pakistan out of the current crop, was expected to be made by the State Bank of Pakistan by January. The parties concerned were believed to have already applied for the registration of the deal.

According to indications available from trade circles, China may buy more Pakistani cotton early in 1964 for which negotiations are under way.

After China, Hong Kong becomes the next main buyer of Pakistani cotton with purchases of about 1,00,000 bales from the current crop.

The export performance of cotton in 1963 was the best in the past five years, as a result of huge purchases by China.

The prices of cotton have now fully stabilized as compared with the previous years, due to good export performance. Efforts are being made by Pakistan to maintain this performance as well as stability in prices during the coming year.

The target for cotton production in the country set in the Second Five-Year Plan is 23,00,000 bales, of which about 20,00,000 bales was reached in 1963. Due to increased production, export avenues have also to be expanded further during the coming year.

Pakistani trade delegations, which will be going out in 1964, will also make efforts to boost exports and earn more foreign exchange for the country.

Out of 70,000 bales of cotton already registered by the State Bank, 35,000 were shipped to China by m.v. Tina. The remaining 35,000 bales were carried by another chartered ship, m.v. Kalliopip.

C. Import Policy For January-June, 1964: The new import policy for January-June, 1964 is more liberal than the policy during the preceding half-year.

Under the new policy, 52 items have been placed on the Open General Licence list.

Major improvements have been made in the facilities for importing goods.

Announcing the new policy in a broadcast on January 3, the Chief Controller of Imports and Exports, Mr. Shafiul Azam, said that the new policy was formulated to enable fuller use of the industrial capacity, to strengthen the base of the export industries and for the progressive substitution of the import of a wide range of manufactured items by local products.

A few selected items of iron and steel have been placed on the free import list.

Some of the main items whose import was proposed to be increased are drugs and medicines, books and magazines, scientific instruments and appliances, marine engines, machinery and spares, dyes and chemicals, raw films, nylon twine for the fishing industry, typewriters and office machines.

The list of licensable items will be constantly kept under review to make it responsive to the requirements of the economy.

There are at present 50 items on OGL list. It was proposed to drop building and engineering materials of all sorts from this list and add three items, namely, brakefluid and marine engines (both for East Pakistan only) and nylon twine.

In the commercial sector, some major items of the iron and steel group have been put on the free import list, which means that traders will now be able to import them freely. These items are pig-iron, tinplate billets and strips.

Cement for East Pakistan will continue to be on the OGL subject, however, to a periodic review of the situation.

D. President Ayub Khan Elected President Of All-Pakistan Muslim League: President Ayub Khan was on December 24, 1963 unanimously elected President of the All-Pakistan Muslim League by over 400 Councillors of the party in Dacca.

Addressing the Council soon after his assumption of party leadership, he asked the party men to put in their best endeavours to make the people conscious of two basic requirements, which he described as "love for hard-earned freedom and self-discipline." These two things, he pointed out, must go hand in hand to produce a healthy and progressive society.

He gave the nation the motto of "unite, work and achieve". This, he said, should be the guideline.

Later, the Council approved several amendments to the Constitution of the Muslim League. One of these authorized the President of the organization to co-opt any Minister as ex-officio member of the organization to work for the party. According to another amendment, at least one meeting of the Council will be held each year and alternately in East and West Pakistan. One-third of the 300 Councillors will be entitled to requisition the Council meeting but among the signatories to the requisition notice at least one-third must be from each Wing.

The Central Parliamentary Board will comprise 14 members. The President of the League and the leader of the League Parliamentary Party in the National Assembly will be ex-officio members.

E. Ban On Jamaat-i-Islami —Leaders Arrested: The Jamaat-i-Islami has been banned throughout Pakistan under the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908.

Press Notes issued in Dacca and Lahore on January 7 declared the Jamaat an unlawful association.

The Lahore Press Note said that the Jamaat-i-Islami and its leaders covertly and sometimes openly had been attempting to subvert the loyalty of the people of the State and the Government.

The Press Note said that no Government can obviously tolerate such prejudicial activities nor allow any party to disrupt the law and order in the country.

The Government had, therefore, been obliged to take legal action to ban the Jamaat in order to prevent it from pursuing its anti-State subversive activities.

Maulana Syed Abul Ala Maudoodi, Amir (leader) of the Jamaat-i-Islami, and 18 other office-bearers and workers of the party were arrested in Lahore in the early hours of January 6 by a special police party headed by the Additional Superintendent of Police, Chaudhuri Sikander Hayat.

Arrests were also made at a number of places including Kushtia, Karachi, Hyderabad, Multan, Gujranwala, Okara and Peshawar.

F. Fundamental Rights Bill Passed By National Assembly: The National Assembly passed on December 25, 1963 the Fundamental Rights Bill.

At 02.55 a.m. the Speaker announced the result of the division on the third reading which stood at 109 votes to nil, and declared the Bill as passed.

The Pakistan People's Group which had all along opposed the Bill, abstained from the voting on the third reading. That was why there was no vote against it.

Doing away with the cumbersome procedure of lobby division on every clause by mutual agreement between the Opposition and the Treasury benches, the House went for six divisions. Votes on Mr. Mahbubul Haq's motion for deletion of fourth schedule were 105 against and 22 for.

Major divisions were on Rider Clause and one barring jurisdiction of courts to Tribal Areas beside overall vote.

The Rights Bill consisting of 12 clauses and one Schedule containing 31 laws protected against justiciability under Rider Clause extends basic rights to all citizens of Pakistan except those inhabiting the tribal areas of West Pakistan.

The measure ensures security of person and freedom of movement, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, property rights and equality of citizens.

Under the Rider Clause eight Presidential Orders, five Martial Law regulations, 11 Ordinances promulgated by the President, two Central Acts, four Ordinances promulgated by the West Pakistan Governor and one West Pakistan Act have been protected against justiciability. No East Pakistan law has been sought for protection.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Prospects Of Civilian Administration: Inaugurating the Council of Notables (see page 5590) on January 1, the Chairman of the Military Council, Major-General Duong Van Minh, said he hoped power would be turned over to an elected civilian administration as soon as possible.

The Council of Notables is a consultative body of 60 technicians and politicians whose first task is to work out a new Constitution.

War Against Viet-Cong:

Maj-Gen. Duong Van Minh also said the country must expect austerity while the war against the Viet-Cong guerrillas continued.

Priority would be given to development of rural areas and the ensuring of a "just and equitable distribution of the national income."

He rejected the idea of neutralising South Viet-Nam and said that the banning of neutralism and communism would be the only restrictions on democratic liberties.

Meanwhile, the long and bitter struggle to keep South Viet-Nam from being taken over by communism has reached a critical point.

For a year the war has been going poorly for the anti-Communists and the tough, well-armed guerrillas are stepping up the conflict. Facing them is a new and uncertain military Government.

The Viet-Cong hold the initiative, militarily and psychologically, in most rural areas. In regions they effectively control they levy taxes, obtain food, redistribute land and recruit re-inforcements. They are strong in the Mekong River Delta, the country's rice bowl, stronger than they ever were during the French-Indo-Chinese war, some experienced observers believe.

The US Secretary of Defence, Mr. R. McNamara, paid a visit to Viet-Nam in the third week of December, 1963 and the seriousness of the situation there was said to be acknowledged now at the highest American military and civilian levels in Washington and Saigon.

Guerrilla War Intensified:

According to a Hanoi Radio broadcast in the last week of December, 1963, the military committee of the Communist-backed South Viet-Nam National Liberation Front has announced intensification of the guerrilla war.

The broadcast said the decision was taken on December 30, 1963—"the third anniversary of the founding of the Front."

The "Order of the Day" issued under the signature of Mr. Tran Nam Trung, head of the military committee, called upon the Viet-Cong to "expand the liberated areas and unceasingly strengthen our forces."

The military committee also ordered destruction of "the system of strategic hamlets" and the building and consolidation of what it described as "fighting hamlets."

The military committee's order claimed that the guerrillas "can now attack whole enemy battalions or annihilate whole companies."

In connexion with the propaganda campaign, the military committee of the "Liberation Front" directed its cadres to "unceasingly raise the ideological and political standards and carry out cultural study and tactical and technical training so as to make the liberation armed forces strong and advanced in all fields."

B. Buddhist Convention: Buddhist leaders who headed the campaign against the Diem regime formed on January 3 a national organization aimed at establishing Buddhism as a permanent political and social force.

The four-day national Buddhist Convention closed on January 3 with the proclamation of a charter for a unified Buddhist Church supported by the 11 main Buddhist sects.

The most important aspect of the charter was provision of an institute for secular affairs which was described by high-ranking Buddhists as the political and social arm of the Church. Under the charter, this body will have a powerful eight-man leadership group and an organizational net-work extending into each of South Viet-Nam's 42 provinces.

This provision was considered especially significant as, in the view of a number of American officials and other experienced observers, Buddhists who led the anti-Diem protests are the only non-communist group in the country with a ready-made opportunity for developing a mass political base.

ASIAN RECORDER

ADEN

A. Detenus Freed: Fifteen persons detained under the emergency law, promulgated following the hand-grenade incident at Aden airport on December 10, 1963 were freed on December 27, 1963.

Those freed included members of the Aden Trades Union Congress, the People's Socialist Party, South Arabian League People's Democratic Union, Aden municipal councillors, a journalist, and a mosque preacher.

The decision followed a threat by the Aden Government to resign over the detainees.

Britain's Assistant High Commissioner to Aden, Mr. George Henderson, who was seriously injured in the bomb explosion on December 10, 1963 died in hospital in Aden on December 27, 1963.

Assassination Bid Fails:

Late on the night of January 2, unknown assailants failed to assassinate five Adenis, among them Mr. Ali Salim Ali, who in December resigned as Minister of Labour, Welfare and Immigration in the Aden Government in protest against the declaration of a State of Emergency.

The police were still looking for the attackers, who succeeded only in causing slight injury to two friends of Mr. Ali.

Mr. Ali Salim Ali was at the wheel of a car belonging to his younger brother, Mr. Muhammad Salim Ali, vice-president of the People's Socialist Party (PSP), who was among 44 Adenis detained under the Emergency decree. Next to him was Mr. Ahmad Basandwah. The back seats were occupied by Mr. Mahmud Siddik and Mr. Husain Abdu Hamza, both PSP members, and Mr. Wadi Humaidan, an immigration officer. The light was on in the car, which was parked at Abyan Beach, just off the main road near Aden airport.

"Suddenly we heard shots which we first thought were firecrackers", Mr. Ahmad Basandwah said. "But when I looked out I saw two bursts of fire. We all ducked, and moments later managed to extinguish the light inside the car. But when we tried to start the car to chase the gunmen we found a burst tyre, probably from a bullet." The gunmen, in a green car, escaped in a north-westerly direction towards Sheikh Othman town, Aden state.

One bullet shattered the parked car's rear window and flying glass cut Mr. Wadi Humaidan's left temple and left ear lobe, and caused abrasions on Mr. Mahmud Siddik's left cheek. They were discharged from hospital after first-aid treatment.

Mr. Hassan Ali Bayumi, a journalist and secretary-general of the United National Party, who was due to meet the five men at the beach, said that 15 minutes after the incident an anonymous caller telephoned his wife three times, each time replacing the receiver before she could answer. "But the fourth time the caller said: 'We have wiped out those at Abyan beach'."

The shooting attempt heightened tension in Aden. It was feared that the authorities may delay the release of PSP and Aden Trades Union Congress leaders for fear of further incidents.

Two Ministers of the South Arabian Federal Government, who are also tribal chiefs, were reported to have been wounded in a bomb explosion.

BURMA

A. Agreement On Demarcation Of Border With Pakistan: A memorandum of agreement settling the problem of demarcation of Burma's boundary with Pakistan was signed in Rangoon on January 21 by the Foreign Ministers of the two countries.

A joint communique was issued at the conclusion of the four-day visit to Burma of Pakistan's External Affairs Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, on January 22.

It said the Foreign Ministers agreed "in principle that the inherited fluctuating boundary" between the two countries should now be transformed into "a fixed boundary".

They were satisfied that after that there would not be "any possibility of future misunderstanding on the question of the international boundary" between Pakistan and Burma.

The communique said the two Ministers had discussed "the position of Muslims in Arakan"—a reference presumably to the abortive Muslim separatist agitations in the Burmese district adjoining East Pakistan's Chittagong hill district.

Though the Pakistani locus standi in the "position of Muslims in Arakan" was not quite clear, Mr. Bhutto "expressed his belief that the Burmese Government would solve the question of Muslims in Arakan with sympathetic consideration and assured that Pakistan on its part would be glad to extend maximum co-operation in any way possible, consistent with its policy of good neighbourly relations. The Burmese Foreign Minister recalled the assurance given in 1961 and said that that question had been largely resolved. It would, however, continue to receive sympathetic consideration".

The two Foreign Ministers agreed to hold a ministerial level meeting soon to discuss procedure for the elimination of "sources of friction and disputes at the borders" as well as other matters.

B. Gen. Ne Win Alleges Political Conspiracy: The Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, told a peasants' seminar on January 1, observed as Peasants' Day, at Popa in Central Burma that traitors were trying to wreck his Government's socialist nation-building by undermining the economy and seeking the assistance of a foreign country.

He declined to name the foreign country or elaborate on the exact details of the conspiracy which, however, he promised to place before the public when all relevant facts were marshalled.

This speech was the first official admission of an anti-Government conspiracy by some politicians, business tycoons and other prominent people arrested during December, 1963.

He explained that the Burmese Way to Socialism, which was being practised by his Government, was becoming increasingly obnoxious to "certain formerly privileged classes such as some businessmen, politicians, political parties, officials and others who have misused State power to enrich themselves at the expense of the public."

He said these people were now trying their best to create problems in the country to make the Government's position untenable. As typical instances, he referred to the artificial scarcity of essential commodities, such as rice, cooking oil and salt. For some time, the prices of these commodities rocketed, but, as was common knowledge, the Government was able to counter the tactics of hoarders, blackmarketeers and other economic racketeers in time and provide the public with essential foodstuffs at fair prices.

But this was only one round in the unending game of hide and seek being played between the Government and the racketeers. Many a time, the racketeers were one jump ahead of the Government. However, he assured his listeners that the Government, backed as it was by the majority of peasants and workers, was bound to triumph in the end.

Nonetheless, he stressed, the plots posed a formidable threat to the nation, especially when instigated by a foreign country. He said it was obvious that foreign instigation was impossible without the collusion of some unworthy elements in the country.

C. Stockpiling Of Essential Commodities: To prevent the shortage of essential commodities as a result of the speculative activities of unscrupulous traders, the Government has decided to stockpile essential supplies in districts.

A countrywide census of consumers of goods like rice, salt, kerosene and cooking oil will be taken preparatory to the stockpiling.

Workers are being given cooking oil on credit while Government servants have been asked to register their requirements of consumer goods.

CAMBODIA

A. British And Soviet Proposals On Convening Conference: A British Foreign Office spokesman said in London on January 15 that Britain, a co-Chairman of the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China, had put certain proposals to the Cambodian and other interested Governments on the question of convening a conference to re-inforce Cambodia's neutrality.

The spokesman said these proposals concerned advanced preparation for a possible conference. But he declined to disclose them because he said they must remain confidential if efforts to convene a conference were to be successful.

The proposal for holding such a conference was first made by Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Soviet Proposal:

The Soviet Union has proposed that 14 nations, including USA, meet in Geneva in April at a conference that would guarantee the neutrality of Cambodia.

Such a conference had been demanded by the Chief of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

The Soviet proposal, the first to suggest a specific time and place for the conference, was handed on January 18 to Sir Humphrey Trevelyan, the British Ambassador.

According to a Soviet Foreign Ministry's statement on January 21, the proposal, if agreed to by Britain, would be addressed to the other nations that took part in the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China and met in 1961-62 to guarantee the neutrality of Laos.

In addition to the Soviet Union and Britain, which are the two co-Chairmen, the countries concerned are Burma, Canada, China, France, India, Poland, Thailand, the United States, and the four Indo-Chinese States of North and South Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia.

Moscow's proposal was the latest in a series of diplomatic exchanges over whether Cambodia would press demands for an international conference or would be satisfied with a signed declaration guaranteeing its neutrality.

Although both the United States and Britain were understood to have reservations about holding a conference, the British Government had a week earlier sent a draft of a declaration on Cambodian neutrality to the Soviet Union, along with a protocol suggesting arrangements to supervise any agreement that might be reached.

British Stand:

Earlier, on December 20, 1963 a British Foreign Office spokesman said in London that Britain agreed in principle to take part in the conference suggested by Prince Norodom Sihanouk to guarantee his country's independence and neutrality.

He said that communications to this effect had been handed over by the British Ambassador in Pnom Penh to the Cambodian Foreign Minister, and by the British Ambassador in Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Minister.

The announcement did not, however, mean that a conference was a foregone conclusion. "Such a conference still presents difficulties," the Foreign Office spokesman said, "but we are trying to achieve conditions which would make possible the holding of a conference with constructive results acceptable to all the Governments concerned.

"Meanwhile, it would clearly be of the greatest help if all the Governments concerned could exercise the utmost restraint in the present situation."

CHINA

A. French Recognition: It was officially announced in Paris on January 27 after weeks of anticipation that France had recognized the regime in Peking.

The announcement said: "The Government of the French Republic and the Government of the People's Republic of China have decided, by mutual accord, to establish diplomatic relations.

"They have agreed to designate their Ambassadors within three months."

Immediately after the announcement, the Kuomintang Administration protested against the French decision, but did not break off relations with France.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry statement broadcast by Radio Peking on January 28 said China, in agreeing to enter into diplomatic relations with France, understood that Paris would break with the KMT regime.

It noted that "according to international practice, recognition of the new Government of a country naturally implies ceasing to recognize the old running group overthrown by the people of that country."

This is contrary to what French official sources had said. They insisted Peking had not asked to end relations with the Formosa Government.

In Paris, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman said that agreement between France and China was made "without any conditions of any sort."

The French Government saw no reason to envisage ending diplomatic relations with Taiwan.

In Taipeh, the KMT Government withheld its decision to sever relations with France and instead lodged a protest to the French Government for its "most unfriendly act."

The Legislative Yuan, the Taiwan Parliament, at a special plenary session, supported the Government's decision.

President Gen. de Gaulle had dispatched a special envoy to Taipeh to ask Gen. Chiang Kai-shek to refrain from breaking ties with France. The American authorities had also urged Taipeh to maintain relations with France.

France thus embarked on a 'two Chinas' policy, establishing a precedent.

France is the fifth NATO member to recognize Communist China. The others were Britain, Denmark, Norway and the Netherlands.

Three other non-Communist European countries have also recognized the Peking regime—Finland, Sweden and Switzerland.

World Reaction:

The US State Department in a statement said:

"The United States regrets France's decision. We have repeatedly expressed to the Government of France reasons why we consider that this would be an unfortunate step, particularly at a time when the Chinese Communists are actively promoting aggression and subversion in South-East Asia and elsewhere.

"The United States will stand firmly by its commitments to the Government of the Republic of China as well as all other countries in our common endeavour to prevent and deter aggression and to promote the interests of peace."

There was no Indian official comment on the French action. Authoritative circles, however, described as "unfortunate" the timing of the recognition. They hoped that the recognition of China by France at this time would not lead to any increase in China's military potential in the light of her continuing aggressive posture against India.

A Soviet Government spokesman said that re-establishment of diplomatic relations between France and China "is a step in the direction of strengthening of peace in the world."

A Malaysia Government spokesman said that if France succeeded in its recognition of Peking without breaking off relations with Taiwan, Malaysia might follow suit.

Japan hoped that the French action would not damage the solidarity of free nations. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Japan acknowledged the fact that the Peking regime ruled over the Chinese continent with a population of over 600 million, but that, at the same time, the trend of Japanese public opinion was to continue neighbourly and friendly relations with the Chinese Kuomintang Government.

The Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, had declared earlier that his Government had no intention of abrogating the Japan-Nationalist China Peace Treaty despite French recognition of Communist China.

He had made the statement in the Upper House of Parliament in reply to a question by Mr. Sanzo Nosaka, chairman of the Japan Communist Party. Mr. Nosaka had demanded that Japan should recognize Peking and abolish the KMT-Japanese Peace Treaty.

Mr. Ikeda said it was inappropriate for Japan to follow the example of France in view of the situation in which Japan was placed and the relationship between Japan and KMT China.

He added that Japan should make its own decision on this issue to the best interest of the country. It also should respect world opinion in UN.

B. Tito-Togliatti Criticism: In a communique published in Belgrade on January 22, President J. B. Tito of Yugoslavia and the Secretary-General of the Italian Communist Party, Mr. Palmiro Togliatti, condemned the position of the Chinese Communist Party in the ideological dispute.

The communique was issued at the conclusion of a week-long visit by Mr. Togliatti to Yugoslavia.

The communique affirmed the necessity of averting a secession which, even if it were temporary, would weaken the "common struggle of the working class and the progressive forces."

The 2,000-word communique said that "compromises with dogmatic and sectarian positions are impossible."

It said the restoration of the unity of the Communist movement would be the fruit of a "stubborn struggle leading to new victories for democracy, socialism and peace," which would "make it possible to confirm in a practical way the correctness of the positions adopted."

It was "important" to avoid the spread of nuclear weapons to "new Powers, individual or collective," and warned: "A new world war would have catastrophic consequences for all human civilization."

It called for "real understanding of the divergencies that have shown themselves in theoretical conception and practical and political solution" between different Communist parties.

Each party, the communique said, was unable on its own to comprehend the ever more complex problems facing the workers' movement, and so co-operation between the Communist parties was essential.

The communique called on the "democratic workers' movement" in the capitalist countries to link their own struggle against "capitalist monopoly" with that of the "progressive forces of the developing nations" against all forms of colonialism and neo-colonialism. The action of these "progressive forces" must be given "an increasingly democratic and socialistic orientation."

C. Report On Agricultural Collectivization: An article on agricultural collectivization by the Minister for Agriculture, Mr. Liao Lu-yen, has appeared in a recent issue of Cuba Socialista.

It shows that the communes have undergone a change in the last few years of their existence.

The article makes it clear how much the Chinese have revised their original ideas. "More than 70,000 people's communes were formed in 1958", it says, flatly contradicting the original Chinese pronouncements in that year when the number was put at 25,000 or 26,000. Disadvantages in the system have come to light over the years, and one of the most obvious was that the commune was too large and unwieldy. Into the limbo of lost ideas has gone the original plan that communes should be combined into a still larger unit.

What has happened is that the communes have broken up into their natural parts, the age-old villages, now dignified by the name "production team", and grouped together into "production brigades" and communes. Today the teams themselves are made up of only 20 or 30 families, unlike the early days when they comprised 100 or so, and the communes themselves must be about one-third of the size they were originally. It is now the former village which has the rights of ownership over land, tools, and so on, not a complete break with pre-1949 tradition since some village land used to be held in common.

One of the main economic motives of the foundation of the communes has been justified: the creation of a supply of labour big enough to build small dams and reservoirs and to run light industries or the intensive cultivation of livestock, but the "backyard steel" furnaces are a thing of yesteryear and the Marxist-Leninist ideal—to each according to his need—was dropped almost as soon as it was suggested. Communal living never got off the ground at all, and though communal eating still exists, the dining rooms are said by Western visitors to be much like canteens anywhere.

In Marxist-Leninist thinking the peasant has a dual nature, that of a labourer and that of a small landowner, and the landowner side is forever reverting to bourgeois ideas and sabotaging the Party's plans. This is being countered at the moment with the usual kind of Chinese campaign—the "class struggle" against "spontaneous capitalists".

More extreme measures have been left on one side, and if remarks in 1963 are to be believed, Peking is putting its trust in Lenin's dictum that "only by putting tractors and machinery into use in agriculture in a big way and by bringing about electrification can this problem of small peasants be solved".

Electrification is certainly going ahead. This is fairly easy near the cities where the urban power stations can supply the farms, and vegetable production has been greatly increased as a result, but in the heart of the countryside it is much more difficult as it involves building plants and training some sort of technical force to maintain them and the power transmission lines. Mechanization hardly extends yet beyond the installation of irrigation pumps; China's tractors are still mostly used on the large State farms.

D. Population Estimates: According to population experts in Hong Kong, China's population has topped 735 million.

This does not include the estimated 15.8 million Chinese living in South-East Asia, who would raise the total to more than 750 million.

Peking makes frequent announcements of its population figures. The last such report estimated a population of 656,640,000 in 1957. It showed an increase of 54,692,000 during the preceding 4½ years representing an annual rate of increase of two per cent.

The Chinese Communists were encouraging birth control at that time. Since then they have discouraged birth control and the current annual rate of increase is believed to be 2.2 per cent.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Republic Day Celebrations; CPI Call For Opposition To Chinese Party Line; New Appointments To Central Cabinet; Mid-term Appraisal Of Third Plan.

A. Republic Day Celebrations: Republic Day was celebrated all over the country on January 26. The Capital, New Delhi, went gay on the occasion despite it being the coldest day in 30 years.

The highlight of the celebrations in New Delhi was a mammoth parade in which the participants included the Armed Forces, cultural troupes and schoolchildren.

As the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, ascended the rostrum, a 31-gun salute was fired and the band, opposite the saluting base, played the National Anthem. This was followed by a solemn ceremony of investiture at which three heroes of battles with the Chinese in October, 1962 were honoured with awards of Param Vir Chakra.

Dr. Radhakrishnan presented the awards to the widows of Subedar Joginder Singh, a Platoon Commander of the Sikh Regiment, and Maj. Shaitan Singh, Company Commander of an infantry battalion. The two heroes fell victims to Chinese bullets in N-EFA and Chushul during the Chinese invasion in 1962.

The President also awarded Param Vir Chakra to Maj. Dhan Singh Thapa for showing exceptional courage and upholding the highest traditions of the Indian Army when his forward post in Ladakh was attacked by Chinese forces.

The parade that followed was of the familiar pattern barring one or two exceptions. The impressive air display, left out in 1963 owing to the Emergency, was there again to thrill the young and the old.

Similarly, even though participation by the Armed Forces was on a restricted scale because of the Emergency, interesting additions were there in the cultural pageant.

Dr. S. Radhakrishnan's Broadcast:

Events in Calcutta, Mr. Nehru's health and the need to accelerate economic growth and strengthen democracy figured prominently in Dr. Radhakrishnan's Republic Day broadcast on January 25.

While declaring that the "distressing" events in Calcutta had admittedly followed "provocation from across the border", he pointed out, however, that the Indians would not be true to their "moral and spiritual values" if "we allow passions to get the better of us".

Any departure from the policy of secularism and equal rights for the people of all faiths, he remarked, would be "morally indefensible" and "politically dangerous". It would weaken the country's internal unity at a time when the "danger from without" was "undiminished".

After stating that Mr. Nehru was now making "rapid progress", he declared: "I know I speak on behalf of all our countrymen and friends of peace in the world in wishing him the speediest recovery so that we may continue to have his inspiring leadership."

An important point he made was that the people's tolerance for "weak, inefficient and unclean" administration would not be unlimited. If evils of corruption, nepotism and blackmarketing were not "effectively dealt with", people's "frustration" might seek "other outlets".

The following is the text of his broadcast:

"Friends,

"As another Republic Day approaches, it gives me great pleasure to speak to our people at home and abroad and send them my warmest greetings and good wishes.

"The last few weeks have been for us a period of great concern. The Prime Minister has not been keeping well, though happily he is now making rapid progress. I know I speak on behalf of all our countrymen and friends of peace in the world in wishing him the speediest recovery so that we may continue to have his inspiring leadership.

"This country has had the good fortune of having Jawaharlal Nehru's stewardship at one of the most critical periods in its history. The general development of the country in the years since freedom bears his impress.

"He has brought a modern, secular and scientific outlook to our difficult and diverse problems and has indeed reflected the national purpose over these years. More than any one else our Prime Minister has helped to put us on the right track in our quest for national integration and orderly growth.

"That we have still not attained the ideal he has set for us is borne out by the distressing events in Calcutta and neighbouring areas these last few weeks. Admittedly the provocation from across the borders of our country was there, but we are not being true to the moral and spiritual values transmitted to us from the past if we allow passions to get the better of us.

"The twin means we have chosen for giving our citizens a fuller life are individual liberty and economic planning. In our democracy men of all faiths have the right to live in honour and harmony under the rule of law; the life and liberty of every citizen, irrespective of caste or creed, ought to be sacred to every other. Any departure from this is not only morally indefensible but politically dangerous; it weakens our internal unity at a time when the danger to our country from without is undiminished.

"The Government can and will take every step necessary to put down anti-social behaviour, but the co-operation of the people is no less important if peaceful conditions are to be preserved, for such peace is the basis on which we could build our future.

"Democracy does not believe in the infallibility of any individual or group. It does not think that any particular party represents unblemished good, nor does it assume that those who think they are right are really right.

"Democracy is as much a discipline as it is a privilege; disorder is its antithesis and it behoves us all who wish to see our democracy strengthened to ensure that the manner of its functioning does not become a travesty of what it ought to be.

"The recent unrest in some parts of the country is traceable to a feeling held that the functioning of our democratic and administrative processes is not as clean as it should be.

"Factionalism and groupism in politics and loyalty to caste, clan and community have sometimes led to improper decisions being taken and discontent is the result.

"We have to guard against the mistakes of a few being visited on the many; if faith is to be preserved in the principles of democracy, corruption has to be eliminated in our public life.

"It would be well to recognize that the tolerance of our society for weak, inefficient and unclean administration is not unlimited. If social evils such as black-marketing, corruption and nepotism are not effectively dealt with, there is the danger that the idealistic patriotism of public-spirited youth might in frustration seek other outlets.

"The strengthening of our democracy is equally bound up with an improvement of our economy and a more equitable distribution of incomes and opportunities.

"We are now nearing the end of the third year of our Third Plan. A recent appraisal of our economy has indicated that progress so far in the current Plan is well below what was hoped for.

"It is only if the agricultural sector expands adequately that our economic growth would have sure foundations and be broad-based. This is so obvious, but it bears repetition in the light of the inadequacy of our performance.

"Though our achievements with regard to industrial expansion have happily been attended with greater success than those related to agriculture and increasing output on the farms, we have barely made a beginning in our effort at transforming ourselves into a modern industrial society.

"Looking back over the period since we started our efforts at planned development, our achievement, though not inconsiderable in itself, has, in relation to needs, been insufficient. We are yet to make a marked dent on the problem of mass poverty—a problem made all the more intractable by the rapid growth of population.

"Alongside the growth in incomes, we should see that its distribution does not widen the existing inequalities of wealth and opportunity.

"Concentration of economic power tends to perpetuate inequality; a socialist reconstruction is intended to end it. A natural corollary to our political democracy is, therefore, a broad-based welfare State with increasing attention to investment in our human resources.

"A country like ours can ill-afford to divert its resources into non-productive uses like expenditure on armaments and we had been, by and large, successful in avoiding this: this is regrettably no longer so.

"The aggression on our northern borders has brought home to us the perils of inadequate attention to our defences. We are correcting this but cannot afford to slow down our efforts at economic growth, for the danger to our freedom and our democracy is no less internal.

"The only manner in which we can ensure that our resources are put to the constructive work of bettering conditions for our people is if we have the assurance of living in a world free from the threat of war.

"Man has now reached a stage when his capacity for destroying himself has never been greater. The only sane and lasting way out of the present situation is by achieving general disarmament and setting up a world authority. It is a pity —and one of particular import to us in India—that China has not been participating in the attempts for disarmament.

"In our relations with China and with our other neighbour, Pakistan, it is our earnest endeavour to aim at a peaceful and honourable settlement. We have striven all these years to bring about peace not only on our borders but throughout the world.

"Our policy of non-involvement in military blocs was directed to this end. We remain as firmly committed as ever to the methods of peace and to the ideal of a larger world community.

"The easing of the 'cold war' in the last few months owes not a little to the efforts of both the Soviet Premier, Mr. Khruschev and of President Kennedy, who was so cruelly and senselessly cut off from our midst last November. President Kennedy was a symbol of youth, hope and courage to a new generation which yearned for peace. We in India, who counted him as a great friend of this country, mourn his loss.

"As we begin another year in the life of our Republic let us re-dedicate ourselves to the ideals that have sustained this country in the past and to the completion of the unfinished task of building a brighter future for our people. This can be achieved if all of us work together with determination, unity and character. I wish you all well."

B. CPI Call For Opposition To Chinese Party Line—Central Executive Meeting: The Central Executive of the Communist Party of India (CPI), at its meeting in New Delhi on January 15, asked its members and supporters to be vigilant against all disruptive steps taken by individuals or groups of Communists to split the Party in response to "the open directives of Chinese or Indonesian leaders."

The Executive took strong exception to its counterpart in Indonesia making common cause with Chinese leaders and repeating the Chinese lie that a so-called "Dange clique" was acting as "spies of Mr. Nehru."

Such attacks were "a total violation of the spirit of the 81-Parties Conference which the Indonesian Communist Party claims that it supports."

The international Communist movement, it said, could not permit such interference in the internal affairs of other parties, "such slander and abuse against a brother party, such open and defiant calls for the formation of a rival party."

The Executive also adopted another resolution supporting the decisions of the All-India Trade Union Conference held in Bombay between December 13 and 15, 1963. It endorsed the 11-point charter of demands and the course of action decided upon.

It called upon all party units to mobilize their forces for the "national campaign of the toilers," threatening a countrywide protest strike if the demands listed in the charter, such as higher wages, better prices for producers and a reduction in prices and taxes, were not met.

Resolution On Bhuvaneshwar Session Of Congress:

In a resolution on the Bhuvaneshwar session of the Congress, passed on January 17, the CPI said that class struggles were inevitable and necessary for social development.

The Committee said that those who hoped to achieve socialism without a class struggle were living in Utopia.

The Central Executive Committee said that the Bhuvaneshwar session of the Congress "does not signify a shift to the Left, notwithstanding certain welcome sentiments expressed in its main resolution on democracy and socialism".

It said: "As a matter of fact, the Congress High Command has virtually rejected all important proposals for immediate concrete actions such as nationalization of banks, which dominated the speeches of an overwhelming majority of the delegates, including some prominent Congressmen. The entire operative portion of the resolution has been left hazy and without any clear lead for concrete measures against the vested interests such as foreign and Indian monopolies, profiteers and speculators or for the well-being of the working people".

The Executive, however, welcomed the "growing sentiments for socialism" on the part of the people, including the members of the ruling party. The Bhuvaneshwar session highlighted the "rising Left trends" within the Congress. The Left forces within the Congress came out sharply not only in criticizing monopolists and the vested interests, but in pressing forward certain concrete urgent demands in the interests of the people and the country.

"In socialism", the resolution said, "the means of production, distribution and exchange are under social ownership and exploitation of man by man is ended once and for all."

The Executive pointed out that "class struggles are an objective law of social development" and said: "Those who want to achieve socialism without a class struggle are either living in Utopia or they deliberately want to disarm the working people ideologically. Hence the Executive Committee fundamentally disagrees with the new Congress President, Mr. Kamaraj, when he calls upon the people to achieve socialism without a class struggle".

The future of the Indian people, the resolution said, lay not in renunciation of struggle but on their development in the spirit of scientific socialism. "The Communist Party of India will, of course, seek to develop such a struggle through the people and democratic means".

The Executive quoted the preamble of the constitution of the Communist Party of India to re-iterate its faith in achieving "full democracy and socialism by peaceful means" and said the controversy between the Congress and the Communists "is not whether socialism is to be achieved through peaceful means and based on parliamentary democracy. The controversy related to fundamental questions".

"A mere adherence to parliamentary democracy is not enough to safeguard democracy in practice for the common man".

The Executive said that the Congress session's declaration of its goal as the establishment of a new socialist State based on parliamentary democracy was nothing new.

After listing "the failure of the Government" to re-organize the agrarian relations through land reforms and assure economic prices for agricultural produce and cheap credit to the poor sections of the peasantry, the Executive called upon all democratic and patriotic forces to vigorously develop united action and struggle against Right reaction for a progressive orientation of Government policies affecting the interests of the masses and the country.

C. New Appointments To Central Cabinet: A communique issued from Rashtrapati Bhavan on January 22 announced that Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri and Mr. D. Sanjivayya had been appointed members of the Central Cabinet.

The communique said: "The President, on the advice of the Prime Minister, has been pleased to make the following appointments: Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri, MP, to be a Cabinet Minister and be Minister without Portfolio; and Shri Damodaran Sanjivayya to be a Cabinet Minister and be Minister of Labour and Employment."

The two appointments brought the strength of the Central Cabinet to 13. The Cabinet was reduced to almost half its size when the Kamaraj Plan was put into operation in August, 1963.

The appointment of Mr. Shastri as Minister without Portfolio was regarded in political circles as of high significance in the context of the Prime Minister's illness and the need to reduce his heavy burden of responsibilities in the governmental and parliamentary sphere.

The decision regarding the entry of Mr. Shastri in the Cabinet was finalized after important consultations between Mr. Nehru and the Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj.

Mr. Kamaraj and Mr. Shastri were the first to decide together to quit office in order to devote themselves to organizational work. But the special circumstances created by Mr. Nehru's illness impelled Mr. Nehru and Mr. Kamaraj to ask Mr. Shastri to join the Cabinet so that the Prime Minister's burden may be lightened.

In view of his record as Home Minister, Mr. Shastri was considered the most suitable person to assist Mr. Nehru at such a crucial time.

In April, 1961 Mr. Shastri became Home Minister. He was re-elected to the Lok Sabha in 1962 and continued to hold the Home portfolio until August, 1963, when he quit the Cabinet to take up party work.

Mr. Sanjivayya (42) was the first Harijan to become Chief Minister of a State. A lawyer, he was elected to Parliament in 1950. In 1952 he was elected to the Madras Assembly and became Minister for Housing and Co-operation.

After the separation of Andhra Pradesh from Madras in 1953, he became a member of the Andhra Cabinet and held the portfolios of Health and Planning. In 1955 he was elected to the Andhra Assembly and became Minister for Local Administration and Labour. He took over as Chief Minister in 1960. He was elected Congress President in 1962 and held that office for 19 months.

D. Trade Agreement With Afghanistan: A new Trade Agreement between India and Afghanistan was signed in New Delhi on January 21.

The arrangements, initially for a period of one year, will be renewable for another two years. The volume of trade between the two countries is expected to be in the region of Rs. 10 crores to Rs. 11 crores a year.

The arrangements provide for the exchange of specified goods like dry and fresh fruit, asafoetida, cumin seeds, medicinal herbs and other commodities from Afghanistan. India will export traditional items like textiles, tea, spices, certain engineering and electrical equipment and apparatus and hardware.

It was agreed that payment in respect of exports by Afghanistan of cotton and wool and by India of a specified list of non-traditional goods would be paid for in free foreign exchange.

Mr. D. S. Joshi, Secretary, Ministry of International Trade, signed for India and Dr. Nour Ali, Deputy Minister and leader of the delegation, on behalf of Afghanistan.

The two delegations drew up a schedule of prices for commodities. An agreed procedure for regulating the trade between the two countries was also evolved.

E. Mid-term Appraisal Of Third Plan: The Planning Commission's mid-term appraisal of the Third Five-Year Plan confirmed earlier reports that the annual rise in national income during the first two years of the Plan was only 2.5 per cent, or half the rate envisaged.

This "slow economic growth" was attributed by the Commission mainly "to a setback in agricultural production". It estimated that on present indications the shortfall in grain production may be three to five million tons, compared with the Plan target of 100 million tons.

It described the national effort during the first two years of the Plan as "more broad-based than before", and said that the advances made in several basic branches of industry, coal, power and transport, had strengthened the economy.

Even in industry there will be shortfalls in certain crucial sectors, and because of this the Fourth Plan will start at a lower base than originally contemplated.

There has been a heavy shortfall in the aggregate national product despite the fact that the aggregate investment has "probably increased significantly". All this, combined with efforts at mobilizing larger resources, has led to a rise in prices.

Since April when the third year of the Plan began the rise in the general price index exceeded 8 per cent, after falling by 3.6 per cent during the first year of the Plan and rising by 3 per cent during the second.

The Commission noted that a variety of measures to regulate prices and distribution of commodities had been taken. These have had some effect, but "the position is such that further action may become necessary to arrest this trend".

It estimated that the Plan outlay in the public sector during the first three years would be Rs. 4,198 crores and over the entire five-year period Rs. 8,000 crores.

Originally the public sector expenditure for the entire Plan was put at Rs. 8,300 crores, but provision was made for only Rs. 7,500 crores. Since then some more programmes have been approved.

Normal tax receipts, both at the Centre and in the States, have been more buoyant than estimated, but the non-Plan expenditure for national security having risen, the net realization over the Plan period under the item "Balance from Current Revenues" will show "a sizable deterioration".

Additional taxation is expected to yield resources exceeding the Plan target at the Centre. The position as between States varies, but on the whole a shortfall is indicated.

The balance of payments deficit on current account went up in 1962-63 after declining in the previous two years. The rise was, however, more than covered by rising disbursements of foreign aid, and consequently the draft on foreign exchange reserves and gross drawings from the International Monetary Fund were smaller in 1962-63.

Since the Plan was formulated, the foreign exchange requirements have been revised upwards because of the rise in prices, enlargement of the scope of some programmes and inclusion of new projects. Moreover, foreign exchange will be necessary to take advance action on certain Fourth Plan projects.

A total of Rs. 2,100 crores of foreign exchange for project imports is in sight. Additional commitments for projects and programmes can be entered into only on the basis of more aid being available. Additional commitments of non-project assistance required during the last two years of the Plan have been put at Rs. 450 crores.

After noting that export earnings are improving gradually, the Commission has found it necessary to caution that "it is not desirable to go on relying on foreign aid to the extent done in the past and every effort should be made to reach a reasonable degree of self-reliance by the Fifth Plan".

Some States have been drawing on the market at a rate much faster than visualized in the Plan. "But in view of the relative imbalance between different States and the Centre's need for resources it would be necessary to regulate the borrowing programmes of the States in the coming two years." Collections under small savings schemes will have to be stepped up.

The overall financial position in the States is satisfactory, but some States, which have not been able to raise resources on the scale expected, may find it difficult to implement their original Plans in full unless they take further steps to increase their resources.

The Commission was convinced that in the implementations of Plans and policies "there is need for greater emphasis on social objectives and in particular in bringing about a reduction in the disparities in income and wealth and ensuring basic necessities to the weaker sections".

If the situation in agriculture is disconcerting, that in industry is by no means encouraging. The review disclosed that the general index of industrial production rose by 6.5 per cent in 1961-62 and 8 per cent in 1962-63 compared with the estimated average rise of 11 per cent in the Plan.

There have, however, been significant increases in the field of producer goods and basic industries, the output in the basic metal industry rising by 26 per cent, metal products by 69 per cent, machinery by 22 per cent and chemical product by 23 per cent over the level in 1960.

The progress in a number of key industries in the private sector, such as alloy tool and steel, aluminium, steel castings and forgings, machine tools, certain types of machinery, cement, fertilizers, paper and newsprint, has been unsatisfactory.

Some of the public sector projects, particularly Bokaro, have also been much delayed, although investment in this sector over the five-year period is likely to be higher than originally visualized.

The budgetary outlays of the Centre and the State Governments in respect of both developmental and non-developmental expenditure have risen substantially during the current Plan. The rise has, however, been met by larger revenue and capital receipts than by an increase in budgetary deficits.

F. Export Credit And Guarantee Corporation Starts Operations: The Export Credit and Guarantee Corporation, an agency to strengthen and supplement the activities of existing institutions in the field of export finance, started its operations on January 15.

This marked a significant step forward in India's effort to boost exports by providing exporters with credit and guarantees to bring them on a par with their competitors abroad.

The new agency replaced the Export Risks Insurance Corporation which was claimed to have made good progress in credit insurance. In combining the two functions of credit guarantees and export risk insurance in a single institution, the pattern obtaining in USA and the UK has been followed.

The Export Credit and Guarantee Corporation will largely play a co-ordinating role and take up residuary functions. It will not compete, but will only collaborate with banks in providing export credit facilities. It will also grant credits and guarantees in foreign currency to facilitate import of raw material and semi-finished goods.

Its other functions will include guarantees to foreigners in respect of Indian exports and services and insurance to exporters against risks of loss due to failure to recover any amount payable to them.

The Minister for International Trade Mr. Manubhai Shah, told correspondents in New Delhi that the constitution of the agency itself represented the implementation of the most important recommendations of the study group on export finance.

G. Elections In Nagaland: It was announced in Kohima on January 19 that the Shilu Ao group had won 33 of the 46 seats in Nagaland's first Legislative Assembly.

It annexed all the three remaining seats. The three constituencies were Chaquoba, Chpozani and Ghaspani.

The final party position was: Shilu Ao group 33, Democratic Party 11, and Independents 2.

Of the 26 contested seats in Kohima and Mokokchung districts, the Shilu Ao group won 13. Fourteen of its members had earlier been returned unopposed and six elected to the Assembly by the Tuensang Regional Council.

The Governor of Nagaland, Mr. Vishnu Sahay, administered the oaths of office and secrecy.

The new Ministry consists of seven Ministers and one Deputy Minister.

The "caretaker" Government had five Ministers, all of whom have been retained in the new Ministry.

The Ministers are Mr. P. Shilu Ao, Mr. Hokieshe Sema, Mr. Jasokie Angami, Mr. R. O. Chiten Jamir, Mr. Akum Imlong, Mr. M. Kithan and Mr. Luthpru.

H. Uranium Deposits In Bihar: It was officially announced on January 26 that rich deposits of high grade uranium ore had been struck in Bhatin area, about 40 miles from Seraikela in Bihar, by the prospectors of the Atomic Energy Department.

This would justify, it was stated, the setting up of another uranium ore mill in the area, besides the existing one at Jaduguda.

The Jaduguda mine, presently the principal source of uranium ore in India, is expected to yield raw material for the production of the requisite quantity of atomic fuel for India's first atomic power station at Tarapur on the west coast of India.

[Prev. ref. 5549:IND:C]

B. Progress Of Development Plan: The Eight-Year Development Plan is now in its fourth year. It was launched in 1961.

Total investment of the Plan is Rp. 240,000 million, or Rp. 30,000 million a year. This represented about 13 per cent of the national income in 1960, though if one adds to this other Government and private projects that are not encompassed by the Plan, total investment in development will be at least 15 per cent.

The planners were mindful of the fact that the people's living standard is such that it would not be possible to burden them further with the paying of large sums. At the end of 1960 the burden of public debt, calculated on the basis of each Indonesian citizen, was Rp.686 per capita (with an average annual income per capita of Rp.2,500).

Low living standards and this burden of debt are the two reasons why the investment rate has been kept as moderate as possible. Yet the whole Plan is designed to raise national income by more than 11 per cent by 1960. If possible, there will be no deficit spending, no increase in taxation, and no interference with the annual Budget.

The annual budget for Government routine expenditure has been separated from that for development projects, and the Indonesian Development Bank finances those projects included in the Plan. Thus pressure on the annual Budget is greatly reduced, because a large portion of the capital expenditure is transferred to the development budget.

The main sources for financing the first Eight-Year Plan are the country's potential riches hidden in its soil and waters, receipts of trade products such as oil, rubber, copra, and tin, and the State Trading Enterprises, which are expected to contribute 55 per cent of their profits to the Development Bank.

There are in all 343 projects, classified into 335 A-projects and eight B-projects, and a minimum of 33 alternate projects to be constructed in all fields. A-projects are to promote the welfare of the people; B-projects are those intended to provide financial means for part of the A-projects, and in particular to cover foreign exchange requirements, estimated at about half.

In the first sub-stage (1961-64), projects are being constructed with the aim of meeting the basic needs for rice, clothing, pharmaceuticals, and paper, so that the country may become self-supporting in these commodities. Supply of enough rice and clothing is part of the Government's 'Sandang-Pangan' programme. Besides this, in the first sub-stage, extensive research and surveys will be made to determine the volume and location of deposits of minerals.

It is only in the second stage (1964-69) that all other projects will be carried out, especially for the development of industry, including heavy industry. Once basic industries have reached the self-supporting stage, a great saving in foreign currency will be effected.

The other half of the funds for the Plan will come from rupiah sources, in particular proceeds from the 1959 monetary measures, profits from State enterprises, investment of public savings, and sales of public bonds, capital goods, and consumer goods. Any shortage in either rupiah or foreign exchange sectors can be made good by increased production and exports, or by foreign credits based on technical and economic co-operation.

In this context an export drive was launched in which the State Trading Enterprises have been called on to intensify activities to boost exports.

In harnessing domestic capital, banks are playing an important role. The State has, besides the central bank—Bank Indonesia—established several commercial banks that have the task of mobilizing savings for development, of promoting banking habits, and enhancing financial contributions to the projects.

Two other special banks are being set up. First is the Village Community Development Bank, designed to cover the 47,000 villages and serve the rural community; it will collect savings and give short-term credits to farmers to help free them from usurers. This bank is intended to increase the purchasing power of villagers. Second is the Private Development Bank, which will help to finance private, as distinct from State, projects of importance.

C. Action Against Workers' Take-over Of Foreign Concerns: The Government stepped in on January 20 after workers had staged a take-over of the Unilever building and the Shell Oil Company in Djakarta.

Trade unionists were also reported to have taken control of 16 rubber and tea estates in West Java.

Workers at Unilever seized the switchboard, bolted the main doors, and claimed to have taken over the Corporation's operations in Indonesia in retaliation against British support for Malaysia. They warned the British and German managerial staff to keep away from the building.

The Unilever organization, one of the largest commercial enterprises operating in Indonesia, employs about 4,000 people.

At the Shell office, Mr. G. W. Holliday, Shell's chairman in Indonesia, denied a published claim by seven oil unions that they had taken over the office. He said that management still rested with himself and his staff, which included about 35 expatriates of varying nationalities.

Groups of workers led by members of the big Perbum union ran up a red flag besides the Indonesian flag at the Shell building entrance and pasted signs on the walls saying "Indonesian property". For part of the morning the Shell switchboard was out of action and arguments were reported to be going on inside between management officials and union leaders.

Reasons given by workers for the take-over attempts included the "detention" of two Indonesian pilgrim ships at Hong Kong and the blocking of United States spare parts for Indonesian Air Force transports, also at Hong Kong.

The Government appointed on January 20 a co-ordinator to mediate between the unions and the Unilever Corporation's management.

Dr. Johannes Leimena, acting President of Indonesia in the absence of Dr. A. Sukarno (away in Tokyo) appealed to trade unionists not to take matters into their own hands. A broadcast statement said that he could understand the anti-British feeling, but asked people to obey Government regulations.

The Government mediators told the trade unionists who tried to take over British firms that their action was illegal and work should continue as usual.

Mr. B. W. Schwarz, director of the Unilever Corporation, announced on January 21 that a mediator had ruled that the British management should remain authority.

Mr. Schwarz discussed the take-over of Unilever with representatives of the unions and Government mediators led by Mr. Slamet Izzam. He said that they had had "a most successful meeting". Mr. Izzam, he said, had decided not to recognize any take-over action.

On January 24, President Sukarno ordered his Army and police to prevent labour unions seizing British commercial enterprises.

He said that the Army, police and civil administration must specifically "maintain the management" of the Shell Oil Company.

His order re-inforced a "no take-over" decree issued in September, 1963. Steel-helmeted police with rifles and sub-machine guns broke up a unionist demonstration at the British Chartered Bank in Djakarta on January 24.

The police commander told them that the Bank was to remain under British management. Two officials of the Indonesian State Bank were appointed by the Government to remain in the Bank, apparently to give a semblance of Government supervision.

JAPAN

A. Terms For Signing Peace Treaty With USSR: The Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, said on December 12, 1963 that Japan would not sign a Peace Treaty with the Soviet Union unless Russia returned to Japan the islands of Kunashiri and Etorofu.

He made the remark in response to questions asked by Mr. Ismau Akamatsu (Socialist) at the Budget Committee of the Lower House of Diet.

He added, however, that Russia had no intention of returning these islands. This was indicated when he met the Russian First Deputy Premier, Mr. A. Mikoyan, after the funeral service for the late President J. F. Kennedy in Washington.

B. Shipbuilding Boom: According to Lloyd's Register for shipping returns published in London on January 22, Japan was the world's leading shipbuilding country in 1963.

She was followed by West Germany, Britain and Sweden in that order.

The output, measured in gross tonnage launched, was: Japan 2,374 million, West Germany 979,000, Britain 938,000 and Sweden 867,000 tons.

Ships under construction throughout the world at the end of December, 1963 totalled 8,401,931 gross tons—a decrease of 771,103 tons since the previous quarter.

No returns were available for Russia, China and East Germany.

This was the lowest total under construction for three years. But the Register said despite evidence of a widespread fall in activity shown by reduced tonnage for nearly all countries, the truth was actually the reverse.

C. Progress Of Steel Industry: Japan's steel production has expanded fourfold within the short span of a decade and in 1963 the industry turned out 31 million tons of steel, ranking the country together with West Germany as the world's third largest steel producer, behind only USA and the Soviet Union, but eclipsing Britain and France.

This and other amazing records reflecting the vigorous growth of the Japanese iron and steel industry were contained in a report issued recently by the Japan Iron and Steel Federation.

Production during the first 11 months of 1963 (January to November) totalled 28,397,000 tons and, according to a survey by the Federation, including the production for December, the total output for 1963 was given as 31,400,000 tons, which is almost equal to West Germany's estimated production of 31,700,000 tons for the year. On the basis of current production, the industry expects that Japan will have outstripped West Germany for sole occupation of third place by the end of the current fiscal year ending in March, 1964.

A graphic idea of the extent to which the industry has grown can be seen from the production figure for 1953 which was only 7,622,161 tons. The 1963 production figures (31 million metric tons of crude steel, 20 million metric tons of pig-iron and 25 million metric tons of hot rolled steel including special steel) represent an increase of 13 to 18 per cent over those of 1962.

The report noted that in 1959 Japan bypassed France (steel production evaluated in terms of crude steel) and that in 1961 it surged ahead of the United Kingdom. Now, another two years later the Japanese industry is on a par with that of West Germany and on the point of moving ahead of West Germany to stand next only to the two leading giants.

The tremendous growth is credited largely to the insatiable domestic demand generated by the rapid expansion of the Japanese economy.

Exports also continued to show a steady increase, thanks to improved quality and lower cost brought about by streamlined production methods.

D. Floating Fair: The Japan Industry Floating Fair Association has announced that the fifth Floating Fair will visit 11 European countries next Summer.

This will be the first European visit for Japan's Floating Fair since the programme was initiated in 1956. It will also be the first time for the ship to bring its exhibits to the industrialized nations of the world.

The purpose of this mission is to introduce to Europe the nature of Japan's industrial development through exhibitions and displays of heavy and light machinery, durable consumer goods, textiles, and general merchandise—all examples of the high levels of Japan's technological achievements.

Representatives of the exhibitors will be on board to give information and answer visitors' questions.

A secondary purpose is to display various aspects of Japanese life today through the medium of diagrams, models, and photo exhibits.

Japan is the first country to design and build a ship for this purpose. The 12,200-ton Sakura Maru, commissioned in October, 1962, was constructed at a cost of £27 million, and all materials used, from engines and instruments to tableware and furnishings, were manufactured in Japan. In other words, the vessel represents the best of Japanese industrial techniques.

The Floating Fair's first trip was to South-East Asia in 1956; the second, to Latin America, in 1958-59; the third, to Oceania, in 1960-61; and the fourth, to the Near East and Africa, in 1962-63.

E. Discovery Of Antidote To Nicotine: The discovery of an anti-nicotine medicine, which is claimed to be capable of curing nicotine poisoning and of helping the kidneys neutralise nicotine entering the body through smoking, has been reported by a medical research group.

The medicine, developed by a group of experts of the Nihon University hospital in Tokyo, was stated to have helped to complete recovery over 150 patients suffering from nicotine poisoning who were treated with it. All the patients were stated to have recovered in one to four weeks on daily doses of half-a-gram of the medicine in powder form with little or no side-effects.

Dr. Kichiro Imamoto, one of the experts responsible for the discovery, was quoted as saying that the medicine not only cures nicotine poisoning, but stimulates kidney functions and neutralises the ill-effects of nicotine.

No name was given for the medicine, nor was its composition revealed because of pending patent applications in Japan as well as in the United States and Britain. However, Dr. Imamoto said it was made of several ingredients extracted from barks and roots with pine resin as base.

Work on the anti-nicotine drug was started in 1949 and positive results obtained several years later. Subsequently, experiments were carried out successfully on animals for seven years before being used on humans. It was stated that the medicine can be administered in any form —orally or by injection. It can even be sprayed with good effect on tobacco before smoking.

LAOS

A. Accord On Temporary Shifting Of Capital: The neutralist Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, and his half-brother and leader of the Left-wing Pathet Lao, Prince Souphanouvong, agreed on January 21 that Government organs and offices should be temporarily shifted to the Royal Laotian capital of Luang Prabang from the administrative capital of Vientiane.

It had been decided by representatives of the two Princes earlier that Luang Prabang should be neutralized and demilitarised and a mixed police force set up there to maintain law and order.

This decision was the first significant step taken by the neutralist and Left-wing leaders to implement the 1962 Geneva Agreement which calls for the formation of a national coalition Government of the neutralist, Left-wing and Rightist factions.

Prince Souvanna Phouma returned to Vientiane on January 20 from Sam Neua, headquarters of the Pathet Lao forces, after reaching the agreement with Prince Souphanouvong. News of the agreement was broadcast by Pathet Lao Radio.

The two Princes also agreed that all Laotian problems should be settled on the basis of the 1962 Geneva Agreement and other accords reached among the three factions.

Prince Souphanouvong and his Ministers and State Secretaries will go to Luang Prabang after its neutralization to participate in the coalition Government.

Before the Government organs are moved to Luang Prabang, a "summit" conference of the two Princes and the Right-wing leader, Gen. Phoumi Nosavan, will be held "to examine and discuss ways of implementing the Agreement."

The neutralist army leader, Gen. Kong Lae, and his Pathet Lao counterpart, Gen. Singkapo, will continue to hold discussions on the Plain of Jars to end the sporadic clashes that have been going on between the two sides.

A provisional Laotian Government of National Union was formed in the Plain of Jars on June 11, 1962, and was sworn-in by King Savang Vatthana in Vientiane on June 23. It consists of Prince Souvanna Phouma (Premier), Prince Souphanouvong and Gen. Phoumi Nosavan (Vice-Premiers). Besides Prince Souvanna Phouma, the neutralist group consists of eight Ministers and three Secretaries of State, while the Leftist and Rightist factions have two Ministers and two Secretaries of State each besides their leaders.

Prince Souphanouvong and his group, however, refused to participate in the coalition Government because of the security situation in Vientiane. They demanded the neutralization of the capital as a condition for their joining the Government.

Now that agreement has been reached on the neutralization of Luang Prabang, the effective functioning of the coalition Government and the implementation of the Geneva Agreement will become possible, although there are still many hurdles to be crossed.

A. European And American Firms Blacklisted: It was announced in Beirut on January 12 that 20 European and American firms had been blacklisted for violating the Arab trade embargo against Israel.

French singing and film star Juliette Greco, Italy's singer Marino Marini and British composer Tony Charles were also declared persona non grata and barred from entering Lebanon. The showing of the films and the sale of the records of these stars were also banned.

The business firms were boycotted because they were said either to have trade dealings with Israel or represented Israeli films and the film stars were blacklisted because they reportedly contributed to Israeli or Zionist organizations.

MALAYSIA

A. Conditions For "Summit" Talks: Commenting on the Sukarno-Macapagal statement issued at the conclusion of their talks in Manila on January 11 (see page 5648), the Malaysian Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak said on January 12 that Malaysia would agree to a new South-East Asian "summit" meeting with Indonesia and the Philippines only if certain assurances were given before the meeting.

Tun Razak's statement took the form of five questions posed to the leaders of the Philippines and Indonesia. They were:

Does this mean that the two countries recognize Malaysia as an independent sovereign State?

Does it mean that Indonesia agrees to withdraw her policy of confrontation so that the meeting could be held in an atmosphere of goodwill?

Does it mean that Indonesia is prepared to withdraw her troops massed along the borders of Sabah (North Borneo) and Sarawak?

Does it mean that Indonesia agrees to withdraw her troops now engaged in operations deep in Malaysian territory in Sabah and Sarawak?

If so—would Indonesia agree to accept a neutral nation acceptable to Malaysia and Indonesia to act as a referee to ensure that all the terms of the truce are strictly and scrupulously carried out?

He said: "If we could be assured on all those points nothing would make us happier than to attend a new 'summit' conference anywhere and at any time."

Economic Progress:

Tun Abdul Razak told the House of Representatives on January 10 that in spite of Indonesia's confrontation, Malaysia was making good progress.

The fact that the Government could tackle an £80 million development programme this year showed Malaysia's ability to convert money into tangible projects.

Of this sum the British Government would give £7 million as a grant towards the capital cost of Malaysian defence, and £2 million as a grant for development of the Borneo states. Although development estimates for Malaysia totalled £80 million, from past experience there would be an overall carry-over of about 20 per cent into 1965, he said, so the actual expenditure would be about £65 million.

He said the first Malaysian Development Plan for this year was the product of Malaysian thinking, and would include not only existing projects but new projects.

With British and Singapore financial help the expenditure target in the Sarawak plan could be met without undue strain on resources. Singapore would provide £1,500,000 in re-imbursement of federal development expenditure in the state, and £3,300,000 as the first instalment of the loan for the Borneo states.

SUMMARY: Constitution (First Amendment) Bill Comes Into Force; Barter Agreement With Poland; United Opposition Front Formed.

A. Constitution (First Amendment) Bill Comes Into Force: President Ayub Khan has given assent to the Constitution (First Amendment) Bill, making the fundamental rights justiciable and changing the name of the State as the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

The Act, which became operative from January 15, enlarges the jurisdiction of the courts for the enforcement of the fundamental rights incorporated in the Constitution.

The First Amendment to the Constitution, which was adopted by the National Assembly during its last session in Dacca, makes it obligatory on the part of the Advisory Council of Islamic Ideology to examine all laws with a view to bringing them "in conformity with the Holy Quran and Sunnah". Furthermore, the Council has to submit its progress report for each year to the Parliament for scrutiny by January 15.

In the Principles of Policy of the Constitution a new principle has been added which lays down that no law shall be repugnant to the teachings and requirements of Islam as set out in the Holy Quran and Sunnah and that all existing laws shall be brought in conformity with the Holy Quran and Sunnah.

The new Act also abolishes the tribal areas in East Pakistan. Article 242 of the Constitution, which gave the extent of tribal areas, has been so amended as to do away with the tribal areas in the East Wing. Thus jurisdiction of the courts will be extended to the tribal areas of the East Wing, where in the past FCR was applicable.

Mr. Khursheed Ahmad, Central Minister for Law and Parliamentary Affairs, who made these announcements at a news conference in Karachi while explaining the significant changes made by the First Amendment to the Constitution, said that the supremacy of Legislature had now become an established fact. No more proof was required of the constitutional power of the National Assembly which had amended the Constitution in exercise of the authority vested in it under the Constitution. The country, he maintained, was being run on strictly democratic lines.

He alluded to another consequence of the First Amendment. He said the Amendment was in the nature of "an abdication" by the Legislature in favour of the courts.

He said that some critics, though hopelessly in a minority, had stated that the Amendment constituted a "condemnation" of the Constitution. This, he maintained, was a totally baseless insinuation. The first Amendment abundantly proved the successful working of the Constitution. It was a proof of the fact that the Constitution embodied the change of Constitution.

B. Barter Agreement With Poland: Pakistan signed in Rawalpindi on January 11 a Barter Agreement with Poland for the export of raw jute and chrome ore against import of vehicles.

The two-way trade would amount to Rs. 5,000,000, while the value of exports from Pakistan would be Rs. 1,250,000.

The vehicles to be imported from Poland would include delivery vans, motorcycles, bicycles and autocycles.

With the inclusion of Mr. Abdul Waheed Khan, there are six Ministers from West Pakistan and four from East Pakistan.

D. Third Plan Approved By National Economic Council: An extremely ambitious Third Five-Year Plan with an outlay of Rs. 4,950 crores has been approved by Pakistan's National Economic Council, which met in Karachi under the chairmanship of President Ayub Khan.

The Plan, scheduled to go into operation from July 1, 1965, aims at increasing the national income by 30 per cent and per capita income by 15 per cent and the planners expect that Pakistan, through a successful implementation of the Plan, would have taken a giant step towards creation of a truly welfare State.

The estimates of total outlay targets, sectoral allotments, etc., are only tentative at this stage, and are likely to undergo various degrees of modification during the next 18 months before the Plan is launched. But it is evident that the Ayub regime is intent on making a determined effort to extend the economic base of the country.

The grandiose character of the Plan is best illustrated by targets in the Second Plan now nearing completion of its fourth year. The total outlay of the Second Plan is only Rs. 2,300 crores, less than half of the proposed outlay for the Third Plan. Mr. Said Hassan, Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission told newsmen on January 14 that even though the foreign exchange component of the Plan would be reduced to 30 per cent, as compared with 43 per cent during the current Plan period, the actual requirement of foreign aid was too big to admit of any complacency.

Or is it likely that the export earning more or less is static and would rise to a ready level so that Pakistan could finance its Plan from its own earnings?

The main feature of the Third Plan outline is the deliberate determination to accelerate the rate of development in the East Wing. Of the total outlay of Rs. 4,950 crores, Rs. 550 crores has been allotted in respect of projects in East Pakistan.

The long-term goal is to complete the removal of disparities between the two Wings by 1985. Industry gets a lion's share of 30 per cent of the total outlay, and it is expected that five million more jobs will be created.

In the proposed Plan, East Pakistan will have a total share of Rs. 2,550 crores and West Pakistan Rs. 2,400 crores. The main objective of the Plan will be to increase the national income by 30 per cent. The proposed increase is 34 per cent in East Pakistan and 27 per cent in West Pakistan.

The five million additional jobs is expected to absorb the current additions to the labour force during the Plan period.

Some of the other objectives are to strengthen the country's balance of payments position by increasing exports to an annual level of Rs. 400 crores by 1970, compared with the existing annual earnings of Rs. 280 crores; to develop basic industries for the manufacture of producer goods; to arrest the menacing growth of population by taking decisive steps towards population control; to make substantial progress towards the establishment of a welfare State; and to remove transport bottlenecks in all cases where they may be inhibiting economic growth.

E. United Opposition Front Formed: Three Opposition Parties in West Pakistan on January 22 formally organized themselves in a National Democratic Front for "re-establishing full and complete democracy in the country".

The Parties are the National Awami Party, the Awami League, and the Councillors' faction of the Muslim League.

There had been an informal National Democratic Front all these 18 months under the leadership of the late Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy without the formal organizational set-up to fight for the democratization of the Constitution. But now the Front will have regular organizational set-up governed by a 22-member Council which will be its principal and plenary body. The Front is headed by Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan, President of the Awami League in West Pakistan and member of the National Assembly.

The Front has agreed on a six-point minimum programme which aims at the achievement of democratic constitutions, repeal of repressive laws, direct election to national and provincial assemblies on the basis of adult franchise, release of all political prisoners, independent judiciary and restoration of the powers of the Supreme and High Courts in the country and finally unrestricted fundamental rights to be guaranteed the people of Pakistan.

Khwaja Nazimuddin Demands Right Of Self-Determination:

In his presidential address to the Council of the Opposition Muslim League (Councillors' faction) in Dacca on January 12, Khwaja Nazimuddin (a former Governor-General and Prime Minister) demanded for the people the legitimate right of self-determination and the right to criticise the Government.

He regretted that the present administration had denied the people "legitimate rights of self-determination and criticism of the Government." These demands had been termed "disruption".

He said that while his Party had the support of the masses and the intelligentsia, the League faction led by President Ayub Khan "represents only the privileged classes".

He accused the Ayub faction of advocating "controlled democracy", which was a negation of democracy.

He said that his Party was determined to do away with the Frontier Crimes Regulation in West Pakistan and also stood for universal adult franchise.

The speech, in which he criticized the Government and the ruling party led by President Ayub Khan, had been practically blacked out by most of the newspapers in West Pakistan.

Khwaja Nazimuddin's demand for self-determination for the people came in the wake of similar demands by the East Pakistan Committee of the National Democratic Front and Maulana Bhashani, leader of the National Awami Party.

Chaudhry Mohammed Ali, leader of the Nizam-e-Islam Party and a former Premier, told a news conference in Lahore on January 19 that during his recent tour of West Pakistan he found that "people in general were terribly terror-stricken".

His impression was that villagers were hard hit by "bribery, corruption and crime".

F. Muslim League Council Resolutions: The following are some of the resolutions passed unanimously on the conclusion of the two-day session of the All-Pakistan Muslim League Council in Dacca on December 5, 1963:

"This meeting of the Pakistan Muslim League Council places on record its deep sorrow at the untimely death of President Kennedy at the hands of an assassin. The party strongly condemns violence and assassinations. The party has deep sympathy with the people of the United States in their great loss. This meeting also sends its heartfelt condolences to Mrs. Kennedy, her children and the rest of the bereaved family.

"While welcoming the partial nuclear test ban Treaty, we urge nations, great and small, to lend the full weight of their support for progress towards universal and total disarmament, the achievement of which remains a prerequisite of lasting peace and orderly progress of the world community.

"We extend our wholehearted support to the Government of Pakistan in their policy of seeking a just, honourable and peaceful settlement of outstanding disputes with India and deplore the tendency on the part of the Government of India to further aggravate and prolong conflicts and seek to intimidate other countries in the area through devious means.

"The people of Pakistan are prepared to lay down their lives to safeguard their independence and integrity.

"This meeting of the Pakistan Muslim League Council views with grave concern the developments in Assam, Tripura and West Bengal as a result of which thousands of Indian Muslims are being evicted from their hearths and homes in utter disregard of legal and normal principles universally accepted as the basis of civilized conduct.

"The inhuman atrocities perpetrated on these helpless Indian citizens merely because they are Muslims has caused deep anxiety among the people of Pakistan. The Indian Government's declared policy of effecting the eviction of more Muslims from India shows a wanton disregard of consequence of Indian policies. The people of Pakistan will not rest till justice has been secured for these unfortunate victims whose forcible eviction continues to affect the peace and tranquillity of this region.

"This meeting invites a UN commission to inquire into the genesis of the problem and the conditions under which the Government of India is carrying out its avowed object of uprooting countless thousands of its Muslim citizens and forcing them out of their native land to seek refuge in Pakistan.

"We invite the attention of the United Nations Refugee Rehabilitation Agency to the sad plight of these innocent Indian Muslims who have lost their homes and property in India and whose sustenance, accommodation and rehabilitation are placing an increasing burden on the economy of Pakistan.

"This meeting of the Pakistan Muslim League Council views with grave concern the situation arising from the recent supply of arms aid to India notwithstanding the unilateral cease-fire by China or the latter's repeated call for negotiated settlement of the Sino-Indian border question. Judged against this background and also in the context of her record of aggressions in the past, the augmentation of India's military strength represents a threat to the security of Pakistan and other smaller nations in the region. The continuance of arms aid to India is causing serious concern and resulting in heightened tension in this region.

"This meeting urges the people of India, our mutual friends in the Afro-Asian region and the major world Powers to realise the unwisdom of the Government of India's policy of national chauvinism which militates against peace and tranquillity not only in this region but in the world as a whole and commends to them the desirability of using their good offices to discourage the Government of India from pursuing this policy.

"This meeting of the Pakistan Muslim League Council views with grave concern the continued failure of the Government of India to honour its international commitments and to implement UNCIP resolutions on Kashmir.

"Any attempt on the part of the Indian Government to secure a partition of Kashmir along the cease-fire line or to merge the territory of occupied Kashmir with India in flagrant violation of UNCIP resolutions will be resolutely and steadfastly opposed with every means available to Pakistan.

"The right of self-determination of the people of Kashmir which is being denied by the Government of India, remains the only just and honourable means of resolving the Kashmir dispute. The people of Pakistan are determined to secure this right for their captive brethren in Indian-occupied Kashmir not only in the interest of justice and equity but also in the greater need for peace in this region for which a just and honourable solution of the Kashmir dispute is an essential imperative.

"This meeting of the Pakistan Muslim League Council records its wholehearted support for a second Afro-Asian Conference to secure the solidarity of African and Asian nations whose need for co-operation and mutual support at this crucial stage in their development is a matter of the greatest urgency."

G. People's Credit Department Inaugurated: The Finance Minister, Mr. Mohammed Shoaib, inaugurated in Karachi on January 15 the People's Credit Department of the National Bank of Pakistan.

Speaking on the occasion, he said that the best way of checking concentration of wealth in the hands of a few was to help build up a stable middle class. The middle class could be developed effectively if the small investors were encouraged and given ready assistance in the form of bank loans or technical advice to set up their projects.

He commended the efforts of the National Bank for starting a new service with this principal aim to serve the small traders and industrialists and hoped that the service would help develop a strong middle class and also raise the living standards of the common people.

He emphasized the need to organize the people's credit service in such a way that the would-be investor could draw on useful information about his capability to undertake the particular project. The People's Credit Department, he said, should not serve as a mere lending agency.

Earlier, Mr. Mumtaz Hasan, Managing Director of the National Bank of Pakistan, in his welcome address, assured that the People's Credit Department would extend its services to a very large body of people, the small traders and industrialists. The Credit Department would function at every one of the Bank's branches which he put at 328 in the country.

He said that "while it was of utmost importance that private initiative and enterprise be preserved, it was essential that conditions be created in which every one of us has an opportunity to go forward if he has the ability and the will to do so, and to contribute his share to the overall development effort." That, he added, was the way to reduce social and economic inequalities and to build a happy and prosperous society.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Television Agreement With USA: It was made known on January 10 that two temporary television stations would be installed by the US Army Corps of Engineers—one in Riyadh and one in Jidda—following the pattern established in Sudan where a temporary TV system was installed pending the more elaborate permanent installations.

The difference is that in Saudi Arabia the temporary measures—which are being paid for by the Saudi Government—are to be followed by the building of permanent TV stations by the Radio Corporation of America and the US National Broadcasting Company, while in Sudan the British Thompson Organization's temporary installations were followed by permanent stations built by West German concerns through "technical aid".

More than 11 million riyals (just under £1 million) have been allocated in the current Budget for this purpose.

SYRIA

A. New Economic Measures: In a broadcast over Damascus Radio on January 6, Dr. George Tomeh, Minister of Economy, announced new economic measures.

He said that the present crisis was due to the maladministration of previous regimes and the disastrous wheat crop, which had reduced the country's foreign exports by 250,000 tons.

His aim was to prevent the expansion of loans both in the private and public sectors "in order to avoid inflation". Duties of 40 to 70 per cent are to be imposed on imports of non-essential and luxury goods and the duty of 15 per cent will remain on all essential goods and raw materials for industry.

The present currency crisis is to be eased by encouraging imports without allocating foreign currency to local traders and industrialists by encouraging the return of Syrian funds in the form of capital and other goods. In recent months political crises have caused local capitalists to transfer funds abroad. Strict currency controls are to be operated in future.

Dr. Tomeh has left Syria for Bonn heading an official delegation which will continue the negotiations for a West German loan of about DM350 million for the Euphrates Dam. The necessary surveys have already been made by West German experts, but it was reported that West Germany would seek strong guarantees from the Syrian delegation before releasing the necessary funds. The Dam will be Syria's most important project in the next five years. It was reported that the Government was also to press forward with its scheme for a Lattakia-Aleppo-Kamichli railway line and would seek a loan from USSR for this project. The annual Budget would be delayed until Dr. Tomeh's return from Europe.

B. Range Of Territorial Waters Fixed At 12 Miles: Syria issued on December 29, 1963 a decree fixing the range of her territorial waters at 12 nautical miles.

The decree said Syria was entitled to take all necessary measures within her territorial sea to protect herself against any act jeopardizing her security and interests.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Government's Programme: The Government's programme was outlined by the Prime Minister, Mr. Nguyen Ngoc Tho, and his Cabinet colleagues at a news conference in Saigon on January 6.

Mr. Tho explained that the policy pursued by the Government was one of moderate revolution. It required a revision and re-examination of the fundamental concepts of the former regime. This was necessary to avoid the mistakes committed and to initiate more appropriate policies.

He announced that Maj.-Gen. Do Mau would succeed Gen. Tran Tu Cai at the head of the Ministry of Information and that the Ministry of Security would become the Ministry of Interior under Gen. Ton That Dinh.

The Rural Affairs Minister, Mr. Tran Lo Quang, said that the rural economy had suffered from two major shortcomings: (1) unequal distribution of national income; and (2) low production due to outdated cultivation methods and poor organization of farm production.

He said that the two problems would be tackled by the Government to improve the peasants' living standards.

To solve the first problem, he said, the Government had ruled minimum prices for some farm products, including paddy. The dealers who attempt to pay lower prices would be punished. The Government was also planning to establish a rice trade board to guarantee minimum prices for paddy and rice at the very places of production. While town workers were protected by the system of minimum basic wages, countryside workers enjoyed no such privilege.

As for modernization of agriculture, he promised that "all the nation's technical and financial resources" would be made available for that purpose. He said that the supply of chemical fertilizer would be doubled or trebled to boost rice production.

After the improvement of farming techniques would come "a rational organization of farm production," he said, adding that to avoid dispersing the means of production, the Government would strengthen the system of co-operatives and farmers' associations.

Mr. Nguyen Van Vang, Special Commissioner for Administrative Affairs at the Prime Minister's Office, said there had been a thorough administrative re-organization in the provinces for the past two months, to raise what he called "a new wind" that would make the rural population happy.

The Education Minister, Mr. Pham Hoang Ho, said that his Ministry's major concern was to institute compulsory education, "at least up to the elementary level", for the children in the countryside. Only 65 per cent of these children were receiving education at present, some of them attending classes only two hours a day.

According to him this problem was hard to solve, because providing education for rural children, even for four hours a day, would cost the whole current budget of the Education Ministry. There were, in addition, more schools to be built for the 35 per cent of illiterate children.

The Public Works and Communications Minister, Mr. Tran Ngoc Oanh, said his Ministry had been concentrating on two kinds of work—to renovate existing public works and to build new ones.

He said: "At present, our main concern is to settle problems related to water, electricity and dredging. New projects need time to be completed."

Joint Study Team Calls For Reforms:

Meanwhile, a joint Viet-Namese-United States report has warned that the war in the delta "cannot ever be won" unless Viet-Nam's new Government carried out reforms at the village level.

The report was prepared by four Viet-Namese officials and one United States aide. They supervised a 21-man team that carried out a survey in Long An Province where the Communists had made deep inroads in the Government's positions since June, 1963.

Summarizing the 155-page joint study based on interviews with 1,500 peasant families in 15 villages south of Saigon, the supervisors said: "The team members agreed that even if all of the hamlets in the delta are like these 15 (but not much worse) there is still time to change the Government's policies and to win the war.

"However, if these changes are not immediately instituted and the people who have held out so long against the Viet-Cong do not have something to rally to, the war in the delta cannot ever be won."

Although US observers did not question the urgent need for village-level reforms, they voiced the opinion that the Government had more time than the report suggested.

They also asserted that the Government machinery was incapable of immediate reforms, however well intentioned the top officials might be.

The summary of the report was sprinkled with recommendations for correcting abuses of local officials and widespread mismanagement of the hamlet programme, which was founded as the bulwark of the campaign against the Communists.

"The majority of the people want, as their highest priority, security," the report asserted. But it recommended that the Government stop relocating families from outlying areas into the hamlets in its efforts to provide security because the relocation caused such bitter resentment among the peasants.

The survey, carried out during December and early January, noted that even the cheapest peasant homes cost 5,000 piasters to build and that the average one cost four times that much. It added that the Government allotted a relocation allowance of only 2,000 piasters for new homes and that many families told the survey team members that they received only 1,000 piasters. Some peasants said they had received no money at all.

The report also recommended that the Government stop forcing peasants to serve in the hamlet militia and start paying those few willing to serve because of their grievances against the Communists or because of their need for extra income.

One critical area pinpointed by the report was that it called attention to the Government's failure to hold the loyalty of the young people.

It added that the Government's educational system was "too mechanical to cope with the Viet-cong" propagandists. It was perhaps the greatest Government failure to date because it was the young who were the prime targets "for the Viet-cong."

The survey was also critical of the Government military forces for failing to re-inforce part-time militia when they were attacked by Communist guerrillas.

B. Opposition To Neutralism: The Council of Notables decided by a unanimous vote on January 22 to request the Government to suspend diplomatic relations with France.

This was because of President de Gaulle's policy in Asia, particularly the proposal for the neutralization of Viet-Nam.

The vote was taken at a closed session.

Addressing a mass rally at Nha Trang on December 27, 1963 the Chairman of the Military Revolutionary Council and Chief of State, Gen. Duong Van Minh, rejected neutralism as a "demogogic scheme of Communists."

He said: "Considering the geographical and political situation of our country, to fall into the neutralist trap would mean to surrender unconditionally because neutralization would allow communism to subsist and to expand."

C. Seizure Of Mr. Diem's Properties: The military Government has formally decreed seizure of all properties of the former ruling family of President Ngo Dinh Diem and its agents.

Seizure of the property began on November 2, but the formal decree was not made public until the last week of December, 1963.

The decree also ordered seizure of the financial holdings of the political parties controlled by the former ruling family.

There is no accurate estimate of the value of the family's estate. Just after the coup, a fleet of coastal ships and related cargos and factories were seized from Mr. Nguyen Van Buu, alleged financial agent of the family.

Seizure was also ordered of the assets of the Women's Solidarity Movement, headed by Mrs. Nhu, now in exile in France.

A decree also ordered confiscation of the property of Roman Catholic Archbishop Ngo Dinh Thuc, one of Mr. Diem's brothers, who is in Rome. Archbishop Thuc was understood to have had extensive properties in his own name, but much of the property he administered belongs to the Church.

The Church has been ordered to stop erecting buildings on the land which, according to the Government, was illegally donated by the Diem regime. The revolutionary junta has demanded payment for the land.

Investigation of concealed property is continuing, and stiff fines and prison terms have been ordered for persons concealing evidence concerning transfer of the Ngo property to other persons.

ASIAN RECORDER

AFGHANISTAN

A. Air Agreement With Pakistan: An Agreement was signed between Afghanistan and Pakistan in Karachi on January 24 revising the air routes under the existing Air Agreement and authorizing the Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) to fly via Kabul to Moscow and points beyond and also to Tehran and points beyond.

The following is the joint communique issued by the Governments of Afghanistan and Pakistan:

"Discussions were held between the representatives of the Government of Pakistan and the Government of Afghanistan for the revision of the route pattern under the existing Air Services Agreement between the two countries.

"As a result of the discussions which were held in a very friendly and cordial atmosphere, new routes were agreed for operation by the airlines of the two countries.

"The Agreement on the revised routes were signed today (January 24) by Mr. Hameeduddin Ahmed, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Defence, on behalf of the Government of Pakistan and by Sardar Sultan Mahmood Ghazi, President of the Afghan Air Authority, on behalf of the Government of Afghanistan.

"On this basis the Afghan airlines will be operating services on Kabul-Peshawar and Kandhar-Quetta routes. They will also operate via Lahore to New Delhi and via Karachi to Bombay and beyond.

"Under this same arrangement PIA will now be able to fly via Kabul to Moscow and beyond and via Kabul to Tehran and beyond. PIA will also be establishing two new air services, namely, Peshawar-Kabul and Quetta-Kandhar.

"With the establishment of the air services between Pakistan and Afghanistan on the basis of the revised Agreement between the two countries, the existing friendly relations will be further strengthened.

"They will also contribute in the promotion of trade and commerce between the two countries and help the transit trade to and from Afghanistan. It is expected that the services on the new routes may be established as soon as possible."

A Pakistan Defence Ministry spokesman later told newsmen that he expected PIA services, under the new Agreement to start in about four months' time. He said that arrangements would have to be made for conversion of the domestic airports into international airports, providing customs, immigration, posts and health facilities.

The route via Kabul, in his view, was the "obvious route" to go to Moscow from Karachi and West Pakistan. This was the only route from Islamabad, the new capital, also to Tehran and Moscow.

CAMBODIA

A. Convening Of Geneva Type Of Conference—British Aide-Memoire: The British Government delivered on January 28 to the Soviet Government an aide-memoire on Cambodia. It was published in London on January 31.

The aide-memoire proposed that Britain and the Soviet Union, as co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference, should defer sending a formal message to other Governments on convening a conference on Cambodia until agreement had been reached on the tasks to be achieved

The aide-memoire noted the Soviet proposal earlier in January (see page 5652) that the co-Chairmen should send a message to the Governments which took part in the 1961-62 Laos Conference calling for the convening of a Cambodian conference in Geneva in April, 1964.

It said that the British Government would itself "have no objection to the place and composition of the proposed conference". It was glad that the Soviet Government "shares the view that advance preparation is important" and envisage a suitable interval for this purpose. And, in these circumstances, the British Government "considers it unnecessary for the two co-Chairmen to attempt to decide on an actual date or to issue a formal invitation so far in advance".

The aide-memoire pointed out that all the Governments concerned "are well aware that a conference may be required on this subject", and noted that "consultations are actively proceeding with many of them".

It said: "Her Majesty's Government, accordingly, proposes that the co-Chairmen should defer their decision on sending a formal message to other Governments.

"Meanwhile, the co-Chairmen should actively pursue their informal discussions with a view to reaching agreement on the tasks to be achieved by the conference. Her Majesty's Government considers that without such agreement beforehand among the parties principally concerned, the co-Chairmen would be unable to convene a representative and effective conference which would be in the best interests of Indo-China and of the peace of South-East Asia."

CEYLON

A. Mrs. S. Bandaranaike On Problem Of Residents Of Indian Origin: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, made a reference to the problem of persons of Indian origin while replying to a four-day debate on foreign policy in the Senate on January 23.

She said she wanted to make it clear that her Government had not departed from the policy pursued by the late Prime Minister, Mr. S. W. R. D. Bandaranaike.

She agreed that the Indo-Ceylon problem like many other problems was a legacy of the British rule. But there was no denying the fact that the leaders of India and Ceylon had been vitally interested in settling the problem of the "stateless" amicably.

"Fortunately for me," she said, "I have been able to lay my hands on some papers of my late husband which contain a record of the discussions that took place between representatives of Ceylon and Mr. Nehru himself when he visited Ceylon in 1939. In a letter dated June 27, 1939, Mr. Nehru wrote to Sir D. B. Jayateleke that the Indian Congress Committee had directed him to proceed to Ceylon and to help find a solution to the problems affecting the Indians there. Fortunately, the great Indian Prime Minister is still with us. That is why we pin our hope on his sense of fairplay to arrive at a speedy and just settlement of this problem."

She maintained that at no stage had Ceylon agreed to view that persons of Indian origin who failed to secure registration under the provisions of the Indian and Pakistani Citizenship Act were stateless. She said the registration of citizens was now complete and over 134,000 people had been registered as Ceylon citizens. The Indian High Commission had registered only 50,983 persons as Indian citizens in the meantime.

She said that the course that her Government had adopted was to implement the line of policy adopted by all Governments since Independence, namely, to ensure employment to Ceylon nationals in preference to others. She hoped members in the House would realise that a solution to the problem was one that transcended party politics and she appealed for their co-operation to arrive at a negotiated settlement.

In her speech, Mrs. Bandaranaike dealt with every aspect of Ceylon's foreign relations.

Referring to the criticism that President Ayub Khan's visit to Ceylon marked a departure from Ceylon's principle of non-alignment and was actuated by anti-Indian sentiment, she pointed out that the visit proved that Ceylon was, in fact, non-aligned. "I fail to see that the visit of President Ayub Khan assumes any special significance merely because Pakistan is a member of the S-EATO alliance."

She stated that Ceylon would not permit entry into its territorial waters, ports and airports of any naval vessel or aircraft carrying nuclear weapons or those equipped for nuclear warfare. This decision was in pursuance of the Government's policy to oppose further spread of nuclear weapons and support the creation of atom-free zones.

She said that Ceylon had expressed its concern to USA at its reported move to send a nuclear task force into the Indian Ocean.

USA had replied that it was "at a loss to understand the concern of the Ceylon Government at the matter" and that "no port calls at Colombo would be scheduled if there are any objections on Ceylon's part."

The reply also referred, Mrs. Bandaranaike said, to the calls periodically made by US Navy vessels at ports in the Indian Ocean area, including Colombo. The purpose of such visits had been stated to be to familiarise the US Navy with that part of the world and to show USA's continuing interest in the peace and stability of the area.

B. New Speaker Elected: Mr. Hugh Fernando was unanimously elected Speaker of the House of Representatives (Lower House) on January 24 in place of Mr. R. S. Pelpola.

Mr. Fernando was formerly the Deputy Speaker. His name was proposed by the leader of the House, Mr. C. P. De Silva and seconded by the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Dudley Senanayake.

C. Communist Splinter Group: The pro-Peking group in the Ceylon Communist Party has formed itself into a rival party.

The rival party also calls itself "Ceylon Communist Party."

It is led by Mr. N. Shanmugathasan and Mr. Premlal Kumarasi who were expelled from the Communist Party of Ceylon.

It held a meeting in the third week of January and elected a 35-member central committee.

The organizers of the rival party claimed they held the "seventh Congress of the Ceylon Communist Party." It was attended by 399 delegates from 109 branches throughout the Island.

The Congress repudiated the resolution adopted by what it described as "the past central committee of the Ceylon Communist Party" on questions of the international Communist movement.

It also repudiated "the past Central Committee's endorsement of the action of the Soviet Government in signing the partial nuclear test ban Treaty."

D. Federal Party Agitation Plan: The Central Working Committee of the Federal Party, the political organization of Tamils, decided on January 26 to launch a non-violent direct action not later than February 17 "to achieve the political, linguistic, civic and human rights of the Tamil-speaking people of Ceylon."

It took this decision as it was of opinion that "the situation has become most intolerable and unless arrested in time the enslavery of the Tamil-speaking people will be complete and their ultimate destruction will be inevitable."

The Party had observed January 1 when the Government switched over to Sinhala as the language of administration throughout the Island (see page 5217) as a day of mourning.

CHINA

A. Workers Asked To Increase Political Activity: A National Conference held recently, at which the Chairman of the State Economic Commission and Vice-Premier, Mr. Po I-po presided, has asked all industrial and communications workers to follow the example of the Army and increase their political and ideological activity.

The Chinese Army held a conference on political work in the third week of January, and decided to "hold even higher the great red banner of Mao Tse-tung's thinking" and to stick to the "four firsts", that is, "putting man first, political work first, ideological work first and living examples first". Furthermore, it studied "important instructions" from Mr. Mao Tse-tung and Marshal Lin Piao.

The latest report on the national conference of industry and communications listed a number of steps which should be taken as part of the ideological work: these included further study of Marxism-Leninism and Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thinking, learning from the People's Liberation Army to place current ideological questions before all other political matters, and further revolutionizing of "the mass of workers, the managerial organizations in industry and all modern enterprises". More than half the report on the conference was devoted to political and ideological matters.

This fresh political drive came after a socialist re-education movement in 1963 which was presumably designed to counteract bourgeois influences which sprang up in China with the slackening of political control at the end of the "great leap forward".

FORMOSA

A. Mr. D. Rusk On US Commitment: Speaking at a dinner given by the America-Japan Society in Tokyo on January 28, the US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, reaffirmed his Government's commitment to the KMT Administration in Formosa.

He declared that USA "will never abandon the 12 million people on Taiwan (Formosa) to communists."

In what was presumably meant as criticism of the French action in recognizing the Peking Government (see page 5652) he said that the free nations must not reward Peking's militancy, or give the communists any ground for hope of profit from force. The peace of the world could hinge on this issue.

He added a rider to the effect that USA would be fully responsive when China had a Government "prepared to renounce force, to make peace, and to honour international responsibilities".

Later in the evening, he was asked at a news conference whether a communist Government of China, or possibly a Nationalist Government, could satisfy these conditions. He replied that such a question lay "in the fog of the future", and he expected it would have to be answered by some later Secretary of State, if he (Mr. Rusk) gave it as his opinion that China would not be seated in UN this Autumn. Asked to justify this view, he said the question of what other Governments might do still lay in the future. There remained complicated questions to be resolved, such as the requirement of unanimity in the Security Council.

Asked to state his Government's policy towards the Government in Taiwan, he said: "We support it and we recognize it as the legitimate spokesman for the Chinese people."

HONG KONG

A. Supply Of Water From China: The Chinese authorities in Kwangtung have invited the Hong Kong Government to send representatives to Canton to hold technical discussions on a Chinese project for increasing the amount of water to be supplied to the Colony.

They have announced that an extra 200 million gallons of water will be made available to Hong Kong from the Shumchun reservoir, just across the border with China, which normally contributes water to the Hong Kong supply. The amount agreed earlier was lower than usual because of drought. Since then, heavy and unseasonal rains have probably improved the Shumchun supply.

The new Chinese proposal came after discussion between Britain and China over a possible pipeline which would bring water to Hong Kong from a major river in Kwangtung province.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Congress Of Orientalists; Pugwash Conference; Allocation Of Central Cabinet Portfolios; Exports During 1963; Company Law Board Constituted; Communal Riots.

A. Congress Of Orientalists: The 26th International Congress of Orientalists met in New Delhi from January 4 to 10, with about 1,300 delegates participating.

The previous Congress was held in 1960 in Moscow and the New Delhi meeting decided to accept an American invitation to hold the next triennial Congress in USA.

Delegates from all parts of the world had come for the conference which was opened by the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan. The conference had as its chairman Prof. Humayun Kabir of India.

It generally avoided controversial questions. The only issue over which differences arose related to the demand for screening of delegates and their papers for future sessions. Some felt that without some screening of the papers offered, too much time would be wasted on third-rate contributions. This problem, together with the equally obvious question of orientalism as a definable field of study, was referred to a committee which would reconsider the statutes of the Congress and report to the meeting in USA in 1966.

About 900 papers were submitted to the Congress. But, of them, hardly a dozen had any reference to political developments in recent years.

Only papers read at the East Asian and South Asian sections had a political slant; but much less than at the previous Congress in Moscow, according to delegates who had participated in it. Decolonization in this region was a favourite subject of discussion.

The Egyptology section devoted itself more or less exclusively to unearthing the past and the links between various ancient civilizations, particularly Indian and Egyptian.

In the sections on Semitic studies, Hittite and Caucasian studies and Altaic studies including Turcology, the papers read were not many and dealt with mainly topics of regional interest. These sections concluded their deliberations much earlier than others.

In the Iranian section, however, a number of papers dealing with the Pehlavi tradition and contacts between ancient Iran and India were read by Indian and other delegates.

At one of the sectional meetings it was announced that a Royal Council of Iranian Studies had been set up in Tehran and all Iranian research workers and scholars were advised to refer their problems to it. It was also announced that the 2,500th anniversary of the founding of the Persian Empire would be celebrated in October, 1965.

The Indology section, which consisted of five sub-sections, had the largest number of papers read. Of the five sub-sections—Vedic studies and Indus civilization, classical Sanskrit, philosophy and religion, history and culture and modern Indian languages and linguistics—the last two attracted much attention. Interesting papers of a topical nature came up for discussion at these two sections.

Another section discussed Islamic studies.

African studies evoked a lot of interest among all delegates. This section, before concluding its deliberations, appealed once again to Governments in Africa to ensure "full preservation and refinement of the native African heritage in religion, wherever it is in full consonance with individual and social ethics and is conducive to good life and is further in consonance with a progressive and civilized life."

It also felt that "in the interest of some particular religious denomination or denominations, the perpetuation of the African religious traditions, rituals, customs and usages, wherever they agree with the spirit of the times, should not be hampered, for the benefit of both science and humanity."

B. Pugwash Conference: Security of small nations against aggression, China's admission to United Nations, disarmament and steps to prevent the use of force to settle territorial disputes dominated discussions at the 12th Pugwash Conference on Science and World Affairs which ended in Udaipur on February 1.

The Conference, which began on January 27, split itself into four working groups to discuss these subjects.

The plenary session continued for six hours to adopt reports of these working groups.

Prof. J. Rotblat, Secretary-General of the Continuing Committee of Pugwash Movement, said that the plenary session had adopted reports of all the working groups, but only three reports could be released to the Press.

Seventy delegates from 30 countries participated in the Conference, held for the first time in India.

The Conference appealed to leaders of advanced countries "to divert to the under-developed countries as high a proportion as possible of the resources released by disarmament".

It said: "No economic aid should be linked to military and political conditions."

It felt that the conclusion of an Agreement on general and complete disarmament would make it possible for advanced nations to divert large resources to the development of developing nations.

It recommended an Agreement which would re-affirm the obligations of the UN Charter and prohibit the use of force in settling any territorial disputes. Such an Agreement could be made on the lines of the proposal made by the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev.

It urged that China should be seated in UN.

C. All-India Women's Conference: The 32nd annual session of the All-India Women's Conference was held in New Delhi from December 31, 1963 to January 4, 1964.

Besides fraternal delegates from Britain, Indonesia, Ceylon, Nepal and the Philippines, Princess Ashraf Pahlevi of Iran and Miss Margaret Kenyatta of Kenya attended and conveyed their greetings and good wishes to the Conference.

In her presidential address, Mrs. Masuma Begum called for greater voluntary effort than at present, to face the multiplicity of tasks facing the country.

She said that in the economic and social spheres "the task confronting our generation in India is all the more challenging and can only be performed in a spirit of service and sacrifice."

"No other generation of women in India has had the same opportunity to work and serve in the conditions of freedom which our Constitution provides."

Mr. J. Nehru's Address:

Speaking as the chief guest, the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, said on January 1 that the progress of women in India had been "considerable, if not remarkable" in the last few years.

But they must remember that the change was "very largely an urban change and has not so much affected, although it is beginning to affect, the rural masses also."

He said that it was an "extraordinarily difficult" thing, not merely to pass laws, but to change ancient customs which had been adhered to for long ages.

He added: "We have set ourselves to do that (bring about change) and I think our Government has succeeded in making laws and changing old customs. Though they might not be fully acted upon by all people in the rural areas, still they are beginning to be acted upon."

Resolutions:

The Conference adopted on January 4 a resolution demanding a uniform civil code for all communities.

It said such uniformity was needed to safeguard the women of the various communities against the disabilities from which they now suffered.

The Conference, by another resolution, urged the Government to amend the Criminal Procedure Code and the Hindu Marriage Act so as to enable a deserted wife to sue her husband for maintenance in a court in the area where she resided. At present, such a petition could be filed only in a court in the area where the husband resided or where the wife last resided with the husband before the desertion.

E. Allocation Of Central Cabinet Portfolios: A Presidential order defining Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's duties as Minister without Portfolio was issued in New Delhi on February 2.

The announcement said that Mr. Shastri would perform "such functions as may be assigned to him by the Prime Minister from time to time" in relation to the Ministry of External Affairs, Department of Atomic Energy and the Cabinet Secretariat.

A separate Presidential order was issued appointing Mr. A. K. Sen, Minister of Law, to hold additional charge of the Posts and Telegraphs Department and Mr. Satyanarayan Sinha, Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, to be in charge of the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting also. They had been holding charge of these departments as a temporary arrangement.

A Presidential order issued on February 4 said that Mr. Raj Bahadur, who was temporarily in charge of the Ministry of transport, would remain in charge of that Ministry.

It added that Mr. Jai Sukh Lal Hathi who was temporarily in charge of the Department of Supply and the Department of Technical Development, would remain in charge of the two Departments.

F. Indo-Nepal Trade Talks: The talks on the Indo-Nepal Treaty of Trade and Transit between delegations of the two countries concluded in New Delhi on February 3.

The two delegations, it was officially stated, decided to make a recommendation to their respective Governments for the adoption of an agreed procedure to regulate the movement of goods of Nepalese origin from one part of Nepal to another through Indian territory.

It was hoped that the procedure, when approved by the two Governments, would facilitate this movement and remove the difficulties stated to be experienced at present.

The two sides also discussed the extent to which the existing railway and other facilities at Radhikapur can be availed of for the transit of Nepal's trade with Pakistan, and the cost of services and supervision to be provided by the Indian authorities at Radhikapur.

Further discussion on this subject will take place at the next meeting of the two delegations to be held in Khatmandu.

I. Government Company Registered For Bokaro Steel Plant: A major step towards setting up the fourth public sector steel plant at Bokaro was taken in New Delhi on January 29 with the registration of Bokaro Steel Limited as a Government company.

The company has a share capital of Rs. 100 crores and will be responsible for erecting and running the plant. It will acquire the land, arrange for the supply of raw materials, water and power, undertake recruitment of personnel, call tenders for equipment and sign contracts.

Mr. N. N. Wanchoo, Secretary in the Department of Steel of the Ministry of Steel and Heavy Engineering, is likely to be the chairman of the new company, and Mr. K. M. George, Chief Engineer, Central Design and Engineering Bureau of Hindustan Steel Limited, the managing director.

The detailed project report for the plant prepared by Messrs. Dastoor and Company is under examination by a technical committee.

The new company will invite global tenders for supply of equipment for the plant within the next few months. Credit arrangements to meet the foreign exchange component of the expenditure are expected to be worked out soon.

Some foreign firms have shown considerable interest in supplying equipment for Bokaro. The Ministry of Steel and Heavy Engineering believes it will be possible to utilize the maximum indigenous material and technical talent in constructing the plant.

The present calculations are based on the plant having an annual capacity of 1.5 million tonnes in the first stage and 4 million tonnes later. It will produce mainly flat products.

At the next meeting of the Aid-India Consortium, no request is likely to be made for aid for Bokaro. The Finance Ministry's view is that bilateral negotiations between Governments must take place before the matter is put before the Consortium.

Steering Group's Recommendations:

The Steering Group on Iron and Steel decided on February 5 to recommend to the Government that it should give the "topmost priority" to the Bokaro project so that it might reach a production level of 2.5 million tonnes of steel ingots or 2 million tonnes of finished steel by the end of the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

The Group, which comprised representatives of the Planning Commission, the Steel Ministry and the private sector steel industry, also suggested that the previously contemplated first stage of a production of 1.5 million tonnes of ingots and the second stage of a production of 4 million tonnes be telescoped into one which, among other things, would make the project more economical.

It modified its earlier decision that, besides Bokaro, two steel plants, one on the west coast and the other on the east coast, should be completed during the Fourth Plan and suggested that it should be considered sufficient if one of these came up with a capacity of 1.5 million tonnes of ingots and the other was completed only up to the blast furnace stage.

A production target of 17.5 million tonnes of ingots or 13 million tonnes of finished steel for the Fourth Plan was recommended. This included exports amounting to 1.5 million tonnes of ingots. To reach this a target of about 19 million tonnes should be aimed at.

The demand for alloy and special steel in 1970-71 was estimated at 750,000 tonnes against the current production of 350,000 tonnes, and that for pig iron at 4 million tonnes compared with the existing and already projected capacity of a total of 1.75 million tonnes. Suggestions were made to establish new plants to meet the gaps.

The Group had before it three estimates of the country's requirements at the end of the Fourth Plan—one by Dastoor & Co., another by US Steel and the third by the National Council of Applied Economic Research. The American estimate was 14 million tonnes of ingots and Dastoor's 19 million tonnes. The Group's estimate was nearer that of the NCAER.

J. Exports During 1963: India's exports during 1963 will be a record. Based on the actuals of the first 11 months, exports in 1963 were estimated to be in the neighbourhood of Rs. 785 crores—an increase of Rs. 98 crores over those of 1962.

This represents a 15 per cent increase over the exports of 1952—the highest increase achieved so far.

Some of the encouraging features of the rise in exports are that the increase has been well-spread over a number of commodities and about Rs. 85 crores of the increase have been earned in the form of dollars or sterling and only Rs. 15 crores increase was from the rupee area countries (Communist countries).

Most of the increase in exports has also been achieved in items whose exports are made without any incentives or assistance.

An analysis of the exports in 1933 shows that the increase has been notably in jute manufactures; tea; sugar; vegetable oils; HPS groundnut; oil cakes; pulses; cashew kernels; fruits and vegetables; tobacco; hides, skins and leather; steel scraps; iron-ore; engineering goods; textiles (including handlooms); handicrafts; carpets; chemicals and marine products.

For the first time in recent years, not only have exports of cotton textiles not declined, despite the keen competition from China and Japan, but, on the contrary, have increased.

Black pepper and raw wool are the only items worth mentioning among those few whose exports have declined. The internal consumption of raw wool has increased because of defence requirements. The world prices of black pepper have declined considerably.

With the setting up of the Export Inspection Council, the Export Credit and Guarantee Corporation and the opening shortly of the Institute of Foreign Trade, official circles in New Delhi feel that the climate for increasing exports is satisfactory.

However, they feel that all-round efforts will have to be made in 1964 to increase and diversify production for enlarging exportable surpluses at competitive prices.

To conserve foreign exchange, imports have also been kept under strict watch and scrutiny. As a result there has been a reduction of about Rs. 40 crores in total imports in the first 11 months of 1963, the imports being Rs. 977 crores as compared to Rs. 1,017 crores in the corresponding period in the previous year.

The increase in exports and reduction in imports has improved the overall trade balance, the trade deficit having been reduced from Rs. 401 crores during January-November, 1962 to Rs. 274 crores during the corresponding period of 1963. India's sterling balances in the last week of January, 1964 stood at Rs. 111.7 crores.

M. LIC Business During 1962-63: According to a Press Note from the central office of the Life Insurance Corporation (LIC) in releasing the report and accounts of the Corporation for the 15-month period from January 1, 1962 to March 31, 1963, 1962-63 was a good year for the life insurance industry.

The report, which highlighted many plus points such as growth of new business, growing interest in non-medical schemes, increasing number of first insurances, also brought out a happy accounting position registering an increase in life fund to Rs. 720.70 crores, showing a rise of Rs. 91.94 crores over the adjusted life insurance fund at the beginning of the accounting period. The premium income amounted to Rs. 150.38 crores for the period of 15 months as against Rs. 112.30 crores for 1961.

Referring to the rise in lapse ratio, the report said that the Corporation had already taken a number of steps to reduce it, the major one being that a fresh proposal from any person whose existing policy had lapsed within the preceding 3 years would be entertained only if such lapsed policy was first revived by him, for which purpose special facilities are now given.

The report dealt with the Corporation's progress in areas such as training of its administration and development, personnel, underwriting and publicity seminars.

Financing of housing schemes and loan on mortgage of property were two areas to which the Corporation was paying particular attention. As an extension of this, the Corporation recently launched a "own your home" scheme which has received popular acclaim.

The Corporation hoped that the drive for rural business would take a new shape as the Corporation had made arrangements to collect life insurance premiums at block development headquarters. As a result of recent amendment of insurance rules, it would now be possible to appoint co-operative societies and panchayats as agents of the Corporation.

In the salary savings field, which is of great importance to the salaried class, the Corporation issued in India 1,93,199 policies assuring a sum of Rs. 61.03 crores. A major break-through has now been achieved with the acceptance by the Punjab Government of this scheme for State Government employees.

N. Board Of Trade On Measures To Cut Costs: The Board of Trade, which met in Calcutta on February 1, considered "the continuously increasing" cost of production in India as a basic problem and pleaded for "drastic" remedies. Among its suggestions were the creation of a cost reduction cell in the Planning Commission, a substantial reduction in import duties and cheaper power.

The meeting, presided over by Mr. Manubhai Shah, Central Minister for International Trade, felt that a cost reduction cell was necessary both from the point of view of internal economy and the export trade. The cost reduction studies should be instituted commodity-wise and industry-wise.

The Board noted that over 80 per cent of the aggregate exports of Rs. 600 crores in 1963 had moved without any assistance. It also noted that recently there was greater emphasis on the development of healthier practices like quality control, sample adherence, contractual fulfilment, price stabilization and an increased export promotion effort in relation to marketing and export publicity. Exports covered by export promotion schemes comprised only a total amount of Rs. 1,160 crores and the incentives relating to these exports were of a small order of only about Rs. 28 crores.

While expressing satisfaction over the 1963 export performance, the Board made a special mention of African countries where India made relatively little headway with her exportable commodities. It emphasized the need for greater attention to the development and expansion of trade and economic relations between India and the countries of Africa.

A reduction of Rs. 40 crores had been achieved in the import bill of 1963 through strict scrutiny, impact rationalization and substitution.

Another healthy feature of the increase in exports during 1963 was that the increase was reflected both in value as well as in volume and that it was spread over a wide range of commodities.

The Board noted with regret "a few cases of malpractices and abuse in the operation of a few export promotion schemes. The tendency to under-cut prices and unhealthy competition has to be corrected by the adoption of suitable means."

A permanent sub-committee with Dr. P. S. Lokanathan was appointed by the Board to review and evaluate continuously the performance of individual export promotion schemes and to suggest and devise suitable measures for curbing abuses and malpractices where they might arise.

Emphasizing the need for modernizing the export machinery and its development on healthy lines, the Board referred to the code of ethics evolved by the export trade in other countries. The code which had been circulated to various organizations and associations, including the export promotion councils, should be adopted in all essentials.

The Board referred to the Mudaliar Committee's recommendation for introducing an element of selectivity in the export trade and among exporters. The Board felt if this was followed it would help to overcome weaknesses relating to malpractices in the export trade.

O. Communal Riots: The anti-Indian campaign by the Pakistani Government, Radio and Press over the temporary disappearance of the sacred relic (holy hair) of the Prophet Mohammed from the Hazratbal shrine in Srinagar (see page 5630) resulted in communal frenzy in East Pakistan, causing considerable loss of life and property to the minority community in Khulna and Jessore in the first week of January, 1964.

The news of the tragedy reached Bhuvaneswar at the time of the Congress session (see page 5642) and Indian leaders warned Pakistan of the dangerous consequences of communal incitement.

Following the East Pakistan riots, there was a communal flare-up in some areas of Calcutta.

The authorities took swift action to deal with the miscreants who indulged in looting and arson. For some time the responsibility for restoring law and order in the disturbed areas had to be entrusted to the armed forces.

The Central Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda, made it clear that no mercy would be shown to anybody indulging in mischief.

Mr. Nanda, the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, and the Central Law Minister, Mr. A. K. Sen, flew into Calcutta to be personally available for consultations with the leaders of West Bengal on matters concerning law and order and organization of relief to the riot victims.

Meanwhile, the Government of India exchanged Notes with the Pakistan authorities on the urgency for steps to stop the chain communal riots. India's proposals that the Presidents of the two countries should issue a joint appeal for communal peace and that the Home Ministers of India and Pakistan should meet did not find favour with Pakistan.

The Pakistani contention was that everything possible was being done in Pakistan to restore communal peace and that the trouble was mainly in India and there was no need for pursuing the proposals.

While the situation in Calcutta was brought quickly under control, reports from Dacca suggested a violent flare-up in the East Pakistan Capital. A Reuter report mentioned that over 1,000 persons belonging to the minority community had died in the East Pakistan riots, but the Pakistan authorities described the figure as "highly exaggerated."

In view of the apprehension of the minority community in East Pakistan, Mr. Nanda told a news conference in Calcutta on January 29 that the conditions for the grant of migration certificates would have to be eased in the case of members of the minority community in East Pakistan who wanted to come to India. He said this would be done on compassionate grounds because "they were living in conditions of extreme peril and insecurity and in the existing conditions it has become impossible for them to stay on in Pakistan."

He added: "We have to remain alert in future. We are dealing with human beings and there might be provocations. The killings might be continued or repeated in Pakistan, although I hope this will be the last. But whatever happens in Pakistan, at the slightest indications of any trouble here, we will immediately mobilize our strength, as we have done recently, to bring under control any disturbances. It is in the larger interest of our country that we do not allow peace to be disturbed here."

P. Swatantra Party Convention: At its third national Convention in Bangalore on February 1, the Swatantra Party criticized the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru's non-alignment policy and said that as a result of that policy, India had lost considerable prestige.

The Party adopted a resolution on international relations which said that the military reverses sustained by India and the national humiliation involved in the acceptance of the Chinese unilateral cease-fire and the Colombo proposals were the results of many years of wrong policies in the realm of international relations and defence.

The most tragic and disastrous of these mistaken policies, it said, was the concept of non-alignment and double standards of judgment to which it led—persistent appeasement of China, and cold-shouldering of India's neighbours in South-East Asia.

Illustrations of these double standards mentioned in the resolution were betrayal of Tibet to Chinese Communist imperialism in 1950, vote in support of Russia in suppression of the Hungarian revolution in 1956 and continued refusal to have diplomatic relations with Israel.

It noted that as a result of the policies of non-alignment and appeasement, India had lost considerable prestige among its neighbours and in the world, and that instead of China being isolated it was India that was in danger of finding herself in that situation.

Over 600 delegates from all parts of the country attended the Convention, including Mr. V. P. Menon, Mr. H. P. Mody, Mr. Jinnaraj Hedge, the Raja of Ramgarh, Mr. M. Ratnaswami and Maharani Gayatri Devi of Jaipur.

The General Secretary, Mr. M. R. Masani, read messages wishing the Convention success from Mr. K. M. Munshi, senior party vice-president who did not attend owing to ill health, the president of the Liberal International and the Italian Liberal Party, the chairman of the Liberal Party of Israel and others.

The General Council meeting was attended by 66 members out of 120. The Party President, Mr. N. G. Ranga presided. Mr. C. Rajagopalachari was present.

Electoral Alliances:

On February 2, the Swatantra Party Convention passed a resolution seeking an electoral understanding with all opposition parties excluding the Communists for the next General Elections.

It asserted that the Swatantra alone provided a clear-cut and effective alternative to the present Government.

Mr. M. R. Masani, General Secretary, reported to the Convention earlier efforts to forge a united opposition.

Some time ago, Acharya J. B. Kripalani had tried to get together like-minded opposition parties, even though it was for a limited purpose, but unfortunately the response was poor and the plan had to be abandoned.

In recent months, the Swatantra Party itself, under the guidance of Mr. Rajagopalachari, made further efforts in that direction, even proposing the merger of parties for creating a united front strong enough to provide an effective opposition. A limited and modest objective of achieving an electoral understanding was proposed by the simple arrangement of "not coming into each other's way," so that multilateral contests, which gave undue advantage to the ruling party, could be eliminated.

Mr. Masani said that electoral understandings should not come in the way of strengthening the Swatantra Party which would be prepared to go it alone, if necessary.

The Convention did not accept Mr. M. R. Janardhan's suggestion that the resolution should be deferred as alliances should be sought only on the Swatantra ideology.

Planning:

The Convention presented to the country an eight-point alternative plan in place of the "discredited" methods of planning adopted by the Congress Government.

A resolution in this connexion said the Swatantra Party was opposed to Soviet, centralized-type of planning, but favoured democratic planning within the frame-work of fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution.

It urged proper order of priorities, starting with increase in production and provision for elementary necessities, such as pure drinking water, clothing, shelter and employment.

The Convention passed without much discussion a resolution on nationalization of banking.

The resolution warned the Government that any attempt to trifle with the functioning of the banking industry in India would be fraught with grave consequences for the country's delicate credit mechanism and economic development and would impair confidence in the country's financial institutions and credit on which the economic assistance and capital investment which India had received from abroad was based.

Board For Licences And Permits:

Mr. Rajagopalachari moved a resolution on the formation of an independent, non-political board for licences and permits.

He said the resolution was self-explanatory. It said that apart from many other grave issues, the confidence of the people in the administration could not be secured and maintained, unless the supreme control of the distribution of licences, permits and quotas was vested in an independent, non-political statutory board, free from all influences and political pressures and enjoying the same independent status as the judiciary.

The Convention appealed to all democratic parties to unite on this demand and compel the ruling party to accept this reform.

The resolution, which was seconded by Raja Anand Chand of Bilaspur, was passed unanimously.

Q. Governor's Address To UP Legislature: Members of the Socialist Party walked out of the Vidhan Sabha on February 3 in protest against the Governor, Mr. Biswanath Das, delivering his inaugural Address in English to a joint session of both Houses of the UP State Legislature.

As the Governor rose to speak, Mr. Ugra Sen, leader of the Socialist Party, requested him to deliver his Address in Hindi or Oriya—his mother tongue.

The Governor made a graceful gesture by reading out haltingly the first paragraph of the Hindi version of his speech. He then said that as he could not speak well in Hindi, he would address the House in English. At this stage, Mr. Ugra Sen got up and said that if the Governor spoke in English the Socialist Party would walk out of the House.

As the Governor began reading the English version, members of the Socialist Party trooped out of the hall in protest. The Governor then read out the English version of his speech.

He made another concession to protagonists of Hindi. He ended his speech by reading the last paragraph of the Hindi version of his Address.

In his Address, the Governor hinted at the possibility of placing additional tax burden on the people. The resources of the Government for developing the State were limited. It might, therefore, be necessary to augment them.

Surveying the situation in the State, he said that the need to strengthen the defences continued. The Government had employed a large force of the Provincial Armed Constabulary along the border. The Home Guards organization was being put on a sound footing. A second Sainik school would be opened at Ghora Khal in Naini Tal district. In the border area comprising Uttarakhand division development activity was in full swing.

The law and order situation was satisfactory. A large number of dacoits had been liquidated in the Chambal valley.

Referring to the need for increased agricultural production, he said that special emphasis was being laid on minor irrigation, soil conservation and power production. Measures to co-ordinate the activities of departments associated with agricultural production, extension and supplies were being finalised. A plan for intensifying cane development around all sugar factories in the State had been drawn up.

Efforts to industrialize the State were being made. A new State-owned cement factory would be set up in Mirzapur district. A co-operative sugar factory was being established in Pilibhit district.

Referring to the need for a rapid increase in power production, he said that with the completion of various power projects and the construction of new power stations, generating capacity would be substantially increased by the end of the current Plan period.

He said that the Co-operative Societies Act needed to be changed. Legislation to facilitate the formation of co-operative land mortgage banks and the establishment of a housing and development board might be introduced.

Concluding, he appealed to the legislators to uphold the ideals of democracy. He reminded them that free discussion, toleration and patience were the essence of democracy to which all of them were wedded.

INDONESIA

A. Government Take-over Of British Estates: It was officially announced in Djakarta on February 1 that British-managed rubber, copra and tea estates, mostly in Java and north Sumatra, had been placed under the "direct control" of the Government.

An official statement said the measure was temporary and would be enforced by "supervisory committees" of the Department of Agriculture and Agrarian Affairs.

No mention was made of imposing Government control—temporary or otherwise—on other British-managed enterprises in Indonesia, which range from import-export firms to a textile factory, the Chartered Bank and Unilever.

Reliable sources said that the appointment of supervisory teams would not immediately affect the British managements' running of the plantations. Most British or partly British estate holdings in Indonesia are now in fact under a degree of Government supervision as a result of the take-over attempts in January by communist-dominated workers' associations.

The Indonesian news agency said that the existing sources of revenue and marketing channels of the estates placed under Government control would remain intact. The cost of maintaining the supervisory committees would be charged against the budgets of the enterprises concerned.

ISRAEL

A. Political Asylum Sought By UAR Pilot: A UAR Air Force pilot landed his aircraft in Israel on January 19 and sought asylum after a chase by other UAR planes.

An Israeli spokesman said in Tel Aviv: "This morning the Egyptian Air Force pilot, Captain Mahmoud Hilmi Abbas Hilmi, flying a piston-engined training aircraft of the Yak 11 model, gave himself up to Israel.

"The aircraft landed without mishap at one of the Israeli Air Force bases after Israeli planes took off to intercept Egyptian Air Force planes which attempted to give chase to the Egyptian fugitive aircraft."

Israeli security officers were questioning the pilot, who was said to be the first Egyptian officer to seek asylum in Israel since the Sinai campaign of 1956-57.

Observers in Tel Aviv said that it was not yet clear whether Israeli and Egyptian aircraft were engaged in aerial combat as no details beyond the spokesman's announcement were immediately available.

Military sources said that the pilot, a 26-year-old bachelor, had been a flight instructor at the Egyptian Air Force school at Bilbeis in the Nile Delta.

JAPAN

A. Appeal To USA To Facilitate Liberalization Of Trade: At the third session of the third US-Japan Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs in Tokyo on January 27 and 28, Japan appealed to USA to remove restrictions which might impede Japanese liberalization of trade and aid to the under-developed nations of Asia.

The specific restrictions mentioned by Japan during an exchange with President L. B. Johnson's top economic adviser, Mr. Walter Heller, Mr. W. W. Wirtz and the Interior Under-Secretary, Mr. James K. Carr, centered on the US interest equalisation tax, quotas on Japanese exports and withholding of customs clearances because of suspected Japanese dumping.

The Japanese conceded that their economy was growing, but pointed out that the per capita income was only a fifth of that in USA and that expanding imports were eating into the foreign exchange holdings, expected to drop to $1,700 million by the end of 1964.

The conference brought the US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, the Commerce Secretary, Mr. Luther Hodges, the Labour Secretary, Mr. W. Willard Wirtz, and three other top US officials to Japan.

The Americans at the conference promised to keep the tax equalisation under review after it becomes law, perhaps in March, and to take appropriate steps should Japan find itself in serious difficulties.

They said that Japan would continue to find an excellent market in USA, but warned that American competition would be stepped up.

Earlier the Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, at a luncheon for Mr. Rusk and the other American leaders, said he was prepared to press forward against strong domestic opposition towards liberalization of trade. But, he said, this would require a "forward-looking attitude" by USA.

He did not refer to recognition of China by France, but pointed out that Japan was caught—he used the word "encircled"—between three major world forces—USA, China and the Soviet Union.

"While East-West relations seem now to be moving in the direction of a detente," he said, "Asia continues to be in the throes of unrest and instability. What does this pose but the potential threat of Communist expansion in the entire region, the intensification of national conflicts and the accentuation of the complex political, economic and social difficulties which lie deep in these lands?"

Perhaps the most significant passage in his speech was that in which he said: "We have also been making vigorous efforts to strengthen our relations with our neighbours in Asia, in the belief that our ties with them should be as close as those between us and America." He mentioned Japan's efforts to promote closer ties with South Korea, South-East Asia, and countries of the Western Pacific. These efforts were "slowly but steadily bringing results."

He also referred to the benevolent lecture on Western failure to understand the Asian way of thinking. Asian ways were a product of a civilization much older than that of the West, he said, and one which had developed under different climatic conditions.

MALAYSIA

A. US Mediation Efforts—Cease-fire On Sabah Border: Mediation efforts by the US President's representative, Mr. Robert Kennedy, and the Cambodian Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, resulted in a tripartite meeting of the representatives of Malaysia, Indonesia and Thailand in Bangkok in the first week of February.

Earlier, following talks which Mr. Kennedy had with President Sukarno of Indonesia and the Malaysian Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, a cease-fire was ordered by Indonesia and Malaysia on the Sabah border on January 23.

The first round of the Sukarno-Kennedy talks was held in the third week of January in Tokyo where the Indonesian President had gone on an unofficial visit after he had talks with Prince Norodom Sihanouk in Pnom Penh.

The second round of their talks was held in Djakarta on January 22 after Mr. Kennedy had prolonged discussions with Tengku Abdul Rehman and other Malaysian leaders in Kuala Lumpur. Mr. Kennedy had earlier had talks with Philippine leaders in Manila.

The Tengku, speaking at Kuala Lumpur airport where he had gone to see off Mr. Kennedy on January 22, re-affirmed that Indonesia must end its armed challenge to Malaysia and must recognize Malaysian sovereignty before there could be any renewed talks with President Sukarno.

It was at the end of the discussions between Mr. Kennedy and Dr. Sukarno that the cease-fire on the Sabah border, where there had been sporadic fighting between Indonesian guerrillas and British and Malaysian troops for the last several weeks, was announced.

Meanwhile, Prince Norodom Sihanouk had been having discussions with the leaders of the three countries. The Prince's objective, though unrelated to Mr. Kennedy's discussions with South-East Asian leaders, was primarily to arrange a meeting between Tengku Abdul Rehman and President D. Macapagal of the Philippines.

In agreeing to the cease-fire, both President Sukarno and his Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, made it clear that they were not prepared to accept recognition of the Federation of Malaysia as a condition for peace negotiations.

On the other hand, President Sukarno declared that Indonesia would continue its drive to crush Malaysia until a lasting agreement was reached. The Supreme Advisory Council, presided over by him, on January 28 called for continuance of the campaign. The Council decided that the Manila Agreements (see pages 5472 and 5476) should be firmly held to in the light of the planned talks between leaders of Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines.

In Kuala Lumpur, Tengku Abdul Rehman said that his Government would co-operate fully in the cease-fire arrangements and expressed satisfaction that Mr. Kennedy had persuaded President Sukarno to stop the fighting. He said that he prayed God that it might be a more lasting peace than previous ones and that other leaders would see things in the same way. Malaysian Government sources were reported as saying that the cease-fire would include safe conduct home for guerrilla fighters who surrendered.

Earlier, a joint communique issued on January 21 at the conclusion of the Norodom-Tengku talks in Kuala Lumpur announced that the Malaysian Premier would meet the Philippine President, Dr. D. Macapagal.

In London on January 23, replying to a question in the House of Commons, the British Minister for Commonwealth Relations, Mr. Duncan Sandys, said that President Sukarno had explained that it would take about a week for his cease-fire order to reach his troops, and had emphasized that Malaysian and British forces had been engaged in a purely defensive role. In these circumstances the question of the withdrawal of British troops did not arise.

The developments are thus not being allowed so far to affect plans now in train to strengthen the British military position in South-East Asia. A battalion of Gurkhas is on its way to the area, and it is to be followed soon by a brigade headquarters of the United Kingdom strategic reserve, together with a number of specialist troops, and a Gurkha battalion from Hong Kong.

A brigade headquarters from the British Army of the Rhine, made available by the re-organization now in progress there, will become part of the strategic reserve in Britain.

Mr. Sandys declined to anticipate the talks that the Government was to have with Mr. Kennedy, and welcomed an observation by Mr. Harold Wilson, Leader of the Opposition, who said that he was glad it had been made clear that the cease-fire was a move by Indonesia and that Malaysia, whose territory had been attacked, was not being, and should not be, put in the position of having to say that it had agreed to a cease-fire.

British Stand:

The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler, told the House of Commons on February 3 that there was no question of British forces withdrawing from their positions in Borneo (Sabah) until a real agreement for stability had been reached.

He had been asked by an Opposition member to make a statement on the cease-fire following the talks between President Sukarno and Mr. Kennedy, in view of British commitments under the South-East Asia Treaty Organization.

Mr. Butler said: "There was no written agreement arranged by Mr. Kennedy."

The essential point at issue, he said, was whether Indonesian guerrillas already in Malaysia are, as claimed by Indonesia, "allowed to remain in Malaysian territory provided they stop shooting, or whether, as the Malaysian Government quite justifiably contends, those guerrillas must withdraw to Indonesia or surrender to security forces if they wish to avoid being rounded up.

"Our position was explained by the Commonwealth Secretary, Mr. Duncan Sandys, on January 23, when he confirmed the interpretation of Mr. Harold Wilson that this is a cease-fire by Indonesia and that Malaysia—whose territory was attacked—is not being asked to agree to a cease-fire and should not be put in the position of saying so."

Mr. Butler was then asked whether representatives of the Thai Government were "actually engaged in supervising a cease-fire on the Indonesian side of the border."

He was also asked if there was any evidence that the Indonesian guerrilla forces had withdrawn across their border. If not, was it within the terms of the cease-fire to round them up when they fired?

Mr. Butler replied: "On the latter point I have not had a final opinion where they are because of the confused nature of the terrain and the difficulty of establishing the exact whereabouts of any particular person.

"In relation to Thailand, they offered their mediation. I would not say they are actually supervising the cease-fire, because that would be a more technical description. But they are at present engaged in offering their mediation in the dispute."

A Conservative member asked Mr. Butler to assure the House that British forces giving assistance to Malaysia would remain on the border until a real agreement for stability had been brought in the area.

Mr. Butler replied: "As the Commonwealth Secretary made clear, there is no question of withdrawing British forces from where they are."

Western Press reports suggested that Britain had reservations on Mr. Robert Kennedy's mission. These sprang from a deep distrust of Dr. Sukarno reflected in doubts as to whether the cease-fire would in fact be kept by the Indonesians as well as doubts about the prospects for success of the proposed tripartite conference.

Mr. Robert Kennedy's View:

Mr. Robert Kennedy ended his mission with talks with the leaders of the British Government.

On arrival in London he said he believed Malaysia, the Philippines and Indonesia would now make an effort to settle their differences.

He said: "I never assumed, nor did I say in my reports to the Malaysian Prime Minister or any other leaders, that President Sukarno had given up his opposition to Malaysia, but I hope that position will be modified through conference and discussion.

"What he has given up is military confrontation and military activities against Malaysia while this conference goes on. He has not given up his opposition to Malaysia but, perhaps after discussion, he may."

Asked if he thought, after President Sukarno had again said Indonesia must smash Malaysia, that agreement could be reached at the conference, he said: "Yes. I think that President Sukarno and the Indonesians would like to settle this problem and reach an understanding with Malaysia and the Philippines. I think that if this is approached with goodwill on both sides and a real effort the matter can be resolved." If it were not possible it would mean that the war would continue, more British and other troops would be involved, the war would escalate and more men would be killed. He said: "If you cannot get round a conference table you go back to the jungle and more people will get shot."

He said that his role had been to try to bring the parties together, and on that they had agreed.

Asked about the American attitude, he said there was a possibility as the war went on that it could spread and involve other countries. "We have certain treaty obligations which are a matter of concern to us."

He did not think that the introduction of further British troops would necessarily jeopardize the arrangements for a conference, but any activity by troops to take advantage of the cease-fire would jeopardize the truce arrangements.

[An account of the tripartite conference that opened in Bangkok on February 6 and other developments will appear in the following issues of Asian Recorder.—Editor].

PAKISTAN

A. Communal Riots In East Pakistan: A message from Dacca on January 22 said that at least 1,000 people had been killed in communal riots in Dacca during the previous week.

An American Peace Corps nurse, breaking the official curtain of silence on the casualties said on December 21, 1963 that there were 600 dead in the Dacca Medical College Hospital alone.

A Pakistan Army officer on the scene was reported to have put the deaths in "the order of 1,000". The majority of those killed were women and children.

These facts emerged as the army brought Dacca and neighbouring Narayanganj fully under control.

The Peace Corps nurse who reported the 600 fatalities was one of several, who with missionaries, bore much of the chaotic strain on medical resources. Hospitals were choked with wounded arriving in truckloads during the mass killings and burnings of homes, business premises and whole villages.

Commenting on the riot casualties, diplomatic sources said: "The total death figure is probably double the 600 at the Medical College Hospital and is at least 1,000."

The sources confirmed reports that even moving trains were attacked by "hooligans". A train at Tejgaon, near Dacca, was stopped and 400 persons were stabbed."

An estimated 500 persons were killed in the Rayer Bazaar area on January 15 and 250 houses were destroyed. Another 150 houses were destroyed in another market area.

Foreigners and many Muslims sheltered Hindus and several Muslims were killed for doing so.

Pakistan High Commission's Statement:

The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi on December 22, 1963 issued a Press Note saying that "the figure of casualties in disturbances in Narayanganj and Dacca published in some newspapers based on an agency report are highly exaggerated and incorrect. So are other facts in the report".

The Note said that "other false reports were also being circulated. For instance, it was stated that the Indian Deputy High Commissioner in Dacca had been attacked by a mob and that Mr. Prabhat Chandra Dey, president of the Dacca Bar Association, had been killed."

It added: "Inquiries have revealed that Mr. Dey is quite safe and the Deputy High Commissioner has stated that neither he nor any member of his staff have been threatened or assaulted.

"The figure of 1,000 killed mentioned in the agency report is a pure fabrication."

President Ayub Khan Rejects Dr. S. Radhakrishnan's Call For Joint Appeal: On January 21, President Ayub Khan rejected the suggestion for a joint appeal made by the Indian President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan.

The Pakistan High Commissioner in New Delhi called on the Commonwealth Secretary, Mr. C. S. Jha, and handed over to him President Ayub Khan's reply.

Rejecting the suggestion President Ayub Khan said: "As you know I have already issued an appeal to my people. I do not see how a second appeal by me would have any greater effect. What is required is that stern measures are taken against those miscreants who are responsible for the recent incidents in Dacca and Narayanganj and prevent the trouble from spreading. This is what the Government of East Pakistan is doing with the full backing and support of my Government.

"What is really needed is that whatever steps are necessary should be most urgently taken to restore law and order and mete out deterrent punishment to the criminals who have been responsible for killing innocent men, women and children.

"We are, Mr. President, faced with a grave human problem. It will not be solved by shutting our eyes to it, as for example, Mr. Gulzarilal Nanda's statement of January 14, which said 'absolute communal harmony prevailed in Calcutta'. Nor can we solve it by blaming others. Let leaders in each country look into their own hearts and resolve to put their own house in order. The rest will follow".

He said he did not presume to advise Dr. Radhakrishnan on whether or not he should issue an appeal to those people on the lines of the one the Pakistan President had issued on January 13.

"I may, however, re-iterate my hope that your Government will ensure that law and order is quickly restored in all the riot-affected areas and that those who have been driven out will be enabled to return to their homes and live there with full sense of security. I re-iterate this would be in the best interests of both India and Pakistan.

"You have questioned a number of statements contained in my message of January 13. I regret I am unable to accept the information supplied to you or the contentions based on those premises.

"However, I do not wish to enter the controversy at this unfortunate stage of our relationship. It would, I think, be most unfortunate if you and I get involved in an exchange of recriminations. This would deflect attention from our real purpose".

This purpose, he added, "is that the life and property of the minority community must be fully protected, and that communal peace must be maintained and that the minority community must not be looked upon as a hostage."

B. Coal Deposits Found In East Pakistan: The Central Industries Minister, Mr. Abdullah Al-Mahmood, disclosed in Karachi on January 23 that extensive deposits of best quality coal had been discovered in the Rajshahi and Bogra districts of East Pakistan.

He said that the coal had been found after preliminary drilling and five sites in the two districts were explored. During the drilling at one place six seams were discovered at various depths, the thickest seam being at a depth of 3,274 feet. Experts were surveying the length and breadth of the seams.

The drilling was carried out under the United Nations-Pakistan Mineral Survey Project by the Geological Survey of Pakistan and the UN Special Fund. The Government's Project Representative was Dr. N. M. Khan, Director-General of the Geological Survey of Pakistan, and the UN Project Manager was Mr. A. L. Savoranin. A number of other Pakistani geologists have been assisting the project, and a part-time UN Geo-physical Consultant has been Dr. Oskar Kappelmeyer.

According to the geologists the coal so far discovered has an aggregate thickness of 121 feet and the deposits, on a conservative estimate, amount to more than 4 million tons.

The first seam of one-foot thickness was hit at 2,990 feet, the second seam hit at 3,034 feet was of 6-foot thickness, while the third seam was 65 feet thick at 3,274-foot depth, the fourth seam 41 feet thick at 3,404-foot depth, the fifth seam 8 feet thick at 3,511-foot depth.

The two Wings of Pakistan, it was estimated, import coal of the total value of between Rs. 9 and Rs. 10 crores annually. When the rich coal deposits of Rajshahi and Bogra begin to be mined, not only will the coal requirements of the two Wings of the country be fully met but also sufficient quantities left over for export.

TURKEY

A. Progress Of CENTO Economic Projects: In Ankara, economic experts of five countries ended on January 21 an intensive six-day survey embracing the progress of CENTO's current economic development programme together with new projects.

Participating in the meeting were economists and Government officials from Iran, Pakistan, Turkey, Britain and the United States. The delegates reviewed the progress of CENTO projects with a call for increased momentum.

Under study was the progress of projects ranging from development of telecommunications, highway, railroad, seaport and air navigational systems linking the CENTO region as well as joint activities in the fields of agriculture, public health, trade expansion, scientific cooperation and technical assistance.

The experts reported that several of CENTO's major projects are nearing completion, most notably in the tele-communications field.

CENTO's high frequency project, which will link London with the key regional cities, will be completed this year. A giant microwave system—the world's longest—will be in operation by late 1964, establishing a direct communications connexion between Iran, Pakistan and Turkey.

CENTO highway and railroad projects, designed to join Iran, Pakistan and Turkey, were reported in various stages of construction or survey.

Recent progress was reported in Turkey, where 100 kilometres of rail was constructed between Mus and Tatvan since the beginning of 1963, and in Iran where 70 kilometres west of Sharafkhaneh have been completed for laying rails. The remaining portion to the Turkish border is under construction. The construction of the coastal road in Pakistan continued to make steady progress through difficult terrain.

Increased activity was recorded in CENTO's plans for increasing agricultural productivity in the regional area. A series of specialized meetings sponsored by CENTO and organized and financed by the United States, resulted in the formulation of guidelines for an overall regional agricultural policy.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. UN General Assembly Resolutions: Before it ended on December 17, 1963, the United Nations General Assembly passed several resolutions on important issues.

On October 17, it adopted by acclamation a resolution calling for the prohibition of nuclear weapons in outer space.

It welcomed the expression of intention by USSR and USA not to station in outer space any objects carrying nuclear weapons or other weapons of mass destruction. It solemnly called on all States not to orbit such weapons, install them on celestial bodies, or station them in any manner in outer space. Further, it called on all States not to encourage or take part in such actions.

Before the vote, Mr. N. T. Fedorenko of USSR said that prohibition of nuclear weapons in outer space would be a further step towards the relaxation of international tensions.

He noted that on September 19, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of USSR, Mr. A. Gromyko, had told the Assembly that USSR was prepared to prohibit nuclear weapons in space and that on the following day, the late President Kennedy of USA had said that his country would undertake negotiations to that end.

Southern Rhodesia:

A resolution on Southern Rhodesia, recommended by the Fourth (Trusteeship) Committee, was also adopted by the Assembly on October 14.

The resolution invited the United Kingdom:

(1) Not to transfer to Southern Rhodesia, as at present governed, any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty, but to await the establishment of a Government fully representative of all the inhabitants of the Colony;

(2) Not to transfer armed forces and aircraft to Southern Rhodesia, as envisaged by the Central African Conference held in 1963; and

(3) To put into effect the General Assembly's resolutions on Southern Rhodesia, in particular those of June 28 and October 31, 1962.

The Assembly unanimously adopted a 57-Power resolution on October 14 appealing to member-States to assist Yugoslavia in its five-year plan to reconstruct Skoplje, which was devastated in an earthquake in July, 1963.

Resolution On Ending Nuclear Tests:

The General Assembly adopted on November 11, 1963 a resolution emphasizing the importance of halting all nuclear tests because of the danger to mankind of atomic radiation.

The resolution was earlier adopted by the Special Political Committee.

A 15-nation Scientific Committee was also authorized by the General Assembly to continue its study of the range and effect of atomic radiation and nuclear fallout.

The resolution would have the General Assembly call on the 18-nation Disarmament Committee to resume its negotiations "in a spirit of goodwill and accommodation" and recommend that the areas of basic agreement be widened.

While calling for negotiations "with energy and determination" for an agreement on general and complete disarmament, the draft would ask for "urgent and sustained" attention to collateral measures. It would urge the continuation of efforts to seek agreement on measures aimed at reducing the risk of war by accident or by surprise attack, as well as on measures intended to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

South-West Africa:

On November 13, 1963, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions on South-West Africa, which were earlier approved by the Fourth Committee.

Under the first resolution, the Assembly would:

(1) Ask all States which had not yet done so, to refrain from supplying arms, military equipment, petroleum or petroleum products to South Africa;

(2) Ask the Special Committee of 24 on the ending of colonialism to consider, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the agencies of United Nations, the implications of the mining industry and other international companies having interests in South-West Africa;

(3) Re-affirm the right of the people of South-West Africa to self-determination and independence;

(4) Condemn the Government of South Africa for its "persistent refusal" to co-operate with United Nations in applying the principles of the Charter and the resolutions of the General Assembly;

(5) Consider that any attempt to annex a part or the whole of the Territory "constitutes an act of aggression" and draw the attention of the Security Council "to the present critical situation in South-West Africa, the continuation of which constitutes a serious threat to international peace and security";

(6) Ask the Secretary-General to invite the Government of South Africa to inform him, not later than November 30, 1963, of its decision regarding the appointment of a United Nations Technical Assistance Resident Representative for South-West Africa, and to report to the Assembly immediately after he receives a reply to the invitation; and

(7) Decide to maintain the question of South-West Africa on the agenda of the current session and to resume consideration of it immediately after receipt of South Africa's reply.

The roll-call vote on this resolution was 84 in favour to 6 against, with 17 abstentions. Four delegations were absent.

The second resolution, which was adopted unanimously by the Assembly, would draw the attention of the petitioners concerned to relevant reports and resolutions adopted by the Assembly on the question of South-West Africa.

The third resolution, also adopted unanimously, would "once again" request all member-States, and in particular South Africa, to facilitate in all possible ways the travel of South-West Africans seeking to avail themselves of educational opportunities provided under the United Nations special educational and training programme.

Views on these resolutions were expressed in the plenary, during explanations of vote, by the representatives of Denmark, Iran and Mauretania, and by several speakers in the earlier discussion in the Fourth Committee.

Also in the Fourth Committee, five amendments proposed by the United States to the first resolution on South-West Africa were rejected by majority votes.

Atomic Radiation:

On November 11, 1963 the Assembly unanimously adopted a resolution which took note of the report of the UN Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and asked that Committee to continue its work.

The resolution, which was recommended to the Assembly by its Special Political Committee, emphasized the importance, from the point of view of harmful atomic radiation, of the cessation of nuclear tests in the atmosphere, outer space and underwater.

It urged the World Meteorological Organization to proceed with the implementation of its plan for monitoring and reporting levels of atmospheric radio activity.

Improvement Of Methods Of Work:

Also on November 11, the Assembly approved the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the improvement of the methods of work of the General Assembly.

This report recommended a series of measures for carrying out the work of the Assembly as speedily and efficiently as possible, such as a greater use of subcommittees and working groups to deal with agenda items in detail after the main points of view had been expressed.

Embargo On Oil Supplies And Arms To South Africa:

The General Assembly urged all States on November 13, 1963 to cut off supplies of petrol and oil to South Africa in order to hasten the granting of independence to the mandated territory of South-West Africa.

At the same time the Assembly condemned the South African Government's "persistent refusal to co-operate with the UN."

The Assembly also drew the attention of the Security Council to "the present situation in South-West Africa, the continuation of which constitutes a serious threat to international peace and security".

South-West Africa is a former German Colony which South Africa administers under a mandate from the League of Nations. The UN has long sought in vain to exercise jurisdiction over South Africa's administration of the Territory. The matter is now before the World Court.

In addition to the oil embargo, all States were urged to stop the supply of arms and military equipment to South Africa.

Britain and USA were among those voting against it.

The resolution solemnly re-affirmed the "inalienable right of the people of South-West Africa to self-determination and independence" and the Assembly's consideration that "any attempt to annex a part of the whole of the territory... constitutes an act of aggression".

Declaration On Racial Discrimination:

The General Assembly adopted on November 20, 1963, with South Africa dissenting, a draft declaration on elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, accepting a minor amendment to make it acceptable to Western democracies.

The amendment was to Article 9, which originally called upon member-countries to take immediate measures, including legislation, "to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote racial discrimination or incite to or use violence for purposes of discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin."

The USA and other Western democracies opposed the Article in the Third Committee and abstained on the resolution as a whole, then on the ground that it hit free speech.

The declaration called for national and international measures, including education and information, to secure universal recognition and observance of its principles.

The Assembly decided to publish the declaration in about 30 languages.

Mr. Gerhard P. Jooste, leader of the South African delegation, said that his country could not be a party to the declaration, which, he also said, "does not have the legal status of a covenant or an international agreement".

By another resolution the Assembly asked the ECOSOC and Human Rights Commission to prepare a draft convention on the subject.

1965 As International Co-operation Year:

On November 21, 1963, the General Assembly unanimously decided to designate 1965—the 20th year of the founding of United Nations—as International Co-operation Year.

In doing so, it adopted a six-Power resolution which called upon member-States, the Specialized Agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations concerned, to recognize 1965 as International Co-operation Year; to publicize as widely as possible the activities planned for its observance; and to formulate and make available to special committees their plans for the International Co-operation Year.

The resolution recommended that a 12-member committee, appointed by the President of the General Assembly, should be set up to prepare for the 1965 activities.

The idea of an International Co-operation Year came from the Indian Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru and aims to draw attention to peaceful international co-operation, as opposed to the emphasis placed in the world on international conflict.

Among the suggested activities contained in a report submitted to the Assembly by the Preparatory Committee on the International Co-operation Year were: an assessment in 1965 of the progress and effectiveness of Development Decade programmes and of the application of General Assembly resolutions dealing with aspects of economic co-operation and development where substantial progress has been achieved; and encouragement of member-States to co-ordinate long-term development programmes.

Call To Sign Partial Test Ban Treaty:

The General Assembly on November 27, 1963 called upon all States to sign the partial nuclear test ban Treaty and urged the Geneva Disarmament Committee to use energy and determination to bring about general and complete disarmament.

Only Albania, reflecting the political attitudes of China, dissented from the Assembly's appeal to the Geneva Conference. France, which had not been participating in the Conference, expressed no reservation. But the French delegate, along with the entire Soviet bloc, except Rumania, cast an abstention on a separate resolution endorsing Latin America's plans to keep nuclear weapons out of the region.

France also joined the United States and Britain in voting against an African-initiated resolution requesting the Geneva Committee to study "urgently" the question of convening a conference to sign a convention on the prohibition of all nuclear and thermo-nuclear weapons.

When this matter was debated in the Main Political Committee, the British and Americans criticised the move as "wholly unrealistic" and "impractical."

The Soviet Union voted for the resolution, which was adopted by 64 votes to 13 with 25 abstentions, and four absentees.

Political and military alignments were reflected in the vote. Among the developing countries, Burma, Jamaica, Malaysia and Trinidad-Tobago cast abstentions. Most of the NATO countries joined Britain and USA in the negative column.

The Assembly also endorsed a move by a number of Latin American nations to declare Latin America a "denuclearized" zone.

Other Resolutions:

The General Assembly adopted resolutions on territories under Portuguese administration, Palestine refugees and economic and social questions.

The resolution on territories under Portuguese administration, recommended by the Fourth Committee (Trusteeship and Non-Self-Governing Territories), requested the Security Council to adopt necessary measures to effect its own decisions, particularly those contained in its resolution of July 31, 1963 calling upon Portugal to recognize the right of the peoples in its territories to self-determination and independence. The resolution also provided that the item would be kept on the General Assembly's agenda for the 18th session.

It was adopted on December 3 by 91 in favour to 2 against, with 11 abstentions.

In the preamble, the resolution stated that the General Assembly noted "with deep regret and great concern the continued refusal of the Government of Portugal to take any steps to implement resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council" on the question.

Mr. Vasco Vieira Garin of Portugal said that the resolution was contrary to the Charter and was thus unjustified. He said that a climate of "artificial concern has been created around the non-existent problem of the Portuguese territories."

On the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, the Assembly adopted on December 3 a resolution calling on the Conciliation Commission for Palestine to continue efforts on the repatriation or compensation of Palestine refugees, noting with regret that repatriation or compensation had not been effected and that the situation of the refugees "continues to be a matter of serious concern."

The vote on the resolution was 82 in favour to one against (Israel), with 14 abstentions. This was by a show of hands.

The Assembly on December 5 adopted nine resolutions presented by the Third Committee (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) pertaining to the report of the Economic and Social Council; and one resolution presented by the Second Committee (Economic and Financial) recommending that the membership of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization Inter-Governmental Committee on the World Food Programme be increased from 20 to 24.

Seven of the resolutions proposed by the Third Committee were adopted unanimously by the Assembly.

Resolution VIII requested the Economic and Social Council to "reconsider its decision to cancel the 1964 meeting of the Commission on Human Rights," and requested the Secretary-General to make special provisions to hold the meeting at United Nations Headquarters prior to March 15, 1964. It was adopted by a vote of 78 in favour to 12 against, with 7 abstentions.

Resolution I called for the development of practical programmes of action at the national and international levels to promote rural and community development in the developing countries, and provision by United Nations and Specialized Agencies of technical and financial assistance to countries which request aid. It was adopted by 89 votes in favour to none against, with one abstention.

Resolution II expressed concern at the inadequate progress in social development made in the last decade, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a programme of social development, with specific major targets to be achieved in the second half of the Development Decade (1965-70).

Resolution III requested the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning to take emergency measures to expedite building, especially low-income-housing, in the developing countries.

Resolution IV requested the Commission on Human Rights to prepare a report on the laws and practices pertaining to the death penalty, for submission to the Assembly at its 22nd session (1967).

Resolution V commended the work of the United Nations Children's Fund and requested member-States to continue to contribute maximum financial support to its programme.

Resolution VI requested the Secretary-General, United Nations and Specialized Agencies to aid developing countries in providing training facilities and centres for women, in order to ensure greater participation of women in national economic and social development.

Resolution VII requested the Commission on Human Rights to prepare a draft declaration on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women, for consideration by the Assembly at its 20th session (1965).

Resolution IX requested the Economic and Social Council to provide for equitable geographical distribution of membership, in the election of members of the Commission on Human Rights.

The debate on ending colonialism was based on a report of the Special Committee (Committee of 24) on the situation with regard to the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples.

The report covered the work of the Committee of 24 during 1963, in which it took decisions with regard to the future of Southern Rhodesia, South-West Africa, territories under Portuguese administration, Gambia, Northern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, Bechuanaland, Swaziland, Aden, Fiji and Malta. In its consensus regarding Kenya and Zanzibar the Committee expressed the hope that no new obstacles would stand in the way of the Territories' independence.

In the report, the Special Committee of 24 stated that it was unable to consider "all other territories which have not yet attained independence" to be added to the preliminary list, and thus to complete the list of territories coming within the scope of its work. It decided to do this at its meetings in 1964, subject to any further directives which the General Assembly might wish to provide at its 18th session.

In the course of the year, the Committee heard petitioners from territories under Portuguese administration, British Guiana, Southern Rhodesia, South-West Africa and Aden; and examined the implementation of the Declaration in 26 territories. However, it was unable to complete its consideration of five of them —Gibraltar, Fernando Po, Ifni, Rio Muni and Spanish Sahara—for lack of time.

Acting on the report of the Special Committee of 24 on the ending of colonialism, the Assembly on December 11 adopted seven resolutions concerning Aden, British Guiana, Malta, Fiji, Northern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, and Basutoland, Bechuanaland and Swaziland, and one resolution on the work of the Committee of 24 itself.

The resolution on Aden, adopted by a vote of 77 in favour to 10 against, with 11 abstentions, called on the administering Power (United Kingdom) to repeal "restrictive laws" and cease "repressive action" against the people of the Territory. In part, it also requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee of 24 and the administering Power, to arrange for a UN presence before and during General Elections, which would precede the establishment of the national Government recommended in the resolution, and recommended that conversations be opened between the Government resulting from the elections and the administering Power to fix a date for independence and the transfer of power.

The resolution on Malta, adopted unanimously, congratulated Malta and the United Kingdom and noted that the Territory would attain independence "not later than May 31, 1964."

On the question of Fiji, the resolution invited the administering Power to work out with the people of the Territory a new Constitution providing for free elections and to take immediate steps for the transfer of power. It was adopted by a vote of 78 in favour to none against, with 21 abstentions.

The resolution on Northern Rhodesia and the one on Nyasaland were both adopted unanimously. The first noted that elections will be held in Northern Rhodesia in January, 1964 and requested the administering Power to fix a date for independence and the transfer of power to the newly elected Government. The second congratulated Nyasaland and the United Kingdom and noted that the Territory would attain independence "not later than July 6, 1964," and the hope that nothing would hinder the Territory from becoming an independent State by that date.

On the Territories of Basutoland, Bechuanaland and Swaziland the single resolution requested a constitutional conference for each of the three Territories, leading to General Elections and independence. It also requested the administering Power (United Kingdom) to take steps to return to the indigenous inhabitants "all lands taken from them" and, in another operative paragraph, "solemnly warns" the Government of South Africa that attempts to "annex or encroach upon the territorial integrity of these Territories shall be considered an act of aggression." The resolution was adopted by a vote of 78 in favour to 3 against, with 16 abstentions.

The resolution on British Guiana, adopted by a vote of 78 in favour to none against, with 21 abstentions, called upon the United Kingdom to fix an independence date "without delay."

The resolution on the work of the Special Committee of 24 requested the Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means for the immediate and total implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples.

Approving the Special Committee's report, the Assembly, according to the resolution, called on the administering Powers to implement the report's conclusion and recommendations and deeply regretted the refusal of certain administering Powers to co-operate with the Special Committee. The resolution further invited the Special Committee to apprise the Security Council of any developments which might threaten international peace and security.

The resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 95 in favour to none against, with 6 abstentions.

The General Assembly, on December 11 adopted 17 resolutions on economic and financial questions.

These resolutions were recommended in three reports of the Second Committee (Economic and Financial), one of which concerned the conversion to peaceful needs of the resources released by disarmament.

Another Second Committee report contained 13 resolutions. These recommended that:

(1) To promote agrarian reform, the Assembly invite member-States and international bodies to strengthen technical assistance to developing countries carrying out land reform programmes and to give financial aid for agricultural development (adopted unanimously);

(2) On literacy campaigns and the supply of food, the Assembly request studies of free distribution of food to the school-age population (89 in favour to none against, with one abstention);

(3) On a United Nations training and research institute, the Assembly request the Secretary-General to take steps to establish such an institute, if possible, in the first half of 1964 (78 in favour to one against, with 11 abstentions);

(4) On the role of patents in the transfer of technology to developing countries, the Assembly request the Secretary-General to prepare a study and submit it to the UN Conference on Trade and Development (unanimously);

(5) On transforming the UN Special Fund into a Capital Development Fund, the Assembly extend the mandate of the Committee on a United Nations Capital Development Fund and request the Secretary-General to study the practical steps of such a transfer (81 in favour to none against, with nine abstentions);

(6) On a world campaign for universal literacy, the Assembly invite States to contribute technical and financial assistance to national efforts for the eradication of illiteracy (unanimously);

(7) On capital resources and the flow of capital to developing countries, the Assembly request the Economic and Social Council to consider means of keeping this question under constant and systematic review (unanimously);

(8) On planning for economic development, the Assembly request the Secretary-General to grant further assistance to regional planning institutes and intensify current activities (unanimously);

(9) On activities in the field of industrial development, the Assembly declare a need to intensify UN efforts in this field and request the Secretary-General to consider holding an international symposium by 1966 related to the problems of industrialization of developing countries (unanimously);

(10) On decentralization of the economic and social activities of United Nations and strengthening the regional economic commissions, the Assembly request the Secretary-General to accelerate such efforts (91 in favour to none against, with one abstention);

(11) On a declaration of international co-operation, the Assembly invite the Economic and Social Council to expedite work on the question (94 in favour to none against, with no abstentions);

(12) On a world campaign against hunger, disease and ignorance, the Assembly urge all non-governmental organizations to put their resources into this campaign in 1965 and continue for the remainder of the United Nations Development Decade (unanimously); and

(13) On international co-operation in the application of science and technology to economic and social development, the Assembly request the Economic and Social Council to consider establishing a programme in which scientists of the highly developed countries would study problems of the developing countries and explore suitable solutions (unanimously).

The Assembly adopted three further resolutions submitted in the third report of the Second Committee. It voted unanimously to enlarge the Governing Council of the Special Fund from 18 to 24 members; by a vote of 79 in favour to none against with 15 abstentions, it authorized the use of funds from the Special Account of the Expanded Programme for the provision of operational personnel by all participating organizations; and it voted unanimously to confirm the allocation of $46,347,638 to the organizations participating in the Programme.

Membership Of Security Council And ECOSOC:

The General Assembly recommended on December 17, 1963 an increase, for the first time in UN history, in the membership of the Security Council from the present 11 to 15.

The Assembly, which adjourned its 18th annual session after the vote, disregarded a last-minute Soviet appeal for a postponement of the vote so that private consultations might continue on the question. Russia is opposed to any change in the Council membership until UN recognizes China.

The vote was 97 to 11 with four abstentions, one member being absent.

The Assembly's decision does not in itself guarantee expansion of the Security Council because this requires amendment of the UN Charter, for which the ratification of two-thirds of the member-Governments, including the five Permanent Members of the Security Council, is necessary.

France joined the Soviet Union in voting against the resolution, which was called up from the Political Committee where it was adopted at the instance of a group of African, Asian and Latin American nations.

In a separate vote, the Assembly also recommended an increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27 seats.

Of the nine seats to be added to the Economic and Social Council, seven would go to the Afro-Asian States, one to Latin America and one to Western Europe and "other States."

The vote was 96 to 11 with five abstentions.

The United States and Britain abstained on both votes. They reserved their positions to give further study to the proposed enlargements.

Kenya And Zanzibar Admitted To UN:

On December 16, 1963, Kenya and Zanzibar were admitted as members of United Nations.

At a brief flag-raising ceremony, the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, congratulated the peoples and Governments of Zanzibar and Kenya and said: "Henceforth the peoples of Zanzibar and Kenya are masters of their own destiny."

The formalities of admission to membership were gone through earlier in the day. In the morning, the Security Council heard Britain—co-sponsor with Ghana and Morocco—introduce the applications for membership. Later in the General Assembly, the draft resolutions for membership were adopted by acclamation.

The 18th session of the General Assembly ended on December 17, 1963.

Closing the session, the Assembly President, Mr. Carlos Sosa Rodriguez of Venezuela, stated that the work of the Assembly had "centred around the three great political imperatives of our times: the maintenance of peace, the elimination of colonialism and of racial segregation, and the improvement of economic and social conditions in the developing countries".

Listing the positive achievements of the session, he mentioned the resolution banning nuclear weapons from outer space and the one setting down the principles for the peaceful use of outer space.

Referring to the debates on colonial issues, he said it had become quite apparent that world opinion, with a few "obvious" exceptions, was on the road "to ending, once and for all, all colonialism all over the world," and also that the whole world was now committed to end segregation.

In the economic field, he declared that the debate was dominated by the forthcoming Conference on Trade and Development. This Conference, he added, must find a way to solve old problems of economic relations between developed and developing countries.

He also acknowledged that the smooth and speedy conclusion of the work was due both to the applications of some measures recommended for shortening General Assembly sessions and embodied in a resolution, and to the co-operation of delegations.

Replying to a question concerning the resolutions on enlarging the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, he noted that these resolutions had been adopted by a very large majority. The Great Powers could now see, he added, the great majority of member-States now felt "that it is about time for the Councils to be reshaped". He explained, however, that the next step was ratification, and if the Great Powers did not ratify, the decisions could not be put into effect.

He was also asked his opinion on the procedure under Article 19 of the Charter which provides for suspension of membership rights for those countries which are in arrears in their contributions. He said that the application of this Article was "not only a legal question but also a political one that requires a great deal of reflection before one gives an opinion on it".

ASIAN RECORDER

BURMA

A. Amnesty Offer To Rebels Ends: The Government amnesty offer to rebels expired at midnight of January 31-February 1, opening the way for an all-out Government military campaign against insurgents.

Under the 10-month-old amnesty declaration, rebels—including underground Communists and secession-minded minority tribesmen—were eligible for free pardon if they surrendered with their weapons.

With the amnesty over, the rebels are once again liable, when captured, to be charged under the Treason Act which carries a death sentence.

B. Restrictions On Private Purchase And Sale Of Crops: The Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win on December 26, 1963 promulgated an Order authorizing the Government to declare by notification any agricultural crop an essential commodity.

The Order declared the following crops "essential commodities".

(1) Paddy, (2) matpe, (3) tapioca grown in Pa-an District by registered growers, (4) Virginia tobacco, (5) jute, (6) kapok, (7) cotton—mahlang 5/6, (8) cotton—long staple, (9) wagyi, (10) wagale, (11) jute and (12) groundnut.

Under the Order, the Government may by notification issue directives prohibiting the purchase of these crops from farmers by any one other than itself or its agencies, and the sale, storage, transport disposal etc. of these crops. Such directives may contain provisos and exceptions.

In addition to the crops which it directly buys from farmers, the Government has power to purchase, if public interest demands, any stocks of crop held by any person for purpose of trade, by offering a reasonable price. If the person refuses to sell, the Government, or the official specially empowered in this behalf, may issue a directive to him ordering him to sell the crop to the Government organization concerned.

The Government is also authorized to fix the prices of these commodities.

Import Regulation:

An earlier Order, promulgated by the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council on December 18, 1963 authorized the Secretary of the Executive Committee of the People's Stores Corporation to regulate the storage, transport, movement, pricing, distribution or sale of imported goods.

The Order was made by the Chairman exercising the powers conferred upon him by Section 3 of the Essential Supplies and Services Act, 1947. It came into force with immediate effect.

Under this Order, all importers are to submit to the Secretary prescribed returns about their imported goods within prescribed periods.

No importer is to store, transport, move, fix prices or sell imported goods enumerated in these returns except in accordance with the directives of the Secretary.

The Order will not apply to goods imported by the Government Departments, Boards and Corporations, or to goods imported for purposes other than trade, or to goods imported as samples. Directives relating to these imports will be issued by the Secretary from time to time with the concurrence of the Executive Committee of the Corporation.

Any one who fails to comply with or who violates any of the provisions of the Order, or the directives issued under it, will be punished under Section 8 of the Essential Supplies and Services Act. It is also provided that such punishment will entail confiscation of the imported goods concerned.

CEYLON

A. Independence Day Celebrations: The 16th anniversary of Independence was celebrated throughout the Island on February 5.

The venue of the year's main celebrations was the southern port town of Galle, where surging crowds witnessed an armed services parade followed by a march-past by students.

Galle was chosen because of the Government's decision to stage the celebrations in different parts of the country every year. In 1963 the celebrations were held at Anuradhapura, the ancient Capital of Ceylon.

In her broadcast the Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, announced the Government's decision to treat the coming year as "A National Service and Freedom-From-Hunger Year" as a mark of the Government's firm resolve to increase production and to fight the common enemies of poverty and want.

She said that Ceylon's foreign policy, based on the principle of non-alignment, was honoured all over the world as one which was conducive to peace and friendly co-operation between all nations. She said Ceylon had played a full and responsible part in international affairs and helped in easing tensions and promoting peace.

She re-iterated the Government's assurance to the minorities that while the Government strove to give back to the majority those rights which, during a long period of foreign rule, they were deprived of, "we do not propose to act in a manner that will violate in any way the basic rights enjoyed by any citizen of this country."

She added: "Naturally, in a period of rapid change and transition such as the present, it was inevitable that some sections of the community, be they linguistic or religious, may have felt that their rights were in danger.

"Of these groups I ask for patience and understanding. From the majority I ask for magnanimity and moderation."

CHINA

A. Resumption Of Ideological Attack On USSR: Peking's People's Daily on February 3 compared the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev and President Lyndon Johnson of USA to Siamese twins.

An article by the newspaper's commentator answering criticism by Pravda on January 30 of a People's Daily report on the Geneva disarmament talks was issued by the New China News Agency in a resumption of polemical attack on Soviet leaders.

There had till then been a comparative lull in direct Chinese attacks on Soviet leaders.

The article said Pravda's reaction to criticism by the People's Daily of President Johnson showed it was the Soviet Communist Party's organ which felt the pain of an attack on the American President, as one Siamese twin was said to feel the other's pain.

It asked: "Does this mean that the Soviet leaders intend to reach an agreement with Johnson, under which they would join hands in forbidding the people to oppose imperialism and start revolution?

"If so, Pravda has indeed good reasons for its nervousness, which appears at first glance unwarranted."

The Chinese Communist Party organ also devoted the entire back page to publishing anti-Chinese material put out in the Soviet Union during the past fortnight along with sharply worded Chinese comment on it.

An introductory editorial note said the Soviet leaders were in a "mental condition in which they are extremely anti-China but lack any grounds or reason."

It promised further attacks on Soviet leaders and their allegedly "revisionist" policies.

Yugoslav Protest Rejected:

Earlier, on January 30, a Yugoslav Government spokesman said in Belgrade that China had rejected a Yugoslav protest made on January 14 against "most rude attacks and slanders" by the Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, against Yugoslavia during his visit to Albania (see page 5641).

China in a reply on January 29 claimed that the Yugoslav protest was an unfounded slander and attack against Mr. Chou.

The Chinese reply also accused Yugoslavia of having always maintained a hostile attitude towards the "peace-loving policy of China" and of sowing dissension among China and countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The spokesman added that the Yugoslav Foreign Ministry had rejected the Chinese reply because "in addition to distorting facts it contained slanders against Yugoslavia."

The Yugoslav protest Note said that by using a visit to Albania to attack Yugoslavia, undermine its friendly relations with socialist countries, and to intensify Albanian hostility to Yugoslavia, China was violating the elementary norms in international relations.

B. Plans For Economic Advance: According to the Chairman of the State Economic Commission and Vice-Premier, Mr. Po I-po, China plans an all-out economic advance after 1965, when it will have paid off its debts to the Soviet Union.

Quoted in a Hong Kong communist newspaper, Mr. Po made a number of revealing comments on the present economic developments in China and on the withdrawal of Soviet experts in 1960.

One of his most significant statements was that China's urban population "must be reduced from 130 million persons to 110 million". This means that the Chinese plan to continue emphasizing agricultural production at the expense of industry for some time to come.

China recruited a large number of peasants for factory work at the height of the industrial drive in 1958, and began sending them back to the countryside when the agricultural situation became desperate in 1959 and 1960.

Mr. Po said: "We have drawn too much man-power from rural areas to the cities. Natural calamities show that our urban population is greater than our countryside can supply." He indicated that more people would be required in the countryside until agriculture was mechanized.

He made his comments in an interview published in the Hong Kong Ta Kung Pao under the byline of Anna Louise Strong, an American writer who has been living in China for a number of years.

He gave no details of Peking's future plans, but said they would have "an entirely independent economic foundation that completely meets our needs". In the meantime, China was undergoing a period of "economic re-adjustment" necessitated principally by the "sudden blow" struck by Mr. N. Khruschev in 1960 when 1,300 Soviet experts were ordered back to Russia and supplies of vital equipment from the Soviet Union ceased.

It was like someone "taking away all the dishes when you have eaten only half a meal", Mr. Po said. "Mr. Khruschev wanted to strangle us to death, but instead he made us work harder and harder these three years." He claimed that China had "overcome the difficulties which he (Mr. Khruschev) caused".

INDIA

SUMMARY: Dr. Zakir Hussain's Address To Parliament; Railway Budget; Gen. Ne Win's Visit; Investment Agreements With USA; Expansion In Ship-building Industry.

A. Dr. Zakir Hussain's Address To Parliament: The Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain on February 10 opened the Budget session of Parliament with an Address to a joint meeting of the two Houses briefly surveying the previous year's problems and achievements and also the burdens and tasks that lay ahead of the country.

Dr. Zakir Hussain, who had been discharging the functions of the ailing President since February 5, spoke first in Hindi and then in English. Five DMK members refrained from attending as a protest against the Vice-President giving precedence to Hindi. The Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru attended.

Dr. Hussain said: "In spite of difficulties and distractions, we have continued to move forward towards our objective of a democratic and socialist order at home and for peace and co-operation in international affairs".

He made a pointed reference to India's relations with Pakistan, which country, he said, had, instead of showing a desire to reach a settlement, mounted a "hate India" campaign.

The Pakistani authorities, he said, had exploited the theft of the holy relic in Kashmir to fan communal feelings and this had resulted in serious disturbances in East Pakistan and loss of property and several hundred lives of the minority community in that province.

He also referred to the repercussions in West Bengal, where the Government took firm action.

He regretted that Pakistan's response to India's suggestion of a joint appeal by the Presidents of the two countries to restore peace and harmony had been negative, and India was facing a large influx of the minority community from East Pakistan.

He said that though there was no actual fighting on the borders, the Chinese threat continued throughout 1963. Despite India's dedication to peace, she had to take many steps to improve the defence forces. He spoke of the help received in this regard from USA, Britain and several other Commonwealth countries and Russia.

Referring to the economic situation, he said that the shortfalls in the production of food had had a disturbing effect on the price level, but the Government had taken steps to prevent prices from "shooting up".

A steady increase in agricultural production was described as the most important task facing the country. There had been, he said, a steady expansion in the overall agricultural effort during the first two years of the current Plan, but there had also been successively bad agricultural seasons.

In industrial production the upward trend had been maintained and the general level of output in 1963-64 was expected to be 7 per cent to 8 per cent more than in the previous year. He mentioned a number of projects, now at various stages of implementation, which would strengthen the economy in the years to come.

The Central Vigilance Commission, which had been set up to deal with corruption and lack of integrity in the administration, would have in its own sphere a status broadly corresponding to that of the Union Public Service Commission.

He described India's relations with Nepal as most cordial and friendly and said India looked forward to developing closer relations with the newly independent countries in Africa. He also supported the African people struggling for freedom from Portugal.

A reference was made to the assassination of President J. F. Kennedy, in whose death, he said, India had lost a genuine friend and the world a great champion of peace and amity.

He spoke of India's broad agreement with Mr. N. Khruschev's proposal for an international agreement renouncing the use of force in settling territorial or border disputes. He hoped that the principal Powers would be able to work out an acceptable agreement on this suggestion.

The Lok Sabha discussed the Address for four days from February 12. The discussion in the Rajya Sabha also began the same day.

B. The Railway Budget: The Railway Budget for 1964-65, presented to Parliament by the Central Railway Minister, Mr. H. C. Dasappa, on February 11, contemplates no increase in passenger fares or parcel rates.

A small increase of two per cent in the supplementary charge on goods freight rates including coal rates has, however, been proposed. This is to meet at least part of the cost of the recently sanctioned concessions to Central Government employees by way of increase in dearness, city compensatory and house rent allowances as well as improvement in the family pension scheme and in lower rated pensions.

There will also be some additional commitment arising from the Government's proposal that Railways should pay interest (dividend) at 5.75 per cent to the General Exchequer on fresh capital made available to the Railways during the Budget year and thereafter until the position is reviewed by the Railway Convention Committee in 1965. For capital provided for the Railways up to the end of the current year, the 4.5 per cent rate as approved by the Parliament in 1962-63 will apply. The increased interest rate is to reflect the increased cost of raising capital.

Simultaneously, a downward adjustment in the classification of some high rated commodities has been proposed, by way of rationalization, which will reduce the freight rates on several items of finished products in consumer goods.

In respect of coal, a graduated increase in basic coal freight rates within a maximum increase of Rs. 3 per tonne, for distances from 501 kilometres and up to 2,100 kilometres has been proposed. This measure, while raising some additional revenue, will also be a step towards rationalization. The existing taper in coal freight rates for long distances requires review, so as to make freight rates on coal for such distances conform more nearly to the cost of its haulage as computed by recent cost studies. The proposed adjustments keep this objective in view.

Mr. H. C. Dasappa's Speech:

Introducing the Budget, Mr. Dasappa stated that many railway employees, who had hitherto preferred to continue under the Railway Contributory Provident Fund Scheme for retirement benefits, would now elect pension in view of the enhanced benefits in lower rated pensions sanctioned from October 1, 1963 and the improvement in the Family Pension Scheme from January 1, 1964.

With large numbers of railway staff in varying age groups coming over to pension, it was necessary for the Railways as a commercial department to even out the resultant fluctuating burden from year to year on account of pension payments. A Pension Fund was accordingly proposed to be set up, by making, an annual contribution from Revenue to the Fund on the lines of the provision made from Revenue for the Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund. An initial contribution from revenue of Rs. 19 crores will be made in 1964-65, part of which will be found by reducing the provision for Government contribution to Provident Fund, since the number of non-pensionable staff, hitherto under the Railway Provident Fund Scheme of retirement benefits, will correspondingly decrease. The net additional cost on account of the Pension Fund in 1964-65 will be Rs. 15 crores.

The proposal of the Government to raise the present 4.50 per cent interest (dividend) rate to 5.75 per cent on capital made available to the Railways after March 31, 1964, would mean additional resources to General Exchequer of a little over Rs. 1.5 crores in 1964-65 and nearly Rs. 5 crores in 1965-66 assuming the same capital outlay in 1965-66 as in 1964-65.

The aggregate of these additional commitments in 1964-65 would be of the order of Rs. 22 crores, made up of a sum of Rs. 20.5 crores under staff including the net requirements of the Pension Fund and the effect of the increased dearness allowance and city compensatory and house rent allowances and a sum of Rs. 1.5 crores as additional dividend to General Revenues. The expenditure chargeable to the Development Fund, which is a fund fed solely from the annual surpluses, was also mounting steadily with the persistent demand for more facilities for the steadily increasing passenger traffic, welfare measures, including housing, for the increasing number of railway employees, etc. An annual average surplus of about Rs. 19 crores in the Second Plan had been found insufficient, and the Railways had been obliged to borrow from the General Revenues in the Second Plan period for financing works chargeable to Development Fund. It was essential not only to have enough surplus for the purposes of the Railway Development Fund but also to earn increased surplus proportionately with the increasing investments so that a reasonable return on the capital is maintained. "It follows, therefore, that means should be found to raise sufficient additional commitments." The marginal adjustments in freight rates have been proposed keeping the requirements in view. The increase in freight rates recommended by the Railway Freight Structure Enquiry Committee in 1957 had been effected only in stages, reaching the average increase of about 13 per cent recommended by the Committee only on July 1, 1962. The five per cent supplementary charge imposed thereafter, on April 1, 1963, together with the proposed further two per cent, he pointed out, had to be viewed in relation to 33.5 per cent increase in the per capita cost of staff and in the price of coal since 1957.

Export ore will be exempt from the proposed additional surcharge. The surcharge will also not apply to the Defence and the Posts and Telegraphs traffic, which is governed by separate tariffs, nor to the Railways' own departmental traffic. Since the increase will be only two in 110, it would amount effectively to 1.8 per cent only.

The adjustments in coal freight rates will not affect about 45 per cent of the total coal traffic which moves for distances up to 500 km, though the two per cent supplementary charge will apply. Even for movement beyond 500 km and up to 2,100 km, the increase in no case will exceed Rs. 3 per tonne in the basic rate.

On the other hand, the proposed downward adjustment in the classification of certain commodities, which now bear the highest rates, will mean an appreciable reduction ranging between 3.9 and 23.5 per cent. For instance, at 500 km, the present rate of Rs. 103.10 nP for traffic in wagon loads, of acid nitric, will be reduced by Rs. 18.10 nP per tonne, the rate of Rs. 88 for safety matches by Rs. 15 per tonne and the rate of Rs. 73 for rectified spirit, furniture and confectionery by Rs. 2.90 nP per tonne. There will be corresponding reductions for traffic in smalls. The adjustment will serve, as in the case of coal, to bring the rates closer to the cost of haulage and reduce the present wide spread of rates.

The proposed two per cent increase in supplementary charge was too insignificant, he added, to affect retail prices. For instance, for a distance of 600 km, which is the approximate average lead of general merchandise, the levy will amount to about one-twentieth of a naya paisa per kg of salt, about one-twelfth of a naya paisa per kg of sugar, and about one-twenty-fifth of a naya paisa per kg of foodgrains. For commodities charged at lower classification, the increase will be even less.

Additional revenue from the two per cent general increase in the supplementary charge is estimated at Rs. 7.5 crores and from the other adjustments at Rs. 3.5 crores, making a total increase of Rs. 11 crores, which will still be only about half the estimated value of new commitments (Rs. 22 crores) in 1964-65.

Financial Results For 1962-63:

The financial results for 1962-63 reveal a net surplus of Rs. 42.56 crores as compared to the revised estimates of Rs. 23.20 crores.

The increase was almost entirely from larger traffic receipts, which came to Rs. 566.79 crores, as against the revised estimates of Rs. 549.62 crores, due particularly to a spurt in goods earnings towards the closing months of the year. Ordinary working expenses amounted to Rs. 362.63 crores, approximating closely to the revised estimate of Rs. 363.14 crores.

The present forecast of gross traffic receipts for 1963-64 is Rs. 622.23 crores, as against the Budget estimate of Rs. 599.69 crores.

The bulk of the increase is expected to accrue under passenger and goods earnings—Rs. 7.53 crores under passenger and Rs. 12.06 crores under goods. The increase in goods earnings is attributable largely to the increase in the higher rated general goods traffic, over budget anticipations of this traffic, which is expected to more than make up for demands for rail traffic in coal, export ore and raw materials for the steel plants not coming up to expectations.

The contribution to the Depreciation Fund charged to Revenue Working Expenses, will be Rs. 80 crores, the same as provided in the Budget Estimates for 1963-64. The surplus creditable to the Development Fund is now expected to be Rs. 37.75 crores, against a budgeted surplus of Rs. 31 crores, or Rs. 6.75 crores more.

Third Plan Progress:

In a review of the Railways' "fully satisfactory" performance in relation to the Third Five-Year Plan targets, Mr. Dasappa recalled that, in terms of tonne kilometres, freight traffic had nearly doubled itself in the 10-year period covered by the first two Plans, the originating tonnage increasing beyond what had been carried by the undivided Indian Railway system during the heaviest year of the Second World War.

The number of passengers increased by 310 million or by 25 per cent in the same period. The rate of growth of traffic has been further accelerating. Whereas the total increase in originating goods traffic during the Second Plan period as a whole was 40.3 million tonnes, the increase in just three years of the current Plan is estimated to be nearly 38 million tonnes. Railways expect to lift about 194 million tonnes in 1964-65. The aggregate goods traffic expected to materialise in the last year of the current Plan is now placed at about 245 million tonnes in the Mid-Plan Appraisal.

The rate of increase in suburban passenger traffic in the first two years of the Third Plan was of the order of 17 per cent. The aggregate increase in non-suburban passenger traffic during those years has been less than four per cent; it is, however, expected that in the remaining years of the Plan, the overall increase will mount up to 15 per cent provided in the Plan.

Construction Of New Lines:

In regard to the construction of new railway lines, priority has been accorded to the lines in Assam and North Bengal and the lines required for the export of iron-ore.

In the former category are the metre-gauge extension of Rangapara North-Lakhimpur line to Kurkong Selek and the extension of broad-gauge line eastwards to Jogighopa in Assam in continuation of the already opened broad-gauge line to Siliguri with a ferry across the river Ganga between Farakka and Khejuriaghat. These projects are in full swing.

Of the lines required for the export of iron-ore, the major construction from Bailadilla to Kottavalasa is progressing according to schedule. Laying of an additional BG line, alongside the existing Hospet-Guntakal metre-gauge line, is also in progress.

Out of the Third Plan lines under construction the previous year, the Virudhunagar-Manmadurai line has been opened to traffic this year up to Aruppukottai as also the Hatia-Nawagaon line. The Kalkalighat-Dharamnagar line is also expected to be opened shortly. Three major lines—the Sambalpur-Titilagarh, Bimlagarh-Kiriburu and the Robertsganj-Garhwa Road—have been opened to traffic, the first two undertaken in connexion with the movement of export ore and the third for movement of coal to the North and West. The construction of Salem-Bangalore line has made appreciable progress. To facilitate the export of iron-ore from certain areas of the Mysore State, the construction of the Hassan-Mangalore line had been included in the Third Plan. As a first step, a mixed broad-metre-gauge link to the projected port site at Panambur has been sanctioned from the present Mangalore railway station.

The handling of traffic in imported foodgrains requiring to be moved northward via Poona is likely to be facilitated by a broad-gauge rail link from the Marmagao port, connecting with the Miraj-Poona section which is currently under conversion from metre-gauge to broad-gauge. A second proposal envisages the provision of a broad-gauge, in place of the existing Hospet-Londa metre-gauge line en route Marmagao port, this proposal being dependent on the prospects of iron-ore exports in substantial quantities from the Hospet-Bellary region over and above the ore exports now going from the Goa area. Two engineering-cum-traffic surveys are in progress to examine the justification for broad-gauge lines to serve these two objectives connected with the development of Marmagao port.

Electrification And Dieselization:

In their efforts towards modernization of traction and rolling stock to handle effectively and economically their fast increasing freight and passenger traffic, the Railways have switched over from steam to diesel or electric traction on selected sections with heavy density of traffic.

The total route length electrified since commencement of the Second Plan has now risen from 388 to 1,463 route kilometres. Electrification of all the Third Plan lines is expected to be substantially completed by the end of the Plan. As a result of rephasing, adopted mainly to conserve foreign exchange, only two sections, namely, the Howrah-Kharagpur section of the South-Eastern Railway and Nandgaon-Bhusaval section of the Central Railway would be carried over to, and completed early in, the Fourth Plan.

The Indian Railways' fleet of diesel locomotives of all gauges has grown from 171 units on March 31, 1959 to 454 units at present, and of electric locomotives from 92 to 240. Over 21 per cent of the total net tonne miles of the rail traffic carried in 1962-63 was hauled by diesel and electric locomotives. The percentage has further increased in the current year and the pace of increase will be accelerated with the indigenous manufacture of diesel and electric locomotives which has been taken in hand.

Transport Performance:

In 1962-63, Railways carried 178.8 million tonnes of goods traffic, exceeding the target set for the year by nearly three million tonnes and surpassing the Railways' performance of any earlier year.

According to the present trends, the Railways expect to lift in the current year a further 15 million tonnes in the aggregate, against an estimated increase of 17 million tonnes. Due to reduced demands on rail transport, the increase under coal is now expected to be about 4.00 million tonnes against about 9.5 million tonnes anticipated earlier—a shortfall of about 5.5 million tonnes, notwithstanding the availability of both production potential and transport capacity up to the earlier forecasts. The smaller increase than earlier anticipated is now likely to be of about 0.5 million tonnes in the export ore and one million tonnes in regard to raw materials for steel plants other than coal. The slower increase in traffic in the above categories of goods is expected to be made up, to some extent, by traffic in general goods in which the increase is likely to be about 9.3 million tonnes—nearly double of what was anticipated earlier.

Budget Estimates For 1964-65:

Gross traffic receipts for 1964-65 have been estimated at Rs. 668 crores, of which Rs. 184 crores are expected to accrue from passenger traffic; Rs. 432 crores from goods earnings, including Rs. 11 crores from the proposed additional surcharge and other freight adjustments; Rs. 35 crores from "other coaching" earnings and Rs. 18 crores from "sundry" earnings.

Railways are preparing themselves to lift goods traffic aggregating 17 million tonnes more in 1964-65 than in 1963-64. This is expected to comprise seven million tonnes of more coal from Bengal and Bihar, two million tonnes more coal from the outlying coalfields, one million tonnes of other raw materials for, and finished products from, steel plants, one million tonnes of export ore and six million tonnes of general goods. It was, however, too soon to forecast confidently whether the extra traffic would, in fact, materialise to that extent, especially in coal and general goods.

The Budget estimate of ordinary working expenses for 1964-65 is Rs. 414.68 crores, which is Rs. 21.34 crores more than the revised estimate for 1963-64. The contribution to the Depreciation Reserve Fund is provided at Rs. 83 crores including the additional contribution of Rs. 10 crores approved by Parliament the previous year. Allowing for dividend payable to General Revenues at the higher rate of 5.75 per cent on the fresh capital for 1964-65 and a further payment of Rs. 12.5 crores, the usual annual payment in lieu of passenger fares for transfer to the States, the Budget surplus in 1964-65 is estimated at Rs. 30.87 crores which will be credited to the Development Fund. The estimated expenditure chargeable to this Fund in 1964-65 being Rs. 33 crores, there will be a small reduction in the closing balance of this Fund. Mr. Dasappa added that, despite significant economies through sustained measures of improved operation and by maximizing the Railways' principal assets—of which, in fact, the Railway Freight Structure Enquiry Committee had taken note in their Report of 1957 and in which there have been further substantial improvements—it was not possible to achieve the minimum surplus of the order necessary without recourse to the proposed marginal adjustments in goods freight rates.

The Budget estimate for works, machinery, plant and rolling stock, including "Open line works—revenue" for 1964-65, has been placed at Rs. 370 crores. This includes nearly Rs. 4 crores for railway user amenities.

Administrative Reforms:

Mr. Dasappa referred to the various measures which were being progressively improved over a period of years for eradication of corruption, disposal of complaints and grievances and by way of administrative reform.

He also referred to continuing measures of fuel economy and the useful work done by the Railway Protection Force.

Progress In Self-sufficiency:

There has been considerable increase in the indigenous manufacture of all kinds of railway equipment, including track materials and bridge girders.

This increase resulted in a steady decrease in the purchase of imported materials from 30.03 per cent of total railway purchases in 1961-62 to 14.27 per cent in 1962-63 and consequent saving in foreign exchange with reference to the increased value of total purchases.

The Chittaranjan Locomotive Works are now turning out W.P. locomotives for mail and express passenger trains, in addition to maintaining and even surpassing the target annual output of 168 W.G. freight locomotives. The first AC broad-gauge electric locomotive turned out from these Works was commissioned recently by the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru. Twenty-one DC broad-gauge locomotives had been turned out earlier. Capacity is now being developed for the manufacture of 72 electric locomotives per year. The steel foundry, with a capacity of 10,000 tons of castings a year, has just commenced production.

The first diesel locomotive assembled from imported components was recently commissioned by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri at the Diesel Locomotive Works, Varanasi. The factory is expected to turn out two more broad-gauge main line diesel locomotives in the current year and 26 more such locomotives and a few diesel shunters in 1964-65.

The production in the Integral Coach Factory has been diversified to include electric multiple unit coaches and metre-gauge coaches. Over 150 broad-gauge electric multiple unit trailer coaches have been completed; another 162 are expected by March, 1965. With the intensification of second shift working, the target of production (700 shells) is expected to be reached in 1964-65; all these shells are expected to be equipped with the necessary fittings in the attached 'furnishing unit', thus releasing capacity in other shops, hitherto doing the 'furnishing', for their increased repair and other load.

Railways' Report:

The originating passenger traffic on the Railways during 1962-63 numbered 1,770 million and the passenger kilometres totalled 8,449 million, registering increases of 3.38 per cent and 2.68 per cent, respectively, over the previous year.

The suburban passenger traffic in terms of passengers originating showed an increase of 5.73 per cent as against an increase of 1.41 per cent under non-suburban traffic.

The originating freight traffic during the period touched a new peak of 178.8 million tonnes and surpassed all previous records of increase.

The gross traffic receipts of the Railways was Rs. 566.79 crores—Rs. 169.19 crores from passenger traffic, Rs. 349.52 crores from goods traffic and Rs. 48.08 crores from parcel luggage and other sources of revenue. C. Gen. Ne Win's Visit: The Chairman of the Burmese Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, arrived in New Delhi on February 8 by special plane on a day's visit.

Gen. Ne Win, who was accompanied by Madame Ne Win, was received at the airport by the Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Minister without Portfolio, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, the Finance Minister, Service chiefs and senior officials of the External Affairs Ministry.

Gen. Ne Win's party of 10 included four officers of the Burmese Government. They were Lt-Col. Ko Ko, Cabinet Secretary, U Soe Tin, Permanent Secretary, Foreign Office, Lt.-Col. Chit Khin, General Staff Officer, and U Ba Chit, Chief of Division, Foreign Office.

Their presence lent support to the expectation that Gen. Ne Win would take the opportunity to exchange views on the Sino-Indian border dispute during his talks with Indian leaders.

Gen. Ne Win called on the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru and was with him for an hour. No one else was present at the talks between the two leaders.

According to official circles, Gen. Ne Win came to India on "a brief informal and personal visit to see Mr. Nehru and inquire about his health."

Declining to meet correspondents on his arrival at Palam, he said: "I am on a purely personal visit to pay my respects to the Prime Minister. I have nothing to say to the Press."

Before meeting Mr. Nehru, he called on the Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain and was with him for 25 minutes. Three Burmese and two Indian officials were present at the talks.

Burma, which has a long border with China, has made no secret of her anxiety to maintain good relations with both her big neighbours—India and China. It is not unlikely, therefore, that the border question figured during the Burmese leader's talks with Mr. Nehru and Dr. Zakir Hussain.

While the precise nature of talks on China "as a matter of mutual interest" was not known, it was officially stated that General Ne Win did not bring any specific suggestion of his own or from China on the Sino-Indian border dispute. Nor was he requested to convey anything on the issue to China.

On the non-aligned countries' conference the talks presumably were a follow-up of what the Deputy Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh had discussed in Cairo and Belgrade during his recent tour. Official sources declined to say anything about Burma's reaction to the proposal as it is emerging.

General Ne Win was given a warm send-off on February 9 by the Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, the Service Chiefs and senior officials of the Government.

On his way to the airport, Gen. Ne Win, accompanied by Madame Ne Win, paid a brief visit to Mr. Nehru to say good-bye. Mr. Nehru was then attending a meeting of the Congress Parliamentary Party.

The Foreign Secretary, Mr. Y. D. Gundevia expressed to correspondents the Government's appreciation of Gen. Ne Win's "great gesture" in coming to see Mr. Nehru. "We are grateful," he said.

The General, he disclosed, would pay a State visit to India some time.

D. Mr. R. McNamara Advocates Speedy Arms Aid To India: Testifying on the US Defence Department's budget estimates before the House Armed Services Committee on January 27, the US Defence Secretary, Mr. Robert McNamara, said it was in the US interest to improve the quality of India's defence against the Chinese communist threat.

He expressed the hope that Britain and other Commonwealth countries would continue to help in the build-up of Indian military forces.

He said that although there was continued danger that the Chinese might repeat their performance of 1962 and attack India, "we do not anticipate a new out-break of fighting in the immediate future." "We should, however, anticipate increased Chinese political activity throughout the sub-continent.

"Indeed, examples of this are already in evidence as the Chinese increase the tempo of their political relations with all countries neighbouring India, particularly Pakistan, where they are trying to drive a wedge between that country and the US."

It was also quite possible that the Chinese would attempt to exploit "anti-national feelings among India's dissident northern tribesmen," he said, presumably referring to Naga hostiles.

He said that while the fighting had stopped, the Indian military forces remained in need of considerable help in almost all areas, notwithstanding the aid already furnished by USA and Commonwealth countries.

"We see a very real need for India to improve the quality of its defences against the Chinese communist threat, and we believe it is in our own nation's interest to assist them," he said. "We hope the UK and other Commonwealth countries will continue to do like-wise.

"Over the next few years, we plan to continue to assist India in improving its communications net-work, continue support of the air transport capability, and, if requested, provide both army and air force training. We are also considering modest defence production assistance, although we have not completed our studies in this field as yet.

"Our military assistance to India has deeply troubled Pakistan, as you are well aware. Nevertheless, it is important to the entire free world, including Pakistan, that India should be able to defend itself against Chinese communist aggression.

"The US has taken great pains to assure the Government of Pakistan that our aid to India will not be at the expense of Pakistan's security, to which we are committed under our mutual defence agreements. Gen. Taylor (Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff), during his recent visit, again endeavoured to re-assure Pakistan of our continued interest in, and support of, its national integrity.

"The Chinese Communists also pose a grave threat to Nepal and could easily overrun that country with their forces now in Tibet. More probably, in our opinion, the Chinese Communists' aim is to infiltrate and subvert Nepal. They have provided the Nepalese both economic and military assistance, including arms and ammunition.

"We recognize the desirability of Nepal having an internal security capability, which we estimate can be achieved with their existing army, provided it receives at least a small amount of external assistance."

J. Increase In Dearness Allowance Of Central Government Employees: The Central Government announced in New Delhi on February 7 an increase of Rs. 2 to Rs. 10 in the dearness allowance of its employees drawing a monthly salary up to Rs. 399.

The measure will give "extra relief" to two million civilian employees and cost the Government about Rs. 8.75 crores annually, according to an official Press Note.

The increased allowance will be given to employees with retrospective effect from July 1, 1963.

The number of pay slabs over which the dearness allowance is regulated has also been increased from three to five. The smaller pay slabs would ensure roughly the same proportionate benefit to a larger number of employees.

The new rates of dearness allowance will be Rs. 17 for pay up to Rs. 109 (an increase of Rs. 2); Rs. 20 for pay in the slab Rs. 110—149 (an increase of Rs. 5); Rs. 35 for the slab Rs. 150—209 (an increase of Rs. 5); Rs. 40 for Rs. 210—299 (an increase of Rs. 10) and Rs. 20 for Rs. 321—380 (an increase of Rs. 10).

Marginal adjustments will be made for the slabs Rs. 300—320 and Rs. 381—399.

In terms of the Pay Commission's recommendations accepted by the Government, the rates of dearness allowance were to be reviewed if, during a period of 12 months, the consumer price index remained, on an average, 10 points above 125. Such a position had not been reached yet, but the Government had decided to allow these ad hoc increases as "a measure of extra relief".

K. Opposition Parties' Agreement On Electoral Adjustments In States: The Jan Sangh, Socialist and Swatantra Parties have agreed in principle to electoral adjustments in the States to avoid multiple contests, according to Mr. A. B. Vajpayee, leader of the Jan Sangh Party in Parliament.

Mr. Vajpayee told newsmen in New Delhi on February 7 that he had recently discussed the issue with Mr. Badri Vishal Pitti, chairman of the Central Parliamentary Board of the Socialist Party in Hyderabad, and that "complete agreement" had been reached. Though the Swatantra Party had also agreed to an electoral adjustment in principle, details had still to be worked out. The three parties had agreed to work jointly on specific issues both in and outside legislatures.

The Jan Sangh was also exploring the possibility of a merger with the Swatantra though the two parties were not agreed on such vital issues as foreign policy, economic matters and language.

The party, he said, would now press the Swatantra to join in a united non-Communist opposition in Parliament. The proposal had been made some time earlier, but the Swatantra Party had then rejected the idea saying that the Sangh should consider merging with the Swatantra.

Socialist Party's Merger Offer To P-SP:

The leader of the Socialist Party, Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia, said in Lucknow on February 7 that his Party had made an offer to the P-SP for a merger without conditions.

It would be for the new party to decide its future policy and programme, he said, implying that no further clarification were needed.

He made his statement when his attention was drawn to a report from P-SP circles in New Delhi indicating some apprehension in the minds of the leaders of that party.

Dr. Lohia also indicated that he himself might not join the new party immediately after the merger, if it came about. Every one on either side would be free to either join the new party or stay out. He would rather wait till the new party had evolved a policy of its own and outlined its programme.

L. Expansion In Ship-building Industry: The Central Minister for Shipping and Transport, Mr. Raj Bahadur, said in Calcutta on February 10 that the rate of expansion in ship-building in the Third Five-Year Plan had been three times that of the previous two Plans.

He was inaugurating the fifth annual conference on shipping and ship-building.

Referring to the position individually in respect of principal types of ships, he said that a good beginning had been made so far as tankers, bulk carriers, liner vessels and coastal ships were concerned.

He pointed out that in the field of ship-building, indigenous capacity was still very limited. He asserted, however, that the question of establishing a second ship-yard at Cochin was being actively pursued and when that yard went into operation it would add substantially to the ship-building capacity of the country.

He complimented the enterprise of the shipowners for the spectacular expansion in tonnage. He said that quite a large volume had been added by shipowners without asking for any rupee loan from the Government. In some cases, the foreign exchange was found from the foreign assets of Indian shipowners.

He said in the coastal sector the acquisition of ships had been presenting special difficulties since these ships did not earn foreign exchange. Even so, by adopting various financing devices, the industry had been able to add 45 second-hand ships of about 212,000 GRT. to the coastal fleet which now consisted of 119 ships of 433,000 GRT.

Referring to the principal types of ships in India, he said that at the beginning of the Third Plan, India had no overseas tankers even though she imported about 7.5 million tons of crude oil per year. However, a beginning was made with a good second-hand tanker in 1961 and since then three new tankers had been ordered in Japan and two of these would be delivered in the next two to three months. In addition, one more tanker had been approved for construction in Japan and it was hoped that the transaction would be finalised soon. Similarly, in the case of bulk carriers, of which India had none till 1962, six built in Japan had been delivered and now another bulk carrier, under construction in West Germany, was expected to be ready by the end of this year or early in 1965. "Our overseas fleet now consists of 101 vessels of about 8,71,000 GRT. nearly 81 per cent of which comprises ships less than 10 years in age. This means that it is a reasonably modern fleet."

He said that in the coastal sector, acquisition of ships had been presenting special difficulties since these ships did not earn foreign exchange. Even so, by adopting various financial devices, India had been able to add 45 second-hand ships to her coastal fleet which now consisted of 119 ships of 4,33,000 GRT. Although this tonnage was quite impressive, a major portion of it was more than 15 years old and would require replacement soon. However, the Government had just sanctioned the construction of four new coastal ships in Yugoslavia for the carriage of coal which was the mainstay of the coastal trade. Further efforts were also being made to order some more ships for the coal trade.

Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, who presided over the conference, said that Indian shipping had developed in different directions and more rapidly than had been contemplated. It was a welcome sign that the Indian Navy and the shipping interests had been participating in this conference which was attended by technical experts from India and abroad.

He said it was very necessary to have a research association in the country like that of the UK for the development of shipping and ship-building. The Indian Council of Scientific Research should offer a grant for this purpose.

He suggested that more Indian delegates should attend international shipping and ship-building conferences so that India might know the latest techniques of building modern ships. More delegates from abroad should also participate in such conferences held in India.

nounced that an industrial development corporation, with an authorised capital of Rs. 1 crore, would be set up to promote industries in the public and the private sectors.

He also stressed the need for stepping up agricultural production.

Though the prices of foodgrains still remained on the high side, the rice crop yield in 1963 was better than in the previous year.

He pointed out that while making every effort to bring down prices the interests of producers would have to be safeguarded.

He announced that the package programme for rice cultivation would be extended further in the Chhatisgarh area.

About the dacoit menace, he said that the problem was essentially confined to the northern districts. Outlaws were being dealt with firmly. The incidence of crime had decreased.

Of the total outlay of Rs. 300 crores for the State's Third Plan, Rs. 143 crores had already been spent.

The State had already achieved Third Plan targets in respect of middle and higher secondary education. Progress in the sphere of technical education had been phenomenal. There had been a setback in the sphere of free and compulsory education owing to paucity of funds.

O. Governor's Address To West Bengal Legislature: In a brief speech to a joint session of the West Bengal Legislature on February 10, the Governor, Miss Padmaja Naidu, deplored "the unfortunate attacks on members of the minority community in the State as a reaction to the grim happenings across our borders."

She emphasized that it was only by remaining "steadfast to the ideals of a secular State that we can uphold the noble traditions of India".

Referring to the achievements of the State Government, she expressed the hope that food supplies would be adequate during the year.

Referring to the Government's policy on rice and paddy prices, she invited the co-operation of all sections of the people. Prices had been fixed under the State Anti-profiteering Act and the Central Government had been asked to fix prices under the Essential Commodities Act.

She claimed that the Government had given the highest priority to agriculture because "our goal is to increase production of food to the maximum extent."

Referring to the State's Third Plan achievements, she said she was "confident that not only will the target of Rs. 293 crores be fulfilled but our actual outlay may reach Rs. 320 crores".

The State Government was trying continuously to solve the problem of rehabilitation of refugees. The Central Government had adopted a policy of settling new migrants from East Pakistan in Dandakaranya.

Immediately after Miss Naidu's address, all members belonging to the FB and P-SP stood up to express their regret that the Governor's address did not contain any mention of specific measures for the effective rehabilitation of new migrants from East Pakistan.

Mr. Hemanta Basu, the FB leader, said he was sorry that the Governor did not mention anything on such vital issues as the need for planned evacuation of the minorities from East Pakistan, payment of compensation to new migrants and the expulsion of Pakistani nationals from India.

All Opposition members stood in silence when Dr. Kamal Bhattacharya (FB) referred to the death of a student, Mr. Bhudev Sen, in a police firing in Calcutta. They demanded an immediate inquiry into the circumstances of his death.

INDONESIA

A. Control Of British Enterprises: It was officially announced after a Cabinet meeting in Djakarta on February 2 that the Government had decided to take immediate steps to control all British commercial enterprises which workers had attempted to take over in January (see page 5669).

[The workers tried to take over control in protest against the detention of two Indonesian vessels in Hong Kong. The Hong Kong Supreme Court on February 1 released one of these ships, the 10,952-ton Ambulombo. Both had been detained by a court order in connexion with claims against them by a Dutch bank and an engineering firm in Singapore. Lawyers representing the bank said a settlement had been reached regarding Ambulombo.]

It was not immediately clear which firms were affected by the new announcement. On January 18 Indonesian trade unionists attempted to take over the headquarters of the Shell oil company in Djakarta and the P. and T. Lands tea and rubber estates in West Java. On January 20, similar "take-over" actions were attempted on other British firms, including Unilever, in Djakarta.

Indonesian Government mediators ruled on the following day that the British managements should retain authority in these firms and told the trade unionists that their actions were illegal.

The Governor of West Java told P. and T. estate workers in the Subang area on January 30 that the plantations would be nationalized in "the near future", according to the Indonesian news agency.

The news agency said that the order for the supervision of the British enterprises was issued after a meeting of the committee of 13 which President Sukarno had appointed to oversee Indonesia's economic and monetary measures. The order amounts to at least a partial reversal of Government policy.

The Government, after some initial hesitation, moved firmly against the take-over attempts, but the Communist Party continued to agitate for take-overs even after President Sukarno had ordered the civil and military authorities to prevent illegal action by the workers.

Business circles said that although the supervisory order was far short of the expropriation demanded by the communists, it nevertheless represented a victory for the Left.

The order mentioned only firms subjected to seizure attempts, but did not specifically exclude others. The order said that the Ministries which were ordered to take immediate steps for supervision were also to take measures to assure continuity of production.

B. Gen. A. H. Nasution's Foreign Tour: On his return from visits to USSR, USA, Yugoslavia, France, Turkey, the Philippines and Thailand, the Defence Minister, Gen. Abdul Harris Nasution, issued a statement on December 24, 1963 giving his impressions of the tour.

He said that he had succeeded in thwarting an attempt by Britain to impose an arms embargo on Indonesia.

He said that he had fulfilled "a number of our military needs" and explained Indonesia's opposition to Malaysia.

He had signed an Arms Agreement in Moscow and "colonialist equipment" previously supplied to the Armed Forces would be replaced by Russian arms.

He said: "In the countries we visited we explained that Indonesia has no territorial claims anywhere but will keep supporting North Borneo and other struggling nations anywhere to drive out the colonialists.

"We will always be prepared to train their soldiers and we will not stop our young men from joining them.

"We shall not commit aggression or war but if we are attacked we will be ready to retaliate.

"The British have been trying in some countries to impose an embargo on arms and spare parts for our Armed Forces.

"Their attempts have failed in the countries we visited because these countries will continue to honour their contracts with us.

"All the military equipment that used to be supplied by the colonialist countries has been replaced with new equipment as stated in the Indonesian-Soviet Arms Agreement signed in Moscow."

He said the French Government had decided to remain neutral in Indonesia's quarrel with Malaysia.

He said he had not concluded any new agreement in Paris for arms supplies, but stressed that France would implement the defence contracts signed previously. He did not explain what these contracts were, but it was understood to be concerning expansion and construction of naval and air bases.

In USA, he said, he had explained Indonesia's struggle against Malaysia to the American leaders. He said that President Lyndon Johnson felt that Asians themselves should find solutions for problems confronting them.

ISRAEL

A. Histadrut Approves New Wage Policy: The Executive Council of the Histadrut—the Israeli General Federation of Labour—adopted on January 26 its wage policy for 1964 and 1965.

The decisions are binding on all constituent trade unions, and will be the basis for the renewal of the collective contracts with the employers, which expired on December 31, 1963.

Mr. Yeruham Meshel, head of the Federation's Trade Union Department, stated that the new policy aimed at continuing economic stability, full employment, and the maintenance of living standards, while linking wage rises to the net increase in the national output.

The Secretary-General, Mr. Aharon Becker, said that the policy offered "the absolute minimum for the worker and the maximum feasible for the economy."

The policy adopted calls for:

(1) A three per cent basic wage rise in 1964, and another three per cent increase in 1965, in keeping with the expected growth of the national output, as estimated by an impartial body of experts, which was recently set up for the purpose.

(2) The payment of an additional cost-of-living allowance at the rate of 4.7 per cent of basic pay as of January 15. The allowance will be paid on wages up to I£700 a month, instead of I£500 as before.

(3) The payment of a family allowance of I£6 for each of the first three children—allowances for the fourth and subsequent children are paid through the National Insurance Institute.

The Horowitz Committee report on the reform of Civil Service salaries will be implemented after job analysis has been carried out.

The Government, local authorities and public concerns will be called upon to refrain from any increase in present tax and price levels.

LAOS

A. Complaints Of Cease-fire Violations: Despite the announcement of an accord between the neutralist and Pathet Lao factions in January (see page 5658) both sides continued to complain of cease-fire violations and, on February 1, a report said the International Truce Supervisory Commission (ITSC) had unanimously agreed to investigate the complaints.

In Washington on February 4, the State Department reported that Communist pressure was continuing on neutralist troops in central Laos and that the Commission investigators needed transportation facilities before they could inspect the fighting area.

Pathet Lao troops, according to the State Department, were being supported by North Viet-Namese.

If the Pathet Lao succeed in their objectives, it would cut a line across central Laos from North Viet-Nam to the Mekong river border with Thailand and provide uninterrupted access to routes 8 and 12, two important high-ways.

The State Department Press Officer, Mr. Robert J. McCloskey, said that on January 31 the ITSC, composed of representatives of India, Canada and Poland, had informed the Government of Laos that it was prepared to conduct an investigation of the violations of the Cease-fire Agreement in the Makay-Nomarath area in central Laos.

The request for the investigation had come earlier from the Premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma.

"For the past several weeks the Pathet Lao have been attacking the neutralist and conservative forces in this area," Mr. McCloskey said, "and according to the Prime Minister and other Laotian officials, North Viet-Namese are supporting the Pathet Lao."

Though there had been a violation of the Geneva accords, which guaranteed the neutrality of Laos, he said, USA would not send back its military advisers to the fighting area. Rather, an effort would be made to see that North Viet-Nam and other parties to the Agreement lived up to their commitments.

Recent Developments:

Earlier, on December 11, 1963, a unanimous report was published by the three members of the International Commission on an incident which occurred in Vientiane on September 9, 1963. This and other recent developments are summarized below.

During September, 1963, the British and Soviet Governments, as co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference, were unable to agree on the text of messages to be sent to the conflicting political parties and to the International Control Commission in Laos on the subject of an incident involving the death of a Pathet Lao guard which had taken place in Vientiane on September 9. In particular, Britain objected to the presence, in a draft Soviet message, of a complaint from the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, laying the blame for the incident entirely on the United States.

During September and October, 1963, Prince Souvanna Phouma visited USA, Britain and the Soviet Union (see page 5456). During the Prince's absence from Laos, there was an uneasy lull in political activity in the country, with the Pathet Lao continuing to boycott Cabinet meetings unless its terms for a truce were accepted. In London on October 17, the Prince explained the need for agreement between the two co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference, the necessity of establishing a homogeneous International Commission and the desirability of establishing a unified administration in Laos. In Moscow, on October 30 he again emphasized the responsibility of the Soviet Union and Britain in enforcing the truce between the three contending factions.

In the Plain of Jars sporadic fighting had continued and became particularly serious in the first two weeks of November. On November 17 General Kong Lae, the neutralist leader, and General Singkapo Chounramany, a Pathet Lao leader, met at Xieng Khouang airstrip in the presence of representatives of the Geneva Conference on Laos, and agreed to proclaim a cease-fire. However, within 20 hours of the cease-fire meeting, renewed firing broke out between the neutralist and Pathet Lao forces, each accusing the other of breaking the agreement. Although both sides said they were trying to create conditions conducive to a meeting between Prince Souvanna Phouma and Prince Souphanouvong, neither party could agree on the form of such conditions. At the beginning of December the neutralists were expressing unwillingness to resume discussions with the Pathet Lao, who, they alleged, were merely using negotiations as a cloak for making further inroads into neutralist territory whilst themselves putting all the blame for the fighting on the forces of the Right-wing Defence Minister, General Phoumi Nosavan.

On December 11, 1963, the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference on Laos published the first unanimous report drawn up by the three members of the International Control Commission.

The report, dated November 6 was the result of the Commission's investigation of the incident of September 9 in Vientiane. The report deplored the incident which it said "caused a further deterioration in the serious and unsettled situation which exists in Laos". It further called upon the leaders of the various factions to resume negotiations and to build up a neutral and independent country.

On December 16, 1963, Prince Souvanna Phouma declared that only Soviet influence on North Viet-Nam could bring a halt to civil war. While admitting that the Soviet Government had probably made an effort to persuade North Viet-Nam to restrain the Pathet Lao, he did not think the representation could have been taken seriously. He feared that, since Hanoi had sided with Peking in the Sino-Russian ideological dispute, Soviet influence on Hanoi could not be wholly effective.

Prince Souvanna Phouma revealed that he had been in contact with the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, to whom he had proposed the provisional transfer of the Government from Vientiane to the Royal town of Luang Prabang, which should be policed by a joint force of neutralists, Pathet Lao and Rightists. A coalition Government of the three parties in the dispute might under such circumstances be re-established in the Royal Capital. Prince Souvanna Phouma indicated that Prince Souphanouvong had agreed to discuss these proposals.

Thirty of the proposals had come from Australia. The others were from Hong Kong, Japan, Formosa, Britain, Italy, West Germany and USA.

The industries under discussion included the manufacturing of textiles, pharmaceutical goods, chemicals, electrical appliances, iron and steel building materials and automobile spare parts.

A. Government's Policy Statement: The new Prime Minister, Gen. Thanom Kittikachorn, outlined to the Constituent Assembly in the third week of December, 1963 a five-point policy which his Government would follow.

The highlights of the policy statement were:

Economic Policy: Thailand would bring up-to-date through careful planning its own capacity and would improve all national resources to the maximum benefit of the nation.

Finance: Thailand would maintain the continued stability of its currency and will increase the national income through greater productivity rather than through heavier taxation.

Industry: The Government would give support to industrial projects and economic vocational training.

Security: The Government would bring about greater efficiency within the administration, particularly the Police Department.

Foreign Relations: The Government would observe its treaty obligations and maintain the objectives of the UN Charter and the common ideals of S-EATO (South-East Asia Treaty Organization). It would promote friendly relations with other nations through peace based on justice, truth and freedom of the Thai nation. More emphasis would be laid on friendly relations with South-East Asian countries.

Later, speaking to newsmen, he said that he would ask all his Cabinet colleagues to sever their connexions with business firms and not to acquire any commercial interests.

He said he wanted a "free trade"—that is, business and commerce should be carried out by private individuals without official involvement.

B. British Aid For Airfield Project: The British Government announced on December 18, 1963 that to improve certain logistic facilities in Thailand, the Thai Government had accepted an offer by the British Government, as its ally in S-EATO, to construct an airfield near Mukdaharn in north-east Thailand.

The work would be undertaken by units of the British forces in co-operation with the Thai Government and would start shortly.

The purpose of construction, it was emphasized, was purely defensive, for the purpose of giving assistance to a S-EATO ally. On completion the airport would be handed over to Thailand. It was anticipated that it would take about a year to construct and about 400 British Army and Royal Air Force technicians from various units, including the Royal Engineers, the Royal Army Service Corps and the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers, would participate in the project.

The new airport will consist of a landing strip and parking areas for transport aircraft. Besides its defensive purpose, it will have a civil value in improving air communication.

TURKEY

A. Progress Of Five-Year Plan: The Supreme Planning Council, which meets at approximately quarterly intervals to discuss progress under the Five-Year Plan, met in Ankara on January 16.

The report for the first nine months of 1963 showed that the rise in the gross national product appeared to have exceeded 5 per cent while the target set in the Plan for this period was 7 per cent. Industrial production showed a marked rise over 1962 in a number of fields, notably in the output of crude oil which increased by 26 per cent; petroleum products by 41 per cent; iron and pig-iron by 50 per cent; cement by 18 per cent; paper by 12 per cent and chemical fertilizers by 133 per cent.

The foreign trade deficit, which had reached $250 million by the end of September, 1963 and the increased pressure upon financial reserves caused by the rising volume of investments had an adverse effect upon the Central Bank gold and foreign exchange reserves and upon banking in general. In the first 7 months of the year 53.5 per cent of the year's planned investments had been carried out. The report tentatively estimated that by the end of 1963 85 per cent of the planned investments would have been implemented. During the first 7 months the percentages of investments actually carried out in the different sectors were: mining 61 per cent, manufacturing industries 62 per cent, power 53.5 per cent, communications 62 per cent, tourism 66 per cent, housing 58 per cent, education 60 per cent and health 25 per cent.

The report noted that the full implementation of the Plan was hampered by a number of obstacles, mentioning delays in the preparation and contracting of projects which arose partly from a failure to amend the Adjudications Law, and other relevant laws. Other causes were insufficient inter-departmental co-ordination, external financing difficulties, overstaffing and delays in Government action over taxation changes, land reform and the reorganization of State enterprises.

A. New Power Station Opened: The first part of North Viet-Nam's biggest thermo-power station in the Uong-Bi Vang Banh coal area of Quang Ninh province was commissioned on January 18.

Top Government leaders, including the Premier, Mr. Pham Van Dong, the Minister for Heavy Industry, Mr. Nguyen Van Tran, the Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Suren Tovmasyan, and several other diplomats were among those present at a special ceremony to mark the commissioning of the project undertaken with Russian assistance.

Mr. Nguyen Van Tran thanked the Soviet Union for its assistance and congratulated Viet-Namese workers and Soviet experts on their achievements.

Mr. Tovmasyan described the project as a "concrete proof of the fraternal co-operation and unshakable friendship between the Soviet and Viet-Namese peoples."

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Gen. Khanh Assumes Power In Bloodless "Coup": Gen. Nguyen Khanh, an Army Corps Commander aged 37, assumed power on January 30 in a bloodless coup d'etat.

He explained that his coup was aimed at forestalling a neutralist plot.

According to him, the plot was backed by France, and it implicated several leading members of the military junta which took power after last November's coup.

In a broadcast to the nation, Gen. Khanh said: "A number of persons, wanting to preserve their own private interests, did not hesitate to ally with the colonialists standing for neutralism, in order to pave the way for the Communists to enslave us."

Although troops seized control of Saigon before dawn on January 30 and arrested several members of the old military junta, the city remained almost unaffected and it was not until late afternoon that the people had a clear idea of what had happened.

Gen. Khanh's assumption of power came after a breakdown in talks lasting several hours with the chairman of the old junta, Maj-Gen. Duong Van Minh.

[It will be recalled that on November 1, 1963 "a committee of Generals", as the ruling military clique styled itself, took control of South Viet-Nam in a lightning coup. The armed forces overthrew President Diem and dismissed his Government. Maj.-Gen. Duong Van Minh, the military assistant to Mr. Diem and leader of the coup announced that the "Council of Revolutionary Generals" would govern the country. The Constitution was suspended and the National Assembly dismissed. President Ngo Dinh Diem and his brother Mr. Ngo Dinh Nhu committed suicide after a vain bid to escape from custody.]

On January 31, General Khanh told newsmen that the Government of Mr. Nguyen Ngoc Tho, the Prime Minister, had resigned.

He said that he would try to form a Government of National Union in which all political parties would "take a share in the struggle against the communists".

He said that President de Gaulle was "interfering blatantly in Viet-Namese affairs. We are determined to stand against this policy."

He complained that since the November coup there had "not been any definite plan against neutralism as propounded by the colonialists and Communists."

He said that "as far as I know, the four leading Generals arrested yesterday were still alive." "They will receive a fair trial and treatment."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

He described the coup as "an internal purge within the Military Revolutionary Council", and added: "Not one shot was fired, and there was no bloodshed."

He said Gen. Duong Van Minh had "accepted a position as adviser to the Military Revolutionary Council."

In an Order of the Day published by the official Viet-Nam News Agency Gen. Khanh, speaking as "Chairman of the Military Revolutionary Council and Supreme Commander of the Republic of the Viet-Nam armed forces," said: "Complete destruction is threatening the nation." He appealed to the forces to "remain vigilant."

Saigon was generally quiet, but there was a small demonstration near the Central Market asking the new regime to protect the rights of workers.

The Viet-Nam Press news agency reported that Gen. Mau Huu Xuan, Mayor of Saigon and Director of the National Police, had been replaced by Col. Zuong Ngoc Lam, commander of the Home Guards.

Speaking at Ben Cat, 30 miles from Saigon on February 2, Gen. Khanh explained to soldiers why the former junta had been ousted.

He said that certain generals were "going to nightclubs while we—you and I—were suffering in the field."

He added that some indulged in graft and corruption, and former leaders "were incapable of leading".

His 15-minute speech was punctuated by salvoes from heavy artillery only a few yards away supporting an anti-guerrilla operation.

Replying to newsmen he said that any decision to break diplomatic relations with France would depend on President de Gaulle's future statements and actions.

American Support:

Addressing a news conference in Washington on February 2, President L. B. Johnson re-iterated American support to the new regime in Viet-Nam.

He announced that what he called the "new and friendly leaders" in Viet-Nam had assured him they were immediately quickening the pace of military operations.

He read a letter which he had sent to General Khanh saying: "We shall continue to be available to help you to carry the war to the enemy and to increase the confidence of the Viet-Namese people in their Government."

It was when he was asked to look at the problem in the long term and to discuss General de Gaulle's proposals that President Johnson startled some of his listeners by saying: "If we could have neutralization of both North Viet-Nam and South Viet-Nam I am sure that would be considered sympathetically, but I see no indication of that at the moment. I think if we could expect the Viet-cong (the communists) to let their neighbours live in peace we could take a much different attitude."

He added that the present course was the only one so long as the attempt to envelop South Viet-Nam continued and he saw no sentiment in favour of neutralizing South Viet-Nam.

After expressing his opposition to General de Gaulle's position, which he felt to be against the interests of freedom, he made it clear that he interpreted the French proposal as favouring neutralization of South Viet-Nam only.

Officials explained later that although General de Gaulle had referred to neutralizing South-East Asia as a whole, they believed that the effect would be felt primarily in South Viet-Nam, because the communists showed no disposition to neutralize North Viet-Nam.

B. UN Fact-finding Mission's Report: The UN Assembly's Fact-finding Committee on allegations of persecution of Buddhists in South Viet-Nam published on December 11, 1963 a 254-page report on its mission (see pages 5566 and 5590).

It omitted any conclusions on conditions in the country.

The seven-man Committee arrived in Saigon on October 24, 1963 and left on November 3, 1963—the day after the Government of President Diem was overthrown.

The Committee was appointed after 16 countries had demanded full debate on violation of human rights in South Viet-Nam. The debate was postponed when the Diem Government invited UN to send a fact-finding mission.

With the overthrow of the Diem Government, the Buddhist crisis subsided.

The report gave details of co-operation by the Government and Buddhist authorities with the investigators in their determination of evidence, but offered no opinion on whether the Diem Government had actually violated the human rights of Buddhists.

C. American Support In War Against Viet-cong: President L. B. Johnson on January 1 supported the internal position of the military junta in Viet-Nam (RVN) with a renewed pledge of the full support necessary to help the Government achieve victory over the communist guerrillas.

"The United States will continue to furnish you and your people with the fullest measure of support in this bitter fight", Mr. Johnson wrote to Major-General Duong Van Minh, then Chairman of the Revolutionary Council. "We shall maintain in Viet-Nam American personnel and material as needed to assist you in achieving victory."

By implication, the message revised the previous target date for withdrawing the bulk of the United States forces from Viet-Nam by the end of 1965. Because of the critical turn of the war in recent months, American officials no longer consider such a date realistic.

President Johnson's message unequivocally rejected a neutralist solution for South Viet-Nam. "As long as the communist regime in North Viet-Nam persists in its aggressive policy, neutralization of South Viet-Nam would only be another name for a communist take-over."

His message to Major-General Minh came at a critical juncture of the war, when Government forces are trying to regain the initiative from the guerrillas, who have scored alarming gains in the Mekong Delta south of Saigon. In addition, neutralist sentiment has been gaining currency in some political and intellectual circles in Saigon.

Mr. Johnson's letter also contained an indirect plea for a greater effort by Major-General Minh and the Viet-Nam leadership to rally popular support for the anti-communist campaign.

After praising the new Government's efforts to bring once dissident religious sects, such as the Cao Dai and the Hoa Hao, under one anti-communist banner, Mr. Johnson observed: "I know from my own experience in Viet-Nam how warmly the Viet-Namese people respond to a direct human approach and how they have hungered for this in their leaders."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. International Agreement To Renounce Use Of Force—Mr. N. Khruschev's Letter To Heads Of States And Governments: The Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. N. Khruschev, on January 3 called for a fresh wind to soften the international climate and proposed an international agreement renouncing the use of force in settling territorial or border disputes.

The proposal was contained in a message addressed to Heads of States and Governments, including Mr. J. Nehru of India, President Lyndon Johnson of USA and Sir Alec Douglas-Home, Prime Minister of Britain.

Mr. Khruschev said that such an agreement would "sweep away much in international life that has been artificially contrived and is an obstacle to the relaxation of tension in the world and to the consolidation of peace".

He said it would considerably soften the international climate "and provide a good foundation for the growth of trust between States".

He also referred to recent exchanges of opinion between Governments on other measures to ease international tension, and said that "agreement on such measures will naturally have a positive effect on the international situation".

He added: "The Soviet Government proceeds from the assumption that the search for agreements on ripe international questions will be continued."

The message said that the international agreement should contain four main provisions:

(1) A solemn undertaking by the parties not to resort to force to alter existing State frontiers.

(2) Acknowledgement that the territories of States should not even temporarily be the object of any invasion, attack, military occupation or any other forcible measure directly or indirectly undertaken by other States for whatever political, economic, strategic, frontier or any other consideration.

(3) A firm statement that neither differences in social and State systems, nor refusal to grant recognition, or absence of diplomatic relations or any other pretexts may serve as a basis for the violation by one State of the territorial integrity of another.

(4) A commitment to solve all territorial disputes solely by peaceful means, such as negotiation, mediation, conciliatory procedures and other peaceful means chosen by the parties concerned, in conformity with the UN Charter.

The Soviet Government was confident, Mr. Khruschev said, that in the "new situation" created by the conclusion of such an agreement, it would be much easier to find a solution to other fundamental international problems. This applies above all to the problem of disarmament".

He said that "while continuing to work tirelessly for the solution of the problem of general and complete disarmament, it would be useful simultaneously to redouble our efforts in eliminating acute frictions in relations between States and centres of tension."

After noting that "not all territorial claims and disputes between States are of the same nature" he pointed to Formosa and said: "This island since ancient times is a component part of the Chinese State. The unlawful occupation of Taiwan by American troops must be terminated. The island is an inalienable part of the People's Republic of China and would have been re-unified with it long ago were it not for the external interference of another State.

"The demands of the liberated States for the return of their territories that are still under the colonial yoke or under foreign occupation are unquestionably just. All this, of course, applies in full also to the territories of people who have not yet won national independence and remain colonies."

President L. B. Johnson's Reply:

The White House in Washington on January 20 released the letter from President L. B. Johnson in reply to Mr. N. Khruschev's letter.

It read: "I welcome the stated objective of your December 31, 1963 letter and agree with much of its contents. It is my hope that we can build on these areas of agreement instead of merely emphasizing our well-known disagreements.

"This nation is committed to the peaceful unification of Germany in accordance with the will of the people. This nation, which has fundamental commitments to the Republic of China, has for many years sought the renunciation of force in the Taiwan Strait. This nation's forces and bases abroad are for collective defence, and in accordance with treaties and agreements with the countries concerned; let us emphasize, instead, our agreement on the importance your letter places on preserving and strengthening peace—and on the need to accompany efforts for disarmament with new efforts to remove the causes of friction and to improve the world's machinery for peacefully settling disputes. In this spirit, let us both present new proposals to the Geneva Disarmament Conferences—in pursuit of the objectives we have previously identified:—To prevent the spread of nuclear weapons; To end the production of fissionable material for weapons; To transfer large amounts of fissionable materials to peaceful purpose; To ban all nuclear weapons tests; To place limitations on nuclear weapons systems; To reduce the risk of war by accident or design; To move toward general disarmament.

"I am sure you will agree that our task is to work hard and persistently on these and other specific problems and proposals—as you and President Kennedy did on the Test Ban Treaty—instead of confining ourselves to vague declarations of principle that oppose some wars but not all. Your letter singles out the problems of territorial disputes and concludes that 'the use of force for the solution of territorial disputes is not in the interest of any people or any country.' I agree, moreover, the United States proposes guidelines to implement this principle which are even broader and stronger than your own.

"First, all Governments or regimes shall abstain from the direct or indirect threat or use of force to change—International boundaries; —Other territorial or administrative demarcation or dividing lines established or confirmed by international agreement or practice; —The dispositions of truce or military armistice agreements; or —Arrangements or procedures concerning access to, passage across or the administration of these areas where international agreement or practice has established or confirmed such arrangements or procedures.

"Nor shall any Government or regime use or threaten force to enlarge the territory under its control or administration by overthrowing or displacing established authorities.

"Second, these limitations shall apply regardless of the direct or indirect form which such threat or use of force might take, whether in the form of aggression, subversion, or clandestine supply of arms; regardless of what justification or purpose is advanced; and regardless of any question of recognition, diplomatic relations, or differences of political systems.

"Third, the parties to any serious dispute, in adhering to these principles, shall seek a solution by peaceful means—resorting to negotiation, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, action by a regional or appropriate United Nations agency or other peaceful means of their own choice.

"Fourth, these obligations, if they are to continue, would have to be quite generally observed. Any departure would require reappraisal; and the inherent right of self-defence which is recognized in Article 51 of the United Nations Charter would, in any event, remain fully operative.

"You will note the basic similarities in our position. Agreement should not be impossible on this or other propositions—and I share your hope that such agreement will stimulate disarmament and peaceful relations.

"The prevention of wars over territorial and other disputes requires not only general principles but also the 'growth and improvement' to which you refer regarding the machinery and methods for peaceful settlement. The United States believes that the peace-keeping processes of the United Nations—and specifically its Security Council—should be more fully used and strengthened and that the special responsibilities and contributions of the larger countries—particularly the permanent members of the Security Council—deserve greater attention in solving its financial problems.

"In conclusion with our allies, we shall offer specific proposals along these lines in the weeks ahead. Both the Geneva Disarmament Conference and United Nations are appropriate places for such discussions.

"Mr. Chairman, let me assure you that practical progress toward peace is my most fervent desire. This requires not only agreements in principle but also concrete actions in accord with those principles. I believe this exchange of letters offers real hope for that kind of progress—and that hope is shared by all peace-loving men in every land."

B. President L. B. Johnson's "State Of The Union" Message To US Congress: President Lyndon B. Johnson, in his "State of the Union" message to the US Congress on January 8, said:

"Let this session of Congress be known as the session which did more for civil rights than the last hundred sessions combined; as the session which enacted the most far-reaching tax cut of our time; as the session which declared all-out war on human poverty and unemployment in the United States; as the session which finally recognized the health needs of all our older citizens; as the session which reformed our tangled transportation and transit policies; as the session which achieved the most effective, efficient foreign aid programme ever; and as the session which helped to build more homes, more schools, more libraries and more hospitals than any single session of Congress in our nation's history.

"Let us carry forward the plans and programmes of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, not because of our sorrow or sympathy, but because they are right. In his memory I especially ask all members of my own political faith, in this election year, to put country ahead of party, and to debate principles, not personalities.

"For my part, I pledge a progressive administration which is efficient, honest and frugal. The Budget to be submitted shortly is in full accord with this pledge.

"It will cut our deficit in half, from $10,000 million to $4,900 million. It will be, in proportion to our national output, the smallest budget since 1951. It will call for a substantial reduction in federal employment, as yet accomplished only once before in the last 10 years.

"While maintaining the full strength of our defences, it will call for the lowest number of civilian personnel in the Department of Defence since 1950. It will call for total expenditures of $97,900 million compared to $98,400 million for the current year, a reduction of more than $500 million. It will call for new obligational authority of $103,800 million—a reduction of more than $4,000 million below last year's request of $107,900 million.

"But it is not a standstill budget, for America cannot afford to stand still. Our population is growing. Our economy is more complex. Our people's needs are expanding.

"This Administration here and now declares unconditional war on poverty in America. I ask this Congress and all Americans to join with me in that effort. It will not be a short or easy struggle—no single weapon or strategy will suffice—but we shall not rest until that war is won.

"The richest nation on earth can afford to win it. We cannot afford to lose it. One thousand dollars invested in salving an unemployable youth today can return $40,000 or more in his lifetime.

"The programme I shall propose will emphasize this co-operative approach to help that one-fifth of all American families with incomes too small to meet their basic needs. Our chief weapons in a more pin-pointed attack will be better schools, better health, better homes, better training, and better job opportunities to help more Americans—especially young Americans—escape from squalor and misery.

"These programmes are obviously not for the poor or under-privileged alone. Every American family will benefit by the extension of social security to cover the hospital costs of their aged parents. Every American community will benefit from the construction or modernization of schools, libraries, hospitals and nursing homes, from the training of more nurses, and from the improvement of urban renewal and public transit.

"And every American taxpayer, corporate or individual, will benefit from the earliest possible passage of the pending tax Bill—from both the new investment it will bring and the new jobs it will create.

"The tax Bill has been thoroughly discussed for a year. Now we need action. The new Budget clearly allows it. Our taxpayers surely deserve it. Our economy strongly demands it.

"For, however proud we may be of the unprecedented progress of our free enterprise economy over the last three years, we cannot permit it to pause.

"In 1963, for the first time in history, we crossed the 70 million job mark, but we will soon need more than 75 million. In 1963, our gross national product reached the $600,000 million level—$100,000 million higher than when we took office. But it easily could, and should, be still $30,000 million higher today.

"Wages, profits and family income are also at their highest levels in history—but four million workers and 13 per cent of our industrial capacity are still idle. We need a tax cut now to keep this country moving. For our goal is not merely to spread the work. Our goal is to create more jobs.

"I believe the enactment of a 35-hour week would sharply increase costs, invite inflation, impair our ability to compete and merely share instead of creating employment. But I am equally opposed to the 45 or 50-hour week in those industries where consistently excessive use of overtime causes increased unemployment.

"I recommend, therefore, legislation authorizing the creation of tripartite industry committees to determine, on an industry-by-industry basis, as to where a higher penalty rate for overtime would increase job openings without unduly increasing costs, and authorizing the establishment of such higher rates.

"Let me make one principle of this Administration abundantly clear. All of these increased opportunities—in employment, education, housing and every field—must be open to Americans of every colour. As far as the writ of federal law will run, we must abolish, not some, but all racial discrimination.

"For this is not merely an economic issue, or a social, political or international issue. It is a moral issue, and it must be met by the passage this session of the Bill now pending in the House.

"All members of the public should have equal access to facilities open to the public. All members of the public should be equally eligible for federal benefits financed by the public. All members of the public should have an equal chance to vote for public officials, and to send their children to good public schools, and to contribute their talents to the public good.

"Today Americans of all races stand side by side in Berlin and Viet-Nam. They died side by side in Korea. Surely they can work and eat and travel side by side in America.

"For our ultimate goal is a world without war, a world made safe for diversity, in which all men, goods and ideas can freely move across every border and boundary.

"We must advance toward this goal in 1964 in at least 10 different ways:

"(1) We must maintain—and our reduced defence budget will maintain—that margin of military safety and superiority obtained through three years of steadily increasing the quality and quantity of our strategic, conventional and anti-guerrilla forces.

"In 1964 we will be better prepared than ever before to defend the cause of freedom—whether it is threatened by outright aggression or by the infiltration practised by those in Hanoi and Havana who ship arms and men across international borders to foment insurrection.

"And we must continue to use that strength, as John Kennedy used it in the Cuba crisis and for the test ban Treaty, to demonstrate both the futility of nuclear war and the possibilities of lasting peace.

"(2) We must take new steps—and we shall make new proposals at Geneva—towards the control and eventual abolition of arms. Even in the absence of agreement we must not stockpile arms beyond our needs, or seek an excess of military power that could be provocative as well as wasteful.

"It is in this spirit that in this fiscal year we are cutting back our production of enriched uranium by 25 per cent, shutting down four plutonium piles, and closing many non-essential military installations. And it is in this spirit that we call on our adversaries to do the same.

"(3) We must make increased use of our food as an instrument of peace, making it available—by sale, trade, loan or donation—to hungry people in all nations which tell us of their needs and accept proper conditions of distribution.

"(4) We must assure our pre-eminence in the peaceful exploration of outer space, focussing on an expedition to the Moon in this decade—in co-operation with their powers if possible, alone if necessary.

"(5) We must expand world trade. Having recognized in the Act of 1962 that we must buy as well as sell, we now expect our trading partners to recognize that we must sell as well as buy. We are willing to give them competitive access to our market, asking only that they do the same for us.

"(6) We must continue, through such measures as the interest equalization tax as well as the co-operation of other nations, our recent progress towards balancing our international accounts. This Administration must and will preserve the present gold value of the dollar.

"(7) We must become better neighbours with the free States of the Americas, working with the councils of the OAS, with a stronger Alliance for Progress, and with all the men and women of this hemisphere who believe in liberty and justice for all.

"(8) We must strengthen the ability of free nations everywhere to develop their independence and raise their standard of living, and thereby frustrate those who prey on poverty and chaos. To do this, the rich must help the poor—and we must do our part. We must achieve a more rigorous administration of our development assistance, with larger roles for private investors, for other industrialized nations, for international agencies, and for the recipient nations themselves.

"(9) We must strengthen our Atlantic and Pacific partnerships, maintain our alliances and make United Nations a more effective instrument for national independence and international order.

"(10) Finally, we must develop with our allies new means of bridging the gap between East and West, facing danger boldly wherever danger exists, but being equally bold in our search for new agreements which can enlarge the hopes of all while violating the interests of none.

"In short, we must be constantly prepared for the worst and constantly acting for the best, strong enough to win a war and wise enough to prevent one. We shall neither act as aggressors nor tolerate acts of aggression.

"We intend to bury no one—and we do not intend to be buried. We can fight if we must, as we have fought before, but we pray we will never have to fight again.

"My fellow Americans. In these last seven sorrowful weeks, we have learned anew that nothing is so enduring as faith and nothing is so degrading as hate.

"John Kennedy was a victim of hate—but he was also a builder of faith—faith in our fellow Americans whatever their creed or colour or station in life; and faith in the future of man, whatever his divisions and differences.

"This faith was echoed in all parts of the world. On every continent and in every land to which I travelled I found faith and hope and love toward this land and all its people.

"I ask you now, in the Congress and in the country, to join with me in expressing and fulfilling that faith—in working for a nation that is free from want and a world that is free from hate—a world of peace and justice, freedom and abundance, for our time and for all time to come."

C. Cut In US Defence Budget: The US Defence Secretary, Mr. Robert McNamara, announced on December 30, 1963 that the US Defence Budget for the 1964-65 fiscal year would be $1,000 million less than that for the present fiscal year and would reach a ceiling of about $51,000 million.

He said the cut in the Defence Budget would be carried out "without reducing the defence of the nation."

He said that the new Budget would give USA the best defence system it had ever had.

He said the decision to reduce the Defence Budget was in no way connected with the recent announcement by Soviet Union that it was going to reduce its military Budget.

He said final decisions had not yet been made on certain aspects of the new Defence Budget, but it was clear that the expenditures of the Defence Department would be "about $1,000 million less than expenditures in fiscal 1964."

The Soviet defence expenditure announced earlier in December showed a reduction of about 600 million roubles (about £240 million sterling), a cut of about 4.3 per cent.

Mr. Nikita Khruschev, in an interview published on December 30 said "it would be a good thing if other States also took similar action" and added that "Russia was contemplating further reductions in armed strength."

American officials said in reply to questions that the Soviet decision to reduce military spending had not been a factor in the US cut.

Defence Department officials said US expenditures in the current year, ending in June, 1964, were expected to total $52,000 million and that expenditures in fiscal 1965 would be about $51,000 million.

D. Supply Of Wheat To USSR—USA Authorizes Sale: The US Commerce Department announced on December 26, 1963 that it had authorized the sale to the Soviet Union of more than $10,000,000 worth of American wheat.

The Department said two proposed sales to Russia amounted to $20,320,000 worth each. No details were given.

If the proposed sales take place, they will be the first to Russia under a new policy announced in Washington a few months earlier. Shipments to other East European countries have already been made under the policy.

The House of Representatives on December 24 approved a Foreign Aid Bill which has a provision giving President Johnson authority to permit US Government guarantees of credit sales to Communist countries.

The Commerce Department did not disclose whether the sales authorized would be for cash or credit.

CAMBODIA

A. Move For Defensive Alliance With China And Viet-Nam (DR): The Chief of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk told a news conference in Pnom Penh on February 15 that he would negotiate a defensive military alliance with Hanoi and Peking and break off diplomatic relations with USA and other Powers if an international conference on the neutralization of Cambodia had not been called by the end of May.

He said that he would send a delegation to Hanoi to negotiate an agreement recognizing Cambodia's territorial integrity "even at the end of April. "USA and its friends continue to oppose the calling of such a conference."

He said: "If such an agreement is signed, we will at once establish diplomatic relations with the Government of North Viet-Nam which we will recognize as the Government of all Viet-Nam".

B. Dr. A. Sukarno's Visit: President A. Sukarno of Indonesia paid a State visit to Cambodia from January 11 to 15 at the invitation of the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

It was the second visit of President Sukarno to Cambodia. It followed the one made by Prince Norodom Sihanouk in 1962.

During the latest visit, the two leaders held long discussions on international problems affecting world peace in general and the peace, security and stability of South-East Asia in particular.

A joint communique issued by them on January 14 said:

"These talks were conducted in a most cordial atmosphere and were characterized by complete mutual understanding. They revealed the identical views held by the two Heads of State on all the questions which were brought under review.

"The two Heads of State reviewed the developments in the situation of the world in general and in the region of South-East Asia in particular, revealing their common views on the important aspects of the international situation of today.

"They noted that the struggle of people in certain parts of the world against colonialism still continues to persist; worse still, where colonialism is seemingly on the retreat, it is re-appearing subtly in the form of neo-colonialism, aggravated by practices of intervention and subversion.

"The two Heads of State therefore maintained that the forces for freedom and national independence should not allow themselves to succumb to the policy of divide and rule of a certain imperialist Power, thus preserving their compact solidarity in their common struggle to achieve a new and better world free from exploitation of man by man and of nation by nation.

"In this context the two Heads of State firmly associate themselves with the struggle of the new emerging forces, social forces which courageously are fighting for the achievement of their national independence and social forces which, even in their post-national independence period have still to struggle consistently for the establishment and preservation of their national identity, either in the political, economic or social field, on their path towards prosperity, peace and justice.

"The two Heads of State further noted that, under the present international conditions described above, the two countries which persistently pursue a policy of non-alignment are subject to the dangers of encirclement and subversion by forces which are bent upon preventing the realisation of the ideals of a new world of freedom, justice and lasting peace.

"Faced by these dangers, the two Heads of State re-affirmed their deep conviction in the policy of non-alignment and the policy of peaceful co-existence among the free and independent countries, in order to facilitate co-operation among them for the speedy achievement of the common ideals of man.

"In this context of peaceful co-existence, the two Heads of State are of the opinion that, with regard to existing differences among countries in the region, Asian solutions are to be devised by Asians themselves in an Asian fashion.

"President Sukarno and Prince Norodom Sihanouk further exchanged information on the problems faced by their respective countries at present and on their efforts to find a peaceful solution.

"The two leaders expressed their conviction that those solutions can be attained by combining their individual efforts and those of other countries in Asia through frequent and regular mutual consultation or mushawarah to achieve a consensus of opinion or mufakat among them without interference or intervention by outside Powers. Prince Norodom Sihanouk and President Sukarno believed that by freely meeting each other in this fashion the leaders of Asia, irrespective of their political conviction will have the opportunity to review various problems and devise possible solutions in a spirit of friendship and brotherhood among fellow Asians.

"President Sukarno re-affirmed energetic support by the Government and people of Indonesia for the courageous struggle of the people of Cambodia, to safeguard the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cambodia, consistent with the policy of peace and non-alignment pursued by the Royal Cambodian Government.

"President Sukarno considers that the proposal made in 1963 by the Royal Government of Cambodia to obtain guarantees and respect for Cambodia's neutrality and territorial integrity by the participants in the Geneva Agreement of 1954 is not only in accordance with the legitimate aspirations of the people of Cambodia, but equally contributes to the maintenance of peace in South-East Asia.

"The Government and people of Indonesia firmly support this proposal and express the hope that the countries concerned will respond positively to this proposal.

"The Head of State of Cambodia expressed the appreciation of the Royal Government and people of Cambodia to the Government and people of Indonesia for their firm and constant support accorded to Cambodia in defence of her just cause.

"The Head of State and the Government and people of Cambodia, having been informed of the result of the first mushawarah Maphilindo held in Manila from January 7 to 11 expressed the hope that the Malaysia problem will be solved in an Asian fashion without outside interference.

"The two Heads of State renewed their common determination that relaxation of international tensions should be further promoted and that Asian-African solidarity and world peace should be safeguarded. To this end, they firmly supported the idea of convening a second Asian-African Conference.

"The two Heads of State also reviewed the development of their bilateral co-operation in the economic, cultural and technical fields and recognized the necessity of firmly maintaining and simultaneously re-inforcing and developing this co-operation on the basis of the spirit and principles of the Bandung Conference.

"President Sukarno expressed his appreciation for the kind offer of Prince Sihanouk to make use of the facilities of the port of Sihanoukville, and it was agreed that a Joint Commission be set up for the purpose of further surveying the matter in view of promoting trade relations between the two countries.

"The two Heads of State expressed the opinion that exchanges of visits between Heads of State or Heads of Government have always contributed a great deal to the promotion of mutual understanding and the development of friendly relations among nations, leading towards the strengthening of world peace.

"They also noted with satisfaction the continued re-inforcement of friendly relations between Indonesia and Cambodia and the constant development of their co-operation following the visits made to Cambodia and Indonesia by Dr. Sukarno and by Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

"President Sukarno expressed deep appreciation and grateful feelings for the warm and enthusiastic welcome accorded him by Prince Norodom Sihanouk by the Government and by the people of Cambodia during this present visit to Cambodia.

"President Sukarno extended an invitation to Prince Norodom Sihanouk, which was warmly accepted by the Prince."

SUMMARY: Communal Riots—Mr. G. L. Nanda's Statements; Relations With Sikkim—Sino-Indian Correspondence; Import Policy; Trade Deficit; UP Budget.

A. Communal Riots—Mr. G. L. Nanda's Statements In Lok Sabha: In a statement on a calling attention notice by Mr. Hem Barua (P-SP), the Central Home Minister, Mr.

Gulzari Lal Nanda said in the Lok Sabha on February 12 that it was the Government's policy to treat the rehabilitation of new migrants from East Pakistan as a national problem. Instructions had already been issued to ease the conditions for the grant of migration certificates to intending migrants.

The procedure for issuing certificates had also been streamlined in view of the very large number of applicants. It was the Government's intention to reduce the period of uncertainty and hardship for the migrants and to draw up suitable schemes for their rehabilitation.

He referred to the recent talks with the Chief Ministers of Andhra Pradesh, Mysore, Maharashtra, Orissa, West Bengal and Madhya Pradesh and said they had assured the Centre that immediate steps would be taken to make nearly 2,00,000 acres of land available for resettling refugees.

Pressure would be put on the Pakistan Government to see reason and follow the internationally recognized canons of behaviour in respect of minorities.

The theft of the holy relic from the Hazratbal shrine in Srinagar (see page 5630) provided the background for the agonizing series of outbursts in East Pakistan. Pakistan gave a communal twist to the incident and used it for anti-Indian propaganda. The violent manifestations of communal hatred and disorder in Khulna and Jessore might be traced directly to this extremely inflammatory campaign.

About the riots in West Bengal, he said that as a result of the prompt measures taken by the State Government, normal conditions were restored by January 15. In contrast to the determined and successful efforts on India's part to restore normalcy, the Pakistan Government failed to take its responsibility seriously. On the other hand, it made efforts to shift the entire blame for the riots on India.

It was unfortunate that the Press in Pakistan should have adopted a similar attitude and come out with extremely exaggerated, false and inflammatory accounts of the incidents in West Bengal.

Largely as a result of the Press incitement, disturbances broke out in Dacca and Narayanganj. There were reports of whole villages like Rayer Bazar and Baidyer Bazar inhabited by the minority community being completely wiped out. The exact number of casualties was not known on account of the strict censorship imposed by Pakistan. Unofficial estimates put it at 1,000.

The number of refugees in Dacca and Narayanganj was about 100,000 and there were reports that the Government was unable to cope with the needs of the refugee camps where several deaths had occurred due to unsatisfactory arrangements.

He referred to the proposal by the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, for a joint appeal by him and President Ayub Khan of Pakistan for communal harmony in the two countries and also India's suggestion for a meeting of the two Home Ministers and said Pakistan had rejected this "basically human" approach with its usual cynicism and apathy.

The large-scale exodus from East Pakistan was the inevitable consequence of Pakistan's irresponsible attitude and its disinclination to accept its minimum duty by the minorities.

Mr. Nanda also placed on the table a statement giving the salient facts relating to the communal disturbances in West Bengal and East Pakistan.

He said that in addition to the normal categories qualifying for the issue of migration certificates, it had been decided to include the following categories:

(1) Girls of marriageable age; unattached women and orphans who might have no sponsors in India as well as girls approaching marriageable age;

(2) Families seriously affected due to arson, looting and killing;

(3) Petty traders who had lost their wherewithal as well as industrial labour, skilled or unskilled, who had been badly affected; and

(4) Cases for Deputy High Commissioner's discretion; this would also take care of borderline cases.

As a result of the wave of communal violence in East Pakistan, 25,000 refugees had already crossed over to Assam, Tripura and West Bengal and more were coming in.

He disclosed that following the disturbances in East Pakistan and West Bengal, the Centre had asked State Governments to exercise "utmost vigilance and take strongest possible action including preventive measures at any sign of trouble to keep under check communal and anti-social elements. I am sure members will wish me to pay a tribute to the calm and restrained manner in which the people in other States conducted themselves during this delicate period."

About the disturbances in West Bengal, he said prompt measures were taken to put them down. Two hundred and eight persons of both communities lost their lives; 56 more were killed as a result of police action. It was estimated that in Calcutta about 62,000 persons of both communities either left their homes out of a sense of insecurity or their homes were destroyed. Of these more than 59,000 had since returned to their homes.

In the districts, mostly in 24 Parganas and Nadia, roughly 84,039 persons were estimated to have been displaced, of whom 90 per cent had returned to their homes. Measures had been taken to provide prompt relief and succour to these people and he assured the House that neither funds nor facilities would be denied for the purpose. The number of persons who had crossed over to East Pakistan because of disturbances was estimated to be slightly more than 5,000.

An encouraging feature noticeable in West Bengal was the protection and help given by Hindus to Muslims in distress even at serious personal risk to themselves. Similar instances had come to notice in East Pakistan where Muslims came to the help of Hindus. Saner elements in Pakistan, including some newspapers, also protested against communal violence and the inactivity of the Government.

Mr. Nanda made a similar statement in the Rajya Sabha.

When several members suggested that the House should have an opportunity to hold a discussion on this matter, he said if after the debate on the President's Address, members felt the need for further discussion, he would have no objection to it.

Replying on February 13 to the debate in the Lok Sabha on the situation arising out of the communal riots in East Pakistan, Mr. Nanda announced that there would be no bar against entry into India of those members of the minority community who found that they could not stay in East Pakistan with safety and honour.

Comparing their predicament to what a Persian couplet said—"no room to stay, no outlet to escape"—he said: "We shall see to it that they (East Pakistan minorities) can come across."

India was a poor country and there was not enough land on which to settle all those who might seek a new home here, but "whatever we have we shall share with them."

He said that about 22,000 persons had arrived in West Bengal and about 50,000 in Assam from across the border. Most of them were without migration certificates but they would be accepted. Already there had been a liberalization of migration restrictions.

He agreed that these steps had to be taken out of human considerations, whatever the legal or other aspects. There was, however, a certain limitation to what could be done for the well-being of the Hindu minority across the border because they were Pakistani nationals. It was Pakistan's responsibility to safeguard their safety and property. People in India should do everything possible to alleviate the sufferings of those people as "we are answerable to man and God."

He compared the position in India, where everybody enjoyed equal rights and State protection, whatever his religion, caste or community, with Pakistan's failure to protect the minorities. This matter had to be brought to the notice of the world at large.

B. Relations With Sikkim—Sino-Indian Correspondence: Chinese attempts to undermine India's relations with Sikkim have been exposed in the Notes, memoranda and letters exchanged between India and China in recent months.

A White Paper (No. 10) containing the correspondence between the two countries from July, 1963 to January, 1964 was placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on February 17 by Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs.

India stated in its Note of September 19, 1963, that the Chinese Government had, on one pretext or the other, been challenging the position that the Government of India was responsible for the defence of Sikkim and its external relations.

In its Notes, India denied the Chinese claim to Indian territory in the Ladakh area. The Chinese Government's "mischievous" allegations against Indian soldiers in the Bara Hoti area in the middle sector of the border were also denied equally firmly by India.

The White Paper also contained India's protest to China against violations of the country's territory by Chinese aircraft.

In a Note sent on January 3, India made it plain that "after the massive aggression by China across the Indian borders", there could be no revival of the 1954 Agreement on trade and intercourse with Tibet.

Referring to a Chinese proposal that the Agreement be renewed the Indian Government said that it had no intention of continuing the correspondence, beyond re-iterating its contention that the Chinese Government itself must bear the responsibility for the present situation.

It pointed out that a new agreement, in continuation of the old one, could not be negotiated now "because of the crisis of confidence" created by the "massive and unprovoked Chinese aggression" along the Indian borders.

In its Note of December 31, 1963 to the Chinese Embassy, the Government took "the most serious exception" to the "extraordinary behaviour" of some Embassy officials towards a postman on November 26, 1963, and subsequently towards a Town Inspector of the Posts and Telegraphs Department.

Other matters brought up in the correspondence, which included 126 Notes, letters and memoranda exchanged between the two countries, included India's attitude towards Formosa and the fate of five Kashmiri Muslims detained in Tibet.

C. Trade And Payments Agreement With Bulgaria: A new five-year Trade and Payments Agreement between India and Bulgaria was signed in New Delhi on February 14.

Mr. Ivan Golomeev, Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade of Bulgaria, signed the Agreement on behalf of his country and Mr. S. Vohra, Joint Secretary, Ministry of International Trade, signed for the Government of India.

The Agreement, which is operative from the beginning of this year, envisages trade both ways of about Rs. 90 million in 1964 and Rs. 105 million in 1965. The total trade both ways in 1963 was worth Rs. 61.7 million.

The list of Indian exports will be enlarged and diversified as a result of the Agreement.

India will continue to import from Bulgaria electric hoists, cranes, power cables, transformers, steel products, machine tools, ball bearings, mining locomotives, automatic looms, battery-operated trucks, pig-iron, zinc, chemicals and capital goods.

(The Times of India, New Delhi)

[Prev. ref. 4440:INI:G]

D. Import Policy: It was announced by the Minister for International Trade, Mr. Manubhai Shah, in New Delhi on February 14 that the import policy for the next financial year would continue to place severe restrictions on the import of raw materials and intermediates, available indigenously, with a view to conserving foreign exchange.

He told a meeting of the Informal Consultative Committee of Parliament that imports during 1963 totalled Rs. 1,087 crores and were Rs. 39 crores less than those of 1962. The reduction, he said, was possible because of the strict scrutiny, import rationalization and import substitution.

Imports of machinery and components and parts and spares to meet the increasing demand of industry had gone up by nearly Rs. 30 crores and accounted for nearly a third of the total imports. There was, however, a decline of nearly the same magnitude in food imports.

Increased production of iron and steel, chemicals, transport equipment, dyeing, tanning and colouring materials, medical and pharmaceutical products, metal manufactures, paper and paper board, textile yarn and scientific instruments partly helped to reduce the import bill.

In view of the better domestic cotton crop, imports of raw cotton were less by Rs. 15 crores. The import of petroleum products, however, rose in view of the growing defence and domestic demands. The import of vegetable and animal oils showed a decline.

The increasing indigenous production of aluminium reduced the imports while the increasing internal demand for copper, lead and zinc necessitated larger imports of these metals.

As regards machinery, the policy followed was to allow the import of only complex and heavy types of machinery and machine tools since most of the less complex and medium machinery and machine tools were being manufactured within the country.

He also informed the Committee of the record increase of Rs. 104 crores in exports in 1963 as compared to the previous year.

According to official figures, exports in 1963 totalled Rs. 791 crores as against Rs. 687 crores. Thus, the trade deficit was reduced from Rs. 439 crores in 1962 to Rs. 296 crores in 1963.

While expressing gratification over the increase in exports, he pointed out that there was no room for complacency. India had the lowest per capita foreign exchange earning and it was necessary to step up exports further. There was good scope for raising the exports of even traditional items like jute goods, tea and textiles.

During the discussion, many members endorsed Mr. Shah's plea for creating an export-consciousness in the country. Some suggested integration of the Ministry of Industry and the Ministry of International Trade for achieving greater co-ordination in the field of foreign trade.

E. Railway Accidents During 1962-63: The Railway Accidents Committee has stated in its report for 1962-63 that a majority of train accidents on the Indian Railways was the direct result of the failure of Railway staff.

The report for 1962-63, for instance, says that out of 1,441 collisions and derailments, 1,016 or about 70.5 per cent were caused by the failure of Railway staff. Almost all cases of collision were attributable to human failure.

About 12 per cent of the derailments were on account of defective working of mechanical equipment, while the failure of permanent way was responsible for 46 or 3.4 per cent of the derailments.

The total number of accidents on the Railways during 1962-63 was 9,119 compared to 9,184 during the previous year. Of these, accidents, which normally result in loss of life or limb or damage to property, totalled 2,030, showing a declining trend from 2,272 in 1960-61 and 2,084 in 1961-62.

Serious accidents numbered 14 or one less than in 1961-62 but the figure of killed and injured was higher. Fatal casualties totalled 187 and others 504 compared to 120 and 399 in the previous year. This was because of two head-on collisions at Dumraon and Umeshnagar, which resulted in 111 persons being killed and 116 injured. Between April, 1963 and the end of the year there were five serious accidents resulting in 12 deaths.

A majority of the recommendations of the Railway Accidents Committee has also been accepted and 71 others of 298 made are under examination.

Among the major recommendations of the Committee are the opening of a Central Training Institute for the benefit of supervisors, provision of sufficient staff and their being posted in time, imparting of adequate training and intensification of periodical refresher courses.

It has also suggested that the present methods of selection of supervisors should be radically altered to provide chances for persons with initiative and ability and that a sum of Rs. 12 crores per year should be spent in providing staff quarters, instead of Rs. 7 crores as at present.

The Committee has also suggested the establishment of a central workshop for the manufacture of electrical signalling and mechanization of tracks, maintenance of busy trunk routes. Two special workshops, it has also said, should be built up for the manufacture of spare parts generally in short supply.

An expansion of research facilities and personnel was also essential. The Committee has expressed the view that at least one per cent of the gross expenditure of the Railways should be on research. This would mean more than a four-fold increase in the present expenditure on railway research organization.

F. Trade Deficit For 1963: India's trade deficit for 1963 was Rs. 296 crores as against Rs. 439 crores during 1962.

Exports during the year touched the record figure of Rs. 791 crores, which was Rs. 104 crores more than in 1962. This included exports from Goa, Diu, and Daman.

The exports increased in spite of some decline in the unit price of several commodities. The higher unit prices of some items accounted for the increased earnings.

Imports dropped by Rs. 39 crores to Rs. 1,087 crores. The bulk of the imports was for the maintenance and development of the economy. Essential items like foodgrains and petroleum were imported in the same quantities as in 1962, but the value of machinery and components imported rose by nearly Rs. 30 crores. They now account for nearly a third of the imports.

In view of foreign exchange difficulties, imports of several lower priority items were cut. There was also some reduction in the imports of priority items produced in India. The increase in the production of iron and steel, chemicals, transport equipment, dyeing, tanning and colouring materials, and medicines led to substantial import cuts. In view of better cotton crop, imports of raw cotton declined by Rs. 15 crores.

The decline in imports was well spread. The deficit trade balance with West European countries, including the UK improved by Rs. 62 crores, with Asia and Oceania by Rs. 56 crores and with East European countries by Rs. 15 crores over the previous year.

The largest increase of Rs. 43 crores in exports was recorded in respect of Asia and Oceania, followed by Rs. 25 crores to West European countries, including the UK, Rs. 13 crores to USA and Rs. 14 crores to East European countries.

The largest decline in imports of Rs. 37 crores was in the case of West European countries, followed by Rs. 13 crores in Asia and Oceania.

Trade with Africa recorded a decline of about Rs. 5 crores both in imports and exports.

Trade deficit with USA slightly widened because of a larger increase in imports than in exports. Imports from America amounted to Rs. 370 crores and exports to Rs. 170 crores.

G. Theft Of Sacred Relic From Hazratbal Shrine—Three Persons Arrested: The Central Home Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, disclosed in Parliament on February 17 the names of three persons arrested so far in connexion with the theft of the sacred relic from the Hazratbal shrine in Srinagar (see page 5630).

They are: Abdul Rahim Bande, mujawar (custodian) of the shrine; Abdul Rashid, a young boy who actually brought back the relic to the shrine and was caught while running away, and Kadar Butt, who is believed to have some affiliation with Pakistan and had often visited Pakistan.

Mr. Nanda made a brief statement announcing the names in both Houses, but replied to members' questions only in the Rajya Sabha.

He said that preliminary charge-sheets against the three had been filed. But the investigation was still proceeding and other suspected persons might come to light.

He said the possibility of "some kind of an inspiration or complicity" from outside in the theft could not be ruled out and half-a-dozen more arrests might follow.

About the possibility of some political party acting behind the scene, he remarked: "I think one can infer. I need not name them."

He said that those arrested would be tried under the Penal Code of the State for wounding the religious feelings of a community. "It was possible that under the State's Enemy Agents Ordinance, some other case might arise."

He took the opportunity to make it clear once again that the judge, who would try the case, would be deputed from outside the State and would be "unconnected" with the State administration.

Relic Certified As Genuine:

The recovered relic of Prophet Mohammed in the Hazratbal shrine was certified as genuine by all the 17 maulvis and pirs who examined it at a special deedar in Srinagar on February 3.

H. Mr. Asoka Mehta Expelled From P-SP: The National Executive of the Praja-Socialist Party decided on February 15 "with regret to terminate Mr. Asoka Mehta's membership of the P-SP" for accepting the post of Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission.

The resolution, which was put to the vote after a three-hour discussion, was adopted by a majority of 15 to 3.

The action was taken by the Executive under Article 28 of the party constitution for breach of discipline (writing or speaking publicly or acting against the decisions of the party).

Of the 25 members, 19 attended the meeting. Mr. H. V. Kamath had to leave for Bombay before voting took place. Mr. Nath Pai, Mr. Farid Ansari and Mr. Genda Singh opposed the resolution. They felt such action might weaken and endanger the party unity.

Members who supported the action asserted that Mr. Mehta's continued membership might weaken the party.

Eight special invitees participated in the discussions.

National Executive Meeting:

The Lohia Socialists' move for unconditional merger with the Praja-Socialist Party was welcomed by the P-SP National Executive, which concluded its two-day session in New Delhi on February 16.

The Executive, in a resolution, said that the final decision for a merger could be taken only with the sanction of the National Conferences of the respective parties.

The Executive has appointed a special committee for the task of conducting merger talks with representatives of the Socialist Party.

The Socialist Party had formally communicated its decision to merge with the P-SP in a note to the P-SP Executive on February 15. It also informed the P-SP that a special committee had been set up for merger talks.

Resolutions:

On February 16, the National Executive of the P-SP adopted a resolution strongly criticizing the British Government's stand on the Kashmir issue and said the British attitude had rendered the "Commonwealth association a meaningless link."

The resolution noted with regret the "unhelpful attitude of certain nations" in the Security Council over the Kashmir issue during the last 16 years and declared that Kashmir's accession to India was valid and final.

It also criticized the Government of India for the support it gave to "the undemocratic practices" of the Kashmir Government and urged that the Central Government should "induct an administration enjoying the confidence of all sections of the community."

It also passed a resolution on the communal disturbances in East Pakistan and their repercussions in India. The resolution called upon the Government to provide facilities to the new migrants from East Pakistan and assured its support to measures for the protection of Muslim minority in India.

As regards the new migrants, the resolution reminded the Government of the pledge of protection given to them by Indian leaders at the time of Partition. Suggesting concrete measures, the resolution said the Government should arrange planned and safe transit of immigrants from East Pakistan.

The Government was also asked to take steps "to secure compensation for the properties left in East Pakistan" and to assure the immigrants "full and immediate rehabilitation, and confer on them Indian citizenship."

The resolution also called upon the Government to take measures to evict all Pak illegal infiltrators.

J. Natural Gas Discovered In Upper Assam: Natural gas has been discovered in the second test well at Bogapani in Upper Assam.

Oil India Limited, a joint venture of the Government and the Burmah Oil Company, is now engaged in exploratory drilling estimated to cost about Rs. 2 crores.

It has selected the site for a third test well near Namrup. The first test well at Tinali has been abandoned as a dry hole, according to Oil India.

Oil India plans to drill at least four more test wells in 1964-65 in its exploration licence areas in Dum Duma (Assam) and Ninguru (N-EFA). Seismic surveys have already covered most of the Dum Duma area and the party will be moving soon into Ninguru.

At the Bogapani location, situated in a dense jungle, drilling commenced towards the end of December, 1963 and the objective depth was reached on January 21.

The initial production tests of the two promising sands in the well have yielded some natural gas, but without any crude oil.

Oil Deposits In Doon Valley:

The Central Minister for Petroleum and Chemicals, Mr. Humayun Kabir told newsmen in Dehra Dun on February 14 that the Oil and Natural Gas Commission had discovered rich oil deposits in the Doon Valley.

He said that drilling operations would be undertaken shortly at Mohand, eight miles from Dehra Dun on the Dehra Dun-Delhi Road, where oil deposits had been located. An intensive survey in the Himalayan and Terai regions was also being carried out.

Mishra in pursuance of a directive of the Indian National Trade Union Congress which had drafted him for organizational work.

Referring to defence efforts, he said that gold and silver worth over Rs. 3 crores were collected in the State for the National Defence Fund. A large number of people were given training in various civil defence organizations.

Of the total outlay of Rs. 236.50 crores for the State's Third Five-Year Plan, Rs. 127.05 crores were spent by the end of the third year of the Plan, Rs. 46.14 crores were spent in 1963 and Rs. 43.48 crores were earmarked for the coming year.

Among the measures adopted by the State Government for the rapid industrialization of Gujerat, the Governor referred to the assistance to industrialists for procuring land, power, equipment and raw materials, establishment of industrial estates, financial aid, expansion of the industrial research laboratory at Baroda and subsidy on the power consumed by small industries.

He said that the Government was anxious to provide gas to industries at a reasonable price.

The first phase to process one million tons of crude oil at Koyali refinery would be completed by December. The second phase to process another one million tons of oil would be achieved by July, 1965. The Central Government was considering doubling the refining capacity at Koyali.

Details regarding the setting up of a petro-chemical complex in the public sector around Koyali refinery were being finalised. The complex would start functioning by 1971. Further processing of the basic chemicals produced at the complex would be entrusted to the private sector.

With a view to maintaining the price level of foodgrains, the Government opened 1,164 fair price shops during the year, taking the total to 4,264.

M. Governor's Address To Punjab Legislature: The Budget session of the Punjab Legislature got off to an unruly start, when three members walked out during the Governor's Address to a joint sitting of both Houses on February 17.

The three members walked out immediately after the Governor, Mr. Pattom Thanu Pillai, began reading his Address in protest against the use of English. The three were Mr. Net Ram (Soc), Mr. Tek Ram (PIP) and Mr. Tara Singh (Akali). They wanted the Address to be read out in Hindi.

Mr. Thanu Pillai began his address with a reference to Punjab's "special role" as a border State and with a tribute to its people for having "already risen to the occasion and answered the challenge so far magnificently".

He admitted that there was "an unusual rise in wheat prices in the market" during the year. He attributed this to the "national policy regarding free trading and free movement of grain" which had led to huge export of grain from the State.

He said that the State Government had "taken all possible measures to hold the price line". About 6,000 fair price shops had been opened in the State to supply flour to the people. There was also a vigilance committee which reviewed prices from time to time.

There was no mention of the Government's scheme for State trading in grain which it had already discussed with the Centre.

Stressing the need for special attention to solve the problem of annual floods, Mr. Thanu Pillai revealed that the floods had caused a loss of Rs. 5.98 crores in 1963.

He spoke of the need to maintain the status of Simla and re-iterated the Government's much-criticized decision to move Government offices there during Summer.

On the law and order situation during the past year—a subject which the Opposition repeatedly brings up during debates—he revealed that registered cases had gone up from 46,711 in 1962 to 51,723 in 1963. The rise did not, however, signify a deterioration in the situation. According to him, the increase was attributable to the special drive launched against illicit distillation.

He catalogued several achievements of the State during the year. They were: the completion of the Bhakra Dam, the introduction of free and compulsory education for children in the age group 6—9, installation of water supply plants in 60 towns and sewerage in 38 towns, the completion of the first panchayati elections without any major incident or conflict and the introduction of the Old Age Pension Scheme.

N. Governor's Address To Maharashtra Legislature: A clear indication that the Naik Ministry was "resolved to take measures which will result in a more realistic and effective implementation" of the prohibition policy was given on February 13 by the State Governor, Mrs. Vijayalakshmi Pandit, in her address to a joint session of the Maharashtra Legislature.

She said that while the Government stood firmly committed to follow the policy laid down in the Constitution, experience over the past 14 years had made it aware that "prohibition as it now exists in this State can give rise to serious dangers to the common welfare and that these dangers can be aggravated if an unrealistic or wishful approach is adopted".

She said that it could not have been the intention that the State should provide lawbreakers with an easy and profitable means of livelihood through illicit distillation or by trafficking in noxious alcohol. Experience had shown that the present mode of prohibition had caused serious harm to the health of those very people for whose benefit prohibition had been conceived.

She added that any additional revenue collected from the proposed liberalization in the issue of permits would be used for the welfare of addicts and for propaganda to wean away at least the younger generation from drink.

In an indirect reference to the Goa ruling party's main platform in the recent elections for the immediate merger of Goa with Maharashtra, she said that the establishment of a democratic form of Government "will help strengthen the cultural, historical and linguistic bonds which exist between the people of Goa and the people of Maharashtra".

She expressed the hope that Maharashtra's boundary and waters disputes with Mysore and Andhra would soon be settled satisfactorily and on a permanent basis.

She also referred to the State's defence effort, the record established in small savings, and to the progress of development schemes.

O. UP Budget For 1964-65: The Uttar Pradesh Budget for 1964-65, presented to the Vidhan Sabha on February 13 by the State Finance Minister, Mr. Kamlapati Tripathi, showed a deficit of Rs. 11.59 crores.

Revenue receipts were estimated at Rs. 223.84 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 235.43 crores.

To cover the deficit the Government proposed to launch a vigorous drive for the realisation of tax arrears and prevention of tax evasion. Economy in administrative expenditure was contemplated.

Mr. Tripathi said the entire revenue deficit could not possibly be wiped out by these measures alone and steps for raising additional resources appeared to be unavoidable. He had no doubt that, in these circumstances, the House would approve such measures as might be placed before it in due course.

The Government had decided to appoint a committee to rationalize the pay-scales of various categories of Government employees. It has, in the meantime decided to increase by Rs. 5 a month the rates of dearness allowance for whole-time Government servants.

The rate of old age pension will be increased from Rs. 15 to Rs. 20 a month.

Top priority will be given to stepping up agricultural production. For this it is proposed to take urgent steps to ensure maximum utilization of the irrigation potential, dig more tubewells and encourage private irrigation, simplify the procedure for advancing loans for minor irrigation and introduce an irrigation extension service.

The provision for distribution of fertilizers is to be increased from Rs. 12.5 crores to Rs. 17.86 crores. Short-term loans in kind will be advanced in the co-operative sector. Emphasis will be laid on intensive cultivation of sugar-cane. "Package programmes" for increasing production of rice, pulses, potato, cotton, rape-seed, mustard seed and jowar will be launched.

Power has also been given high priority. It is proposed to increase the installed capacity for power generation from 601 mw, expected at the end of the current financial year, to 614 mw in 1964-65. The Plan provision for the electrification of 1,500 villages is likely to be doubled and the State Electricity Board hopes to electrify 3,000 villages by the end of 1965-66.

The anticipated outlay on the power schemes during the current year is about Rs. 20 crores (excluding the Uttarkhand region). This is being raised to Rs. 29 crores next year. A scheme for the establishment of a cement factory at Dalla in Mirzapur district has been included in the Third Plan. The development and exploitation of Singrauli coal deposits is proceeding according to schedule. Coal from these fields may be available in 1965.

The antibiotics factory at Rishikesh is likely to go into production this year. The State Industrial Corporation proposes to start a lime-based industry in Mirzapur. Rehabilitation and modernization of old sugar mills is engaging the attention of the Government.

A sum of Rs. 6.5 crores has been allotted for roads and bridges. The construction of an additional 300 miles of roads, improvement of 250 miles of existing roads and completion of 15 new bridges are envisaged.

A. Control Of Estates Transferred: The British managers have handed over control of the Pemanukan and Tjiasemlands plantations in West Java to a Government provisional supervisory team.

The Antara news agency reported on February 14 that control of the plantations in the Subang plateau was transferred on February 13 at a ceremony attended by Mr. D. S. F. Meyer, representing the plantations, and Mr. Ustara Wiradinata, chairman of the body for provisional control of British-owned estates in West Java.

Before the transfer, Mr. Mashudi, Governor of West Java, officially installed the members of the suvervisory body on behalf of Dr. Sadjarwo, Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Meyer said he believed that Government control over the plantations would be only of a temporary nature and that Indonesia would not nationalize them. The agency reported that Mr. Mashudi, however, said that "come what may, all plantations must unconditionally become the property of the Indonesian nation".

Antara reported that Major-General Aziz Saleh, Minister of People's Industries, had placed 13 British commercial enterprises under the supervision, control and security of his Ministry.

A Ministry of Agriculture official said that the latest transfer was in line with the Ministry's decision of February 3 placing all British estates under the direct control of the Government.

An Antara report from Sourabaya, East Java, said that the city's mayor had ordered all British companies taken over by workers to be returned to their former managements. The order said the companies should be restored to their former position and appealed to the workers to co-operate with the management. The order also forbade any changes in staff.

Meanwhile, at least 18,000 people were reported to be suffering from hunger on the Indonesian island of Bali. The agency was quoting reports which said that thousands were still suffering from widespread famine in Central Java, after a long drought and rat plagues.

The Defence Minister, General Abdul Haris Nasution, announced that the Armed Forces had made available 5 million rupiahs for famine-stricken people. This followed an earlier Army gift of 30 tons of rice.

Earlier, on February 12, the Anglo-Dutch Unilever Company was placed under the control of the People's Industry Ministry.

An announcement said the Ministry had decided to control the company after its workers attempted to take it over in January. The Ministry had appealed to the workers to go back to work as usual.

Most British and partly British estate holdings in Indonesia are now under a degree of Government supervision after take-over attempts in January by the Communist-dominated Workers' Association. These followed demonstrations against Britain's role in the formation of the Malaysian Federation.

President Sukarno on January 24 ordered army, police, and civil authorities to obey an earlier presidential order forbidding labour unions to seize British concerns in Indonesia.

B. Basis Of Education System: A spokesman of the Education Ministry said on February 16 that Indonesia had decided to make the State philosophy of Panchashila the basis of its education system.

He said the purpose of the stress on this philosophy was to develop "perfectly patriotic citizens with the national character."

Panchashila is a broadly conceived theory involving five principles—belief in God, humanitarianism, nationalism, sovereignty of the people and social justice.

IRAN

A. Transit Agreement With Turkey: A new Iran-Turkish Transit Agreement was signed in Tehran on February 1 to replace the 1949 Agreement, to which so many additions and protocols had been added that it had become a completely unwieldy document of 45 pages.

The importance of the Agreement is the simplifying and streamlining of the procedures for transit trade between and through the two countries. Iran is possibly the main beneficiary by the new arrangements, and her exports to Europe should certainly benefit as transport rates and time schedules have been reduced drastically. Turkey will of course also benefit through the additional traffic and both countries will benefit by the increased volume of trade made possible by the Agreement.

The net effect of the Agreement will be to reduce the maximum transport rates for a ton of exports from Tehran to European ports from 6,000 rials to 3,225 rials, and to cut the time from five to two weeks. The effective rates range from between $128 to $38 per ton. The present Agreement covers overland transport, but discussions are taking place at present with a view to extending the rate concession to sea transport between the two countries. In addition, charges are being cut by both countries for loading and unloading and all other warehouse and dock services by between 25 per cent and 50 per cent. The discount reductions are still larger if Iranian transport is used for Iranian goods through Turkey.

The main transport routes to be used by Iran are from the Iranian border to Trabzon, to Iskenderun on the Mediterranean, and to Istanbul. Turkish transport companies will use the Bezergan-Istafan-Kerman route to the border of Pakistan and the Bazergan-Tehran route to the border of Afghanistan. In addition, other routes may be used by mutual agreement.

Another advantage for both sides is the reduction of the guarantees to $12,000 that have to be provided by transport companies using routes through the other country and this sum can now be deposited by bank letters of credit instead of hard currency; the net effect of this new ruling will be to reduce the transport costs still further.

It is claimed that the result of these reductions in transport charges will be to make the overland route to Europe via Turkey cheaper than the Soviet overland route, for which Iran obtained special concessions in 1963.

Prior to this Agreement the majority of goods transported from Iran to Europe were transhipped at the border on to Turkish transport, and while previous efforts to form mixed transport companies have not been successful, it is hoped that such companies can be formed.

IRAQ

A. Cease-fire With Kurds Signed: The war between the Kurds and Iraqi forces ended on the night of February 10.

President A. S. Arif and the Kurdish leader, Mullah Mustapha Barzani, agreed to a cease-fire.

The Iraqi Government has decided to concede the "just claims of the Kurds and to restore the unity of Arabs and Kurds".

President Arif said in a broadcast that the Government had recognized the natural rights of the Kurds within the frame-work of national unity.

He ordered the release of all prisoners of war and declared a general amnesty.

Kurdish officials who had been dismissed or transferred to other jobs during the Kassem administration will be reinstated.

Mullah Mustapha issued a statement read over the radio by Brigadier Farhan, Minister for National Guidance. The Mullah said: "Wishing to preserve the unity of the nation we have decided to cease fire and to advise our followers to return to their dwellings.

"By doing this there will be room to take steps which will ensure the return of things to normal as well as security and stability."

The bloody conflict between Kurds and Iraqis began in September, 1961. President G. A. Nasser of UAR was believed to have played a great part in the present settlement.

B. Nationalization Of Oil Companies—Government Stand: The Minister of Oil, Dr. Abdul Aziz al Wattari, told a news conference in Baghdad on February 9 that Iraq had no intention of nationalizing oil companies.

Speaking of the function of Iraq's new National Oil Company, announced on February 8, he said this would in no way affect the interests of foreign companies. The new company was to contribute to the international oil industry as a whole.

President A. S. Arif has approved an enabling law which is a continuation of previous legislation limiting the land where foreign oil companies might operate, and appropriating more than 66 per cent of the land covered by their concessions.

A draft law for a national oil company was published in 1962 but it was held in abeyance both in General A. K. Kassem's days and after. In May, 1963 Dr. Abdul Aziz al-Wattari, who had been Minister of Oil since February, 1963, said that the law had been pigeonholed. Its execution now indicated at first sight that the door has been slammed on the Iraq Petroleum Company in order to give the February, 1963 coup a resounding anniversary.

In fact the door may not have been slammed. Originally the national company was to enjoy rights over at least 99 per cent of the Iraq Petroleum Company's concession area; the reference on Baghdad Radio to 66 per cent may mean that some change has been made.

In any case the crux of this matter is whether the national company tries to exploit the areas of which the IPC has been dispossessed. This would make the IPC's loss final.

Iraq's attitude since the further coup in November, 1963 which clipped Baathist wings in the country seems to have hardened towards all foreign oil interests, and this was shown in the arguments within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries at its meeting in Saudi Arabia in December, 1963.

This sum is to be spent by the end of the current fiscal year (March 30) so as to speed up the completion of the Baghdad-Basra railway line and the Baghdad East railway station.

The Board has also approved the establishment of a woollen textiles factory in Nassiriya, for which international tenders will be announced in the near future. Tenders have already been published for the ID1.2 million water treatment project in Arbil; and are expected shortly for the construction of an ID13 million paper factory at Rumaitha; and an ID12 million fertilizer factory at Umul Fuluss.

Plans are also being considered for the construction of the Al Karma Bridge on the Baghdad-Basrah highway at a cost of about ID1.5 million. The Ministry of Industry has informed foreign trade missions about the Government's intention to build a tyres factory and has asked for details of foreign firms capable of handling such a project. The Ministry is also planning to build a second factory for production of aluminium sheets.

B. Rechna Doab Project—Loan From USA: The US Information Services in Karachi announced on February 1 that a long-term interest-free American loan of $750,000 to finance spare parts, servicing equipment and consultant services for the Rechna Doab tubewell project had been signed.

The loan, authorized by the US Agency for International Development, was signed for the Government of Pakistan by Mr. Osman Ali, Secretary, Economic Affairs Division of the President's Secretariat and for the United States by Mr. Donald G. McDonald, Director of the US Agency for International Development Mission to Pakistan.

Actual terms of the loan call for no repayment during the first ten years and then repayment in dollars over a period of 30 years with a small carrying charge of three-quarters of one per cent per annum.

The Rechna Doab project, with 1,800 tubewells in operation, was formally inaugurated in April, 1963 by President Ayub Khan.

A $10.8 million US loan signed in March, 1963 called for the sinking and operation of more than 800 tubewells, with power supply facilities and drainage works, designed to benefit an area of about 623,000 acres in the Chaj Doab area of West Pakistan. This scheme, together with the Rechna Doab, will bring approximately 1.5 million acres under beneficial reclamation treatment.

Rechna Doab, known as Salinity Control and Reclamation Project No. 1, (SCARP 1) is one project in the programme outlined in the draft report on water-logging and salinity by the late President Kennedy's Science Advisory Committee. The draft report and a recent review of the project in Pakistan have indicated the necessity of intensive co-operative effort to realize the full potential of the pumping facilities. The new US $750,000 loan is designed to provide funds for support to the operation and maintenance of the pumps.

Mr. McDonald pointed out that in the year in which the Rechna Doab project had been operating, some dramatic results had been achieved. "In Khangah Dorgan, in the Sheikhupura district, more than 200 tubewells have reclaimed some 13,000 acres, raising the acreage of cultivated land in the area by 50 per cent."

C. Trade Pacts With Yugoslavia: Pakistan and Yugoslavia signed on January 28 Agreements providing for exchange of commodities under barter and a further Yugoslav credit of $10,000,000 for development projects in Pakistan.

The following communique was issued on the occasion:

"The economic and trade delegation, headed by HE Mr. Kosovac, Minister of Trade, Government of Yugoslavia, arrived in Pakistan on January 16, 1964. The delegation came to Pakistan to explore the possibilities of expanding trade and of enlarging the scope and volume of economic, technical and industrial co-operation between the countries.

"Mr. Wahiduzzaman, Minister for Commerce, and Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, Mr. Said Hasan, represented the Government of Pakistan in these discussions with the visiting delegation.

"(a) The two delegations signed a balanced Trade Agreement (barter agreement) involving exchange of a number of goods and commodities on both sides on a self-balancing basis. The value of these goods and commodities would be Rs. 1.5 crores on each side and the Agreement will be valid for one year. The exchange of commodities under this Agreement will be in addition to the normal trade between the two countries.

"The main exports from Pakistan under this Agreement would be jute, cotton and manufactured and semi-manufactured goods, viz., cotton textiles, cotton yarn, cotton waste, fertilizers, sports goods, surgical instruments, cutlery, fish meal, frozen fish, etc., tanned and semi-tanned leather, leather goods, spectacle frames, sheep casings, kapok, chrome ore, hosiery, molasses, fresh fruits, handloom cloth and handicrafts.

"The exports from Yugoslavia will consist of motor cars, scooters, tools and workshop equipment, cables, insulators, conductors, pipes, chemicals, including insecticides, hardware and iron pharmaceuticals, marine engines, earthenware and crockery, glass ware, paper (all sorts), tyres and tubes, sanitary ware, typewriting machines.

"(b) Another Barter Agreement was finalised by the two delegations. This Barter Agreement involves the construction by a Yugoslav firm of about 200 tube-wells for WAPDA, West Pakistan, in exchange for exports of some specified grades of jute. The value of this Barter Agreement is about Rs. 80,00,000 on each side. This project will take about two years to complete.

"(c) The Pakistan delegation accepted the offer of the Yugoslav delegation concerning a further credit of $10 million for development projects. The projects to be financed from this credit will be negotiated between the two countries later on.

"The two delegations further agreed that apart from these barter agreements and the existing credit financing arrangements between the two countries, another and more effective way to expand the volume of trade and to enlarge the scope of economic co-operation between the two countries would be for Yugoslavia to build development projects on credit in Pakistan and to accept repayment of these credits over a number of years in the form of Pakistan primary commodities and manufactured and semi-manufactured goods.

"The Yugoslav delegation, while accepting the suggestions in principle, however, made it clear that this pattern of repayment credits would apply only to certain specified projects which may be mutually agreed upon by competent authorities in the two countries.

"The two delegations also agreed to hold further discussions to finalise the agreement on avoidance of double taxation.

"The leaders of the two delegations hoped that the Agreements signed today and the principles agreed upon by the two delegations would open the ways for further extension of trade between the two countries and also lead to increased economic and industrial co-operation."

Ship-building Pact Signed:

An Agreement to collaborate in the construction of the first ocean-going ship of over 10,000 tons at the Karachi shipyard was signed on January 31 between Pakistan and Yugoslavia.

The visiting General Manager of the Spilit Shipyard of Yugoslavia, Mr. M. Radovic signed on behalf of his country, while Mr. A. Hamid Ghani, General Manager of the WPIDC Shipyard, signed on behalf of the Shipyard.

Under the Agreement, a 13-man strong team of Yugoslav technicians will shortly arrive in Karachi to assist the WPIDC Shipyard in the construction of the ship, for which preliminary work has already been started by the WPIDC Shipyard.

Besides, the Agreement envisages the supply of material, designs, and drawings of the vessel by Yugoslavia to Pakistan. The ship is to be built for a Pakistani company, which, however, has not yet been named by the Government.

D. Restoration Of Franchise—Opposition's Appeal: Opposition leaders in the National Assembly have appealed to all patriots in Pakistan to continue agitation for the restoration of adult franchise.

The appeal was issued after Opposition members of the Special Committee appointed in December, 1963 for determining an electoral system for the 1965 polls walked out of a Committee meeting on January 30 alleging that they felt the Government was not prepared to concede the universal demand for adult franchise.

Mr. Yusuf Khattak, leader of the group, said that the Government had lately made it clear that it had not changed its negative attitude on the franchise issue. "We must adopt all constitutional measures to make people conscious of the plans made by the Government to hoodwink the people. There should be no doubt in the mind of any citizen that the Government has never been sincere and has taken recourse to subterfuges to waste time to create the impression that it is willing to consider the popular demands of the Opposition leaders."

He stated that President Ayub Khan took cognizance of this popular demand in June, 1962, when he promised to set up a Franchise Commission to suggest changes. The Commission's report was kept "under cold storage" for over six months. It was only during the last session of the National Assembly at Dacca that the Government moved a formal resolution for the appointment of a House Committee to thrash out the franchise issue. However, the deliberations in the Committee had left the Opposition in no doubt that the Government was in no mood to change the electorate at least for another five years.

E. Ban On Jamaat-e-Islam Challenged In Court: A division bench of the Dacca High Court issued on February 3 a rule on the East Pakistan Government to show cause why the notice declaring the Jamaat-e-Islam an unlawful association should not be declared to have been passed without lawful authority, and as such of no legal effect.

The rule, returnable within two weeks, was issued on a petition filed by Mr. Tamizuddin Ahmed, a member of the Jamaat, challenging the validity of the notice.

F. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan Released: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, who took a prominent part in the struggle for India's independence under Mahatma Gandhi's leadership and is popularly known as "Frontier Gandhi", was released on January 30 from Haripur Central Jail.

It was reported that he had reached his village—Mohammed Nari—in Charsadda Tehsil.

Earlier reports had stated that he was removed from Lahore Central Jail to Montgomery to be treated in hospital there.

He had been in jail for most of the years since Pakistan came into existence.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: Mexico To Receive Atomic Reactor; GATT Report On World Trade During 1962; UNESCO Activities During 1963; Pope Paul's Visit To Holy Land; USA Launches "Ranger VI" Moon Rocket.

A. Mexico To Receive Atomic Reactor: The Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency decided on December 4, 1963 that Mexico would obtain a research and training reactor of the Triga Mark III model and the necessary fuel for its operation during the first five-year period from USA through the Agency.

The reactor would be owned and operated by the Mexican National Nuclear Energy Commission at a planned new Nuclear Centre near Salazar in the State of Mexico. The Centre would also have a 12 million electron volt Van-De-Graaff-tandem accelerator. The research groups at the new Centre would be involved mainly in analytical chemistry, nuclear physics, radiation chemistry, radio-bioloby, reactor physics and solid state physics. The Centre is planned to be operative in October, 1964.

The Triga Mark III is an advanced type of the standard Triga series. It needs an initial fuel load of 20,000 grammes of uranium enriched to 20 per cent in the isotope uranium-235. The Government of Mexico has indicated that it wishes to obtain the fuel from the United States, if possible as part of the US offer to the Agency of special fissionable material up to a yearly value of $50,000 for research or medical therapy use. The value of the uranium for the Triga and four grammes of uranium enriched to 90 per cent for fission counters is estimated at approximately $45,000. The Board was informed that USA would supply the enriched uranium free of charge under the terms of the offer to the Agency, provided the project would enter into force before the end of 1963.

B. GATT Report On World Trade During 1962: In a report on world trade in 1962 released by GATT (General Agreement for Tariffs and Trade) in Geneva on December 22, 1963, it was stated that world trade continued to expand during 1962 for the fourth year in succession.

The rate of expansion was higher than that of 1961, but much lower than that of 1959 and 1960.

The report reviewed the recent trends in world trade, analysed the structure of foreign trade of several developing countries and reviewed the trade during 1961 product by product, region by region and country by country.

The report said the value of world exports in 1962 was £138,500 million—$7,000 million above the 1961 figure. The increase was slightly more than 5 per cent compared with the preceding year. The corresponding figures for 1959 and 1960 were 7 per cent and 11 per cent respectively.

The report said that as in the past few years, trade among the industrialized countries accounted for an increasing share of world trade.

The total value of exports from non-industrialized nations to the industrialized areas of the world, their main markets, rose by 5 per cent between 1961 and 1962, and was thus expanding at about the same rate as world trade on the whole. At the same time, the share in world trade constituted by exports from the industrialized areas to the non-industrialized countries continued to diminish and amounted to 17.2 per cent of the 1962 world total as against 21 per cent in 1957.

The report said the most dynamic factor of trade expansion had been exports of manufactured products, as there was a "vigorous and continuous" increase in trade between industrialized countries.

According to GATT, the total value of exports from industrialized areas of the world exceeded $88,000 million in 1962, which was 5 per cent above the 1961 figure.

West European industrialized countries accounted for three-fourths of the total increase in the trade of the industrialized regions, while Japan, whose exports rose by 16 per cent, accounted for one-sixth of the total and North America (USA and Canada) for about one-twelfth.

The report said the total exports from the European Common Market countries rose by 6 per cent compared with 1961 and those of the European Free Trade Association by 5 per cent.

Dealing with the developing countries, it said the increase in the export earnings of the non-industrialized countries "with the exception of the petroleum-exporting countries of the Middle East had been substantially lower than the expansion in world exports and in any event quite insufficient to meet adequately the growing needs of the developing countries."

Industrial expansion in these countries had substantially reduced domestic demand for imported manufactured goods. The report said "the development of national industries leads to a progressive increase in import requirements of raw materials, energy and, more particularly, capital goods and semi-finished products, which it is not easy to satisfy if exports of traditional or new products do not develop fast enough. Moreover, import restrictions intended to stimulate domestic products may tend to encourage an allocation of resources in directions which are not optional.

"It is possible in particular that the efforts made to promote new industries may result in discouraging the development of the traditional activities which usually procure the major part of export earnings."

Report On South-East Asian Trade:

According to a report made public in Geneva on December 21, 1963 by GATT, the overall trend for trade in South-East Asia indicated only slight improvement.

The 100-page report, "International Trade 1962", showed South-East Asia's overall exports and imports as registering "relatively minor increases" in 1962 over 1961 of about $160 million and $360 million respectively. It revealed that exports showed a partial recovery from the decline suffered from 1960 to 1961.

South-East Asia's unfavourable trade balance, however, grew larger in 1962 as a consequence of increased imports which were almost 23 per cent higher than in 1959.

It added that the overall trade deficit "more than doubled" between 1961 and 1962, reaching a total of more than $2,700 million or about one-third of the total export earnings in 1962.

Most of the major export commodities of South-East Asia were affected by the decline in unit values. Rubber prices fell by about five per cent, with a total drop of 30 per cent in relation to the near-record level of 1960.

The average price of jute and manufactures fell by 16 per cent, due mostly to a 30 per cent decline in the price of raw jute. Tea also was affected by declining unit values, as were to a lesser extent cotton textiles, including clothings, and oilseeds and oils.

The unit value of sugar exports declined by about 3.5 per cent under the influence of a 20 per cent drop in the unit value of Taiwan's sugar export, "apparently due to a substantial reduction in shipments to the United States."

The only important commodity to show a fairly large price increase from 1961 to

1962 was rice, the unit value of which went up by 10 per cent.

World Consumption Of Coffee:

World consumption of coffee is expected to rise at an annual rate of 3.5 to four per cent in the next few years, according to a note prepared by the GATT Secretariat.

The removal of trade barriers, the note points out, can lead to an increase of about 100,000 tons in coffee export. It will also raise coffee consumption.

However, there may be some change in the pattern of consumption, particularly in West Germany and France. An increase in the consumption of Robustas may be more or less balanced by a lower share of this variety in France.

The West German market may thus provide a new outlet and a degree of compensation for those countries who export Robustas associated with France should they lose their preferential treatment on the French market.

The countries associated with France are likely to suffer some decline in their total export receipts from coffee if their prices were to be aligned with world prices.

C. USA Has World's Greatest Navy: The latest edition of Jane's Fighting Ships made its public appearance in London on December 20, 1963.

It said that both the US and Soviet Navies were taking more and more to heart the maxim: "Who rules the sea, rules the world."

The volume which is regarded as the British naval "Bible", said that the Soviet Navy was becoming an increasingly nuclear-powered and guided-missile-armed fleet; so much so that Congress in Washington had been told that the American Navy had only a very small numerical advantage over the Russians in nuclear underwater craft.

Jane's said USA still had the greatest Navy the world had ever seen with a total of 3,250 vessels.

"With such a huge fleet," it added, "it is perhaps not surprising that 18 years after the end of World War II, the US Navy is still largely composed of war-built tonnage."

The Soviet Union had developed a world-wide naval capability. It had the most powerful submarine fleet the world had ever known. There were believed to be over 430 effective submarines including 25 nuclear-powered (compared with America's 31) and over 40 armed with guided missiles. "The Soviet Navy has a new look which must have a profound effect on naval thinking and planning on both sides of the Atlantic."

"There is no doubt that the Soviet Union is developing a maritime strategy as the major part of her overall policy to extend her influence throughout the world. She is striving unceasingly and very successfully to compete with the West in all spheres of naval activity.

"USSR has made sufficient progress with the building of a new spearhead in the shape of new warships, including guided-missile ships and nuclear submarines, that she has been able not only to discard her long, streaming tail of older warships comprising pre-War and war-built ships, captured German ships, and former German, Italian and Japanese ships taken over by the Soviet Navy as War prizes or share of the Allied war reparations, but to supply surface ships and submarines to other countries, notably Indonesia, Egypt, and several Soviet satellite navies in Europe, and guided-missile-armed fast patrol boats to Cuba."

Jane's, now in its 66th year, gave particulars of 10,000 war-ships in the navies of 96 countries. It pointed out that the 1946-47 edition had listed 52 native navies while the current edition featured 44 more. "Some of these are no mere infants-in-arms but quite considerable fleets, notably those of West Germany, Italy, Japan and Indonesia."

It added: "It is somewhat ironical that while the navy of the mighty USA is in danger of becoming top-heavy with the weight of its out-dated, war-built hulls—although of course USA has built in recent years the biggest and most sophisticated warships in every major category—the navies of the so-called defeated nations are rising on a pinnacle of new steel, unfettered by the deadwood of a generation gone."

Jane's said it had been possible by past studies of statistics given in the book to watch the build-up of navies and see the ingredients of "a potentially explosive mixture". "Grouped in a wide circle round the South China Sea facing each other are the indigenous and divergent navies of no fewer than a score of the countries listed in this annual."

D. "Echo II" Launched By USA: An apparently fully inflated Echo II communications satellite, its radio beacons pouring out a steady stream of signals, whirled around the Earth on January 26.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration of USA said information about the new man-made star, a 135-foot-diameter balloon, was still sketchy, but the two beacons it carries to track its progress and transmit data on temperature were "working well."

"Its skin temperature too is about 450°C", a spokesman said, "which is about what we wanted. And it apparently inflated all right."

He said a full report on the inflation, which affects the tightness of the skin and its ability to reflect radio signals, would not be available until data under study could be fully analysed.

Meanwhile, the head of Russia's Space Exploration Committee hailed the orbiting of Echo II as strengthening friendly scientific ties between Russia and the United States. "A beginning has been made in joint Soviet-American space experiments," said Professor Anatoly Blaganravov.

E. UNESCO Activities During 1963: A United Press release on January 17 said that steps aimed at launching a world campaign for universal literacy and the successful conclusion of a campaign to ensure the preservation of the Nubian monuments were among the 1963 achievements of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

The UN General Assembly, acting on the basis of a UNESCO report on "World Campaign for Universal Literacy," unanimously adopted earlier in January a resolution which asked the Secretary-General, U Thant, to explore ways and means of supporting national efforts for the eradication of illiteracy through a world campaign and any other measures of international co-operation, both financial and non-financial.

An important development in the UNESCO education programme was the establishment of the International Institute for Educational Planning in Paris, headed by Mr. Philip Coombs, former United States Assistant Secretary of State for Education and Cultural Affairs.

The Institute was set up to help train specialists who can create sound workable plans for the development of educational systems. It was supported by a grant of $200,000 from the Ford Foundation and $150,000 by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The Institute expects to train 150 top-level planners in the next two years.

Since 1957, UNESCO has concentrated on a Latin American programme to extend and improve primary education in that area. Mr. Malcolm Adiseshiah, Deputy Director of UNESCO, told a Conference held at Bogota in August, 1963 that statistics showed that primary school enrolment in Latin America had increased by nine million pupils between 1956 and 1961.

Part of UNESCO's programme which continued during 1963 was to help operate four associated normal schools—in Colombia, Ecuador, Honduras and Nicaragua—to train specialists in various branches of education. UNESCO has also granted more than 1,000 scholarships to Latin American educators for universities in the United States and Europe.

The UNESCO campaign to protect the valuable monuments of the Nubian Valley in the United Arab Republic drew to a close in 1963.

Two international agreements relating to the salvage operation were signed on November 9 in Cairo, following a session of the 15-nation UNESCO Executive Committee for the International Campaign to Save the Monuments of Nubia. At that time, 45 countries had announced contributions, totalling about $17,225,000, and other donations are expected.

When the waters rise behind the Aswan Dam in 1970, most of the important temples will have been saved by this operation—including those of Abu Simbel, Debod, Taffeh, Dendur, Derr and Ellesya, and the "Pearl of the Nile," the Roman temple at Philae.

An agreement on the participation of UNESCO and the Austrian Government for the establishment of a European Centre for Research and Documentation in the Social Sciences was signed in November, 1963. The Board of the Centre voted to concentrate on comparative studies of programming and planning, social consequences of industrialization and the problems of the under-developed areas.

A world history in which comments of member-States of UNESCO were taken into account reached the publication stage during 1963. The first volume of the projected six-volume work, Prehistory and the Beginning of Civilization, by Jaquetta Hawkes and the late Sir Leonard Woolley, appeared simultaneously in the United Kingdom and the United States. The history is the work of an independent international commission of scholars, established by UNESCO in 1950.

The Bible retained its title as the world's most translated work, according to the 14th edition of UNESCO's Index Translationum, an international bibliography. In 1961—the year covered by the 1963 edition—the Bible was translated 246 times, and the works of Lenin came second, with 185 translations.

A Union of African News Agencies was set up following a UNESCO-sponsored meeting in Tunis in May, 1963 as part of UNESCO's programme to encourage the expansion of information media. News agency directors and Press experts from 29 African countries agreed to exchange news, train journalists, pool resources and improve services. The Union is a professional association designed to link existing news agencies and to help establish new ones.

Twenty nations have ratified UNESCO's Convention against Discrimination in Education. Forty-four are applying the Agreement on the Importation of Educational, Scientific and Cultural Materials, which exempts these materials from customs duties.

Scientists in many related fields met in Paris in May, 1963 to map out the programme for the International Hydrologic Decade, starting in 1965, which will concentrate on studying the world's waning water resources. Among recommendations made by scientists from 48 countries was the establishment of basic net-works to provide fundamental data on hydrological systems. The studies will centre on terrestrial waters.

While continuing an Indian Ocean expedition, in which 44 vessels from 20 nations are taking part, UNESCO helped to co-ordinate a new study of the tropical Atlantic. In early 1963, 14 research ships from seven nations began a systematic oceanographic investigation, which included a study of salinity, as well as geophysical, meteorological and biological observations.

The information collected will be turned over to World Data Centres "A" and "B", located in Washington, D.C., and Moscow. Reports and oceanographic atlases are being prepared by the United States National Oceanographic Data Centre in Washington.

The past year brought disaster to several countries as a result of earthquakes. UNESCO sent mission to Barce, in Libya, following an earthquake which took 350 lives, February 24; to Bali, where 1,460 persons were killed when Mount Agung erupted, March 17; and to Skoplje, Yugoslavia, where 1,000 persons died in an earthquake, September 1. Scientists appointed by UNESCO suggested that the site of Barce should be moved. In the case of Bali, a volcanological observation station on the volcano itself could give advance warnings to protect future generations.

F. FAO Activities During 1963: An official review of the activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) in 1963 was made in a Press release issued on January 17.

It said that FAO spent $10,800,000 in 102 countries for projects under the UN expanded Programme of Technical Assistance. Its Budget for 1962-63 was $31,185,000 and a Budget of $38,800,000 has been prepared for 1964-65.

The Governing Conference of FAO held its regular biennial session in November-December, 1963. It admitted eight new members, bringing the total membership to 106. The Organization also has six associate members. The Conference also re-elected Mr. B. R. Sen of India to a further four-year term as Director-General of FAO. It also elected Mr. Georges Haraoui of Lebanon as independent Chairman of the 27-nation FAO Council to succeed Mr. Louis Maire of Switzerland.

The Organization's activities for the UN Special Fund continued to expand, and by late 1963 it had been named executing agency for 128 approved projects (plans of operation have been completed and signed for 97) involving expenditure of approximately $101 million by the Fund, with similar matching contributions due from assisted countries. About 1,100 experts are engaged in the FAO|Fund projects.

The "Freedom-from-Hunger" Campaign finished its third year of operation in July, 1963. Highlights of the year included "Freedom-from-Hunger" week in March during which world-wide ceremonies were held to enlarge awareness of the problem of hunger, and about 500 million "Freedom-from-Hunger" commemorative stamps were issued by about 150 postal administrations.

The World Food Congress, held at Washington in June, 1963 brought together 1,300 experts in the fields of sociology, economics, nutrition, science and education, from developed and underdeveloped countries, to review the "Freedom-from-Hunger" Campaign's progress and to discuss the problems of hunger and malnutrition and their solutions. The Congress called for land reform, minimum price guarantees, the establishment of a pool of production requisites, greater efforts to obtain more complete and accurate data on world food consumption and needs, and the continuation of the "Freedom-from-Hunger" Campaign until hunger and malnutrition are defeated.

FAO reported that world agricultural production rose by two to three per cent in 1962-63. This increase was slightly more than the annual population growth of just under two per cent and thus partly made up for the setback of 1961-62 when, as a result mainly of wide-spread bad weather, the increase in production was unusually small. Stocks of coarse grains, wheat, sugar and soya beans declined and those of dried skim milk and cotton showed large increases.

The World Food Programme was launched jointly by FAO and United Nations to use food to aid programmes of economic and social development and it commenced its operations in January, 1963. So far, 56 countries have pledged $90 million in foodstuffs, cash and services towards the target of $100 million for a three-year period. The Programme has so far helped meet emergency situations in 11 countries at a cost of $7.2 million. By the end of October, 1963, there had been 95 requests from Governments for food aid in projects of economic development and special feeding programmes, with new applications coming in at the rate of 10 a month. At a total cost to the Programme of about $21 million, 24 of these projects had been approved. Firm agreements had been signed with seven countries and foodstuffs had started to arrive in three of them.

The Fertilizer Programme within the "Freedom-from-Hunger" Campaign, and the joint FAO|UNESCO World Soil Map Project received particular attention in 1963. The most recent meeting of the world Fertilizer Industry Advisory Panel, in February, 1963, pledged $300,000 for the third year of the Fertilizer Programme. It also pledged some $10,000 worth of fertilizer to be used for field trials and demonstrations, and it approved in principle an idea for pilot schemes to develop credit systems and improve marketing, distribution and storage facilities. More than 20,000 fertilizer demonstrations have been carried out in 15 countries in the Near East and North Africa, West Africa and northern Latin America, since the Fertilizer Programme began.

At its meeting in May, 1963, the FAO Advisory Committee on Pulp and Paper discussed the possible use of paper to accelerate primary education and economic development generally in the underdeveloped countries of the world. More detailed study was recommended of paper needs for mass communication. Also discussed was world paper and paperboard manufacturing capacity which, it was reported, would rise at an annual rate of 6.3 per cent from 80.2 million tons in 1960 to 108 million tons in 1965. The bulk of the expansion was likely to occur in Europe and North America. Preparations were started for an Africa-Near East conference on pulp and paper, to be organized jointly with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in 1965.

Under the "Freedom-From-Hunger" Campaign, an important project was launched in Peru for the production of fish protein concentrates for human consumption. Under another "Freedom-from-Hunger" Campaign plan to mechanize existing small fishing craft with outboard engines, arrangements were made to place a total of 150 engines in 10 projects, part of a continuing plan to place about 2,850 engines in small craft.

FAO continued assistance to Governments in the application of radio-isotopes and ionizing radiations to research in agriculture and food processing. Increasing attention was paid to the assessment of possible hazards which might arise from radio-active contamination of human diet through the disposal of wastes from atomic energy establishments or the dispersal of fall-out.

Results of the 1960 World Census of Agriculture continued to be issued in instalments and by the end of the year internationally comparable results had been issued for 45 countries. Planning was continued for the 1970 Census.

The International Cocoa Study Group met in Montreux, Switzerland (May) and prepared a substantially revised text of a draft agreement to stabilize cocoa prices; it requested the Director-General of FAO to ask the Secretary-General of United Nations to call a negotiating conference on cocoa. This conference was held in Geneva in September-October, but failed to reach an agreement and asked for further efforts and studies by the secretariat.

G. Pope Paul's Visit To Holy Land: Pope Paul VI entered Jerusalem (Jordan Sector) on January 4 to welcome-cries in many tongues for the first head of the Roman Catholic Church to make pilgrimage to the cradle of Christianity in 2,000 years.

The Pope, first Pontiff to travel by air flew from Rome to Amman in the morning and was greeted with outstretched hands by King Hussein of Jordan.

His mission of prayer and peace began with a visit to the traditional spot on the River Jordan where Christ was baptised by John the Baptist.

He stopped at the Church of Saint Lazarus just outside Jerusalem, where Christ raised Lazarus from the dead. Lazarus's tomb is set in the rock outside the present church, built 10 years ago.

He was preceded along the Via Dolorosa by a choir of Franciscan and Dominican monks, as he followed the steps of Christ to Calvary. He entered the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, to spend two hours at the site of Calvary and Christ's tomb.

He also visited Nazareth.

On the morning of January 5 he was welcomed at Megiddo by President Z. Shazar of Israel.

He returned on the night of January 5 to the Jordan sector of Jerusalem. There he visited the Sea of Galilee, at the spot where Christ was believed to have met the Apostles on their return from fishing. The Pope walked down rock stairs to the sea's edge and touched the water, with an expression of happiness on his face.

After a meal at a nearby monastery—prepared by a Vatican cook—he returned to the Church of the Annunciation and resumed his journey to the sanctuaries on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, including the Chapel of Primacy where Christ appointed St. Peter as head of the church. On the way to Tabgha on the shore of Galilee, he stopped at the Canal of Galilee.

In the city of Tiberias, large crowds cheered and crowded round him. A Christian Arab of Israel greeted the Pope in the courtyard of the Church of the Multiplication of Loaves and Fishes, kneeling before the Pope and offering small cups of coffee on a brass tray. Smiling, the Pontiff took a cup, drank it and blessed the man.

At the Mount of the Beatitudes, on the Sea of Galilee, Pope Paul dipped his fingers in the waters of the lake in veneration of its associations with Christ and his disciples. It was at this spot, according to tradition, that the risen Christ met the Apostles on their return from fishing. It was here that they took their meal and that Jesus asked Simon Peter: "Simon, son of John, dost thou love me more than these do?"

He later visited Mount Tabor, traditional scene of the transfiguration of Christ. The motorcade climbed the steep tortuous road to the peak, where stands the Basilica of the Transfiguration. The Pontiff drove along the lake's shore about 683 feet below sea level to just under 2,000 feet above sea level at the summit of this graceful mountain.

On a bare stone floor in the room where Christ is believed to have held the Last Supper, Pope Paul VI knelt in prayer. The room called the Cenacle is atop Mount Zion.

Pope's Messages To World Leaders:

On January 6, Pope Paul sent messages of hope for world peace to 224 world leaders to mark the end of his pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

He took Epiphany gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh to Christ's birthplace at Bethlehem and appealed there for Christian unity.

Celebrating Mass in the Grotto of the Nativity, he expressed profound happiness at his historic meetings with Patriarch Athenagoras of Constantinople in Jerusalem. The meetings, he said, gave him the "best hope".

Later, he called on the Patriarch for, in his own words, the "kiss of peace which our Lord has permitted us to exchange in this Holy Land."

The Pope returned to Vatican City on the night of January 6.

At his palace window he blessed hundreds of thousands of welcomers who filled St. Peter's Square and formed a cross of flaming torches to honour him.

"Grazie" (thanks), said the Pontiff, adding humbly: "I did not want to bother anybody. I wanted to come back to Rome in a quiet way."

"My trip," he said, "may have a huge historical significance. It may mark the beginning of great benefits for the Church and mankind."

Referring to his aim of Christian unity, expressed again and again in the Holy Land, he added: "I have had the fortune to embrace after centuries and centuries the Patriarch of Constantinople and exchange with him words of peace and fraternity. We hope this seed will ripen."

H. USA Launches "Ranger VI" Moon Rocket: The United States launched a space vehicle called Ranger VI, loaded with six television cameras, towards the Moon on January 30, but tracking stations across the country calculated that its present course would have to be changed if the spacecraft was to hit the Moon early on the morning of February 2, as was hoped.

The vehicle weighed 804 lbs.

The United States had made 11 previous attempts to launch spacecraft at or near the Moon, but all had failed to achieve their object. The Russians had announced three Moon flights, one of which hit the surface; another encircled the Moon and took the first picture of the side hidden from the Earth.

"Ranger VI" Hits Moon:

Ranger VI slammed into the Moon's Sea of Tranquillity early on February 2; but failed to send back pictures.

Scientists at the jet propulsion laboratories said signals received from their tracking station at Goldstone indicated that the six-camera television system had been switched on. But by 09.24 GMT when the spacecraft pummelled into the Moon there was no indication that the camera system was at full power.

It looked like the fourth successive failure to win detailed pictures of the Moon from a space probe.

Britain's Jodrell Bank radio telescope picked up the impact of Ranger VI 33 seconds after the predicted time.

Hopes were high that the United States would at last reach its elusive target with the fifth Ranger built and the fourth sent specifically to the Moon for detailed pictures. Then came the dead silence that marked yet another costly failure and another round of frustration for the JPL (Jet Propulsion Laboratories) team which had built, developed and recast the Ranger programme for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The cost so far totals more than $113 million. Ranger VI was to have paid off this huge investment with 65 feet of 35 mm film containing 3,000 pictures taken during the final 10 minutes of its flight. They were expected to have shown the lunar surface from 900 miles out down to 600 yards away with an anticipated clarity that would have shown a race-course on the first photographs to an object as small as an armchair in the final photograph—which was to have been taken 0.2 second before it crashed into the Moon.

Ranger VI went into its death-dive at an angle of 40 degrees to the Moon's surface. It was late lunar afternoon on the Moon and the Sun was shining in on that area at about 20 degrees, casting long shadows—perfect for the pictures scientists wanted. The shadows would have given them a means of working out heights of small objects in the area and may also have given clues to the nature of the objects.

The impact point was about 350 to 400 miles from the shadow line of the three-quarter, waning Moon as seen from the Earth. The temperature in that area would have dropped from the peak of 214 degrees, closer to the —250 degrees (Fahrenheit) which prevails during the 27-day lunar night when the Sun shines on the other side of the Moon.

Mr. Harris Schurmeier, Ranger project manager, told a news conference there was some indication that the trouble had been either within the six cameras in the spacecraft or in the two 60-watt transmitters which should have radioed the pictures back.

A Washington report on February 3 said that following the failure of the Ranger VI lunar probe, American scientific circles were now considering for the first time postponing the US manned Moon landing until the beginning of the 1970s.

Under the Apollo programme the first manned landing has been planned for 1969. The manned Moon programme can be delayed by both technical and administrative factors.

The failure to get back pictures of the Moon's surface through Ranger VI was described as "one of the great disappointments of the space age" by Mr. Kenneth Gatland, vice-president of the British Interplanetary Society.

He said: "The pictures would have revealed details which would have been of immense value in designing a manned Moon craft.

"One has every sympathy with the designers of the spacecraft who have seen their incredible experiment fall down within its last 10 minutes."

Sir Bernard Lovell, director of the radio telescope station at Jodrell Bank, commented: "I think this represents a very great achievement for American rocket engineers.

"This achievement is underlined by the fact that it is now 4½ years since either the Russians or the Americans have made a direct hit of this nature on the lunar surface, despite repeated attempts."

I. USA Puts Giant Satellite In Orbit: The United States on January 29 launched a 562-ton Saturn I super-rocket and put into orbit a satellite far bigger than anything Russia had produced.

The giant Saturn rocket, intended as a forerunner of the Boosters, which will land a man on the Moon within the next 10 years, gave USA at least a temporary lead over Russia in rocket supremacy.

President L. B. Johnson in Washington and millions of other television viewers across USA watched as the great rocket leapt into flaming life, seconds before lift-off.

The Saturn lifted off agonizingly slow at first, but picked up speed as the eight engines of the paraffin and liquid oxygen-powered first stage built up their powerful thrust from 475 tons of fuel.

Within minutes it disappeared into the sky, belching great clouds of flame and deafening the launch area. The second stage was ignited as planned, and accelerated the rocket towards orbit. Then came news that the satellite went into orbit on schedule.

The 37,700-lb satellite was an "inert" sand-filled package, carrying only a tiny radio tracking beacon to enable space trackers to follow its orbit.

The biggest payloads known to have been orbited by the Soviet Union were Sputniks VII and VIII, which weighed 14,292 lbs each.

Tracking data showed that the satellite was orbiting the Earth once every 94.8 minutes on a path which took it from 162 to 467 miles above the Earth.

J. Russia Launches Two Cosmic Stations With One Rocket: The Soviet Union placed two scientific space stations into different orbits from one rocket on January 30.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the stations were named Elektron I and Elektron II.

It said the successful launching was in connexion with the programme for "the investigation of the upper layers of the atmosphere and outer space".

"The separation of the Elektron I cosmic station from the carrier rocket was effected on the active section of the flight while the engine of the last stage was working.

"After the separation of the Elektron II cosmic station, the last stage of the carrier rocket continued its flight along the pre-set trajectory and gathering the necessary speed put the Elektron II space station on a pre-set orbit."

It said the fundamental task of the space stations was the simultaneous studying of the internal and external radiation belts of the Earth to get data on the nature, distribution in space and energetic spectrum of charged particles. The results of the research would be published.

K. ILO Activities During 1963: An official review of the work of the International Labour Organization (ILO) in 1963, released in New Delhi on January 24, said that the year had been one of continued expansion for ILO, particularly in its technical co-operation programmes.

New activities included the establishment of a unit within ILO to deal with the social consequences of automation and advanced technology, and of the division to conduct a promotional and educational programme for the elimination of discrimination in employment.

The membership of the Organization increased from 105 to 108 with the admission of Burundi, Uganda and Trinidad and Tobago.

The net budget increased from $11,115,438 in 1962 to $14,006,834 in 1963 and in June the International Labour Conference adopted for 1964 a net budget amounting to $16,388,799.

The International Labour Conference's 47th session was held in Geneva in June. It was attended by more than 1,000 delegates, technical advisers and observers from 102 member-countries and five territories. It elected an enlarged Governing Body of 24 Government seats, 12 Employers' seats and 12 Workers' seats.

In reply, the Secretary-General said that he fully understood and appreciated the views expressed, and wished to assure the ILO delegation that United Nations shared its grave concern over the apartheid question.

He said that an Assembly committee had reported a worsening of the situation in South Africa recently, and that the Security Council then had the problem before it at the request of 32 African States.

The ILO spent an estimated $15,109,000 on its technical co-operation programmes in 1963, as compared with $8,993,872 in 1962. The number of expert missions also showed a corresponding increase, rising to approximately 850 from 586 in 1962.

Technical assistance is provided by ILO under the United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance (EPTA), the United Nations Special Fund, the ILO regular budget and funds in trust. The ILO also participates in special programmes such as the United Nations programme in Congo (Leopoldville).

Expenditures under the Expanded Programme were expected to rise to approximately $5.5 million in 1963, as compared with $5 million in 1962. Allocations under the regular budget advanced to $1,268,000 from $562,908 in 1962.

A total of 42 Special Fund Projects had been assigned to ILO by the end of 1963, with a total allocation of about $36 million to be spent over periods ranging from three to five years. Of these, 24 projects were in operation. With the inclusion of Government counterpart contributions, totalling almost $58 million, the aggregate sums involved were expected to reach approximately $94 million.

Distributed by regions, 23.4 per cent of ILO technical assistance went to Africa; 34.4 per cent to Asia; 4.4 per cent to Europe; 22.5 per cent to Latin America; 14 per cent to the Near and Middle East; and 1.3 per cent to inter-regional projects.

In 1963, man-power projects absorbed 57.1 per cent of the total, while productivity and management development took up 13.6 per cent.

The ILO also provided technical assistance in the general fields of co-operation and small-scale industries, social security, occupational safety and health, workers' education, vocational rehabilitation and labour conditions and management.

The main task assigned to ILO by its founders in 1919 was that of building up a code of international law and practice in the labour and social field. International labour standards are set by the International Labour Conference in the form of Conventions and Recommendations. These, taken together, form the International Labour Code.

In 1963, the International Labour Conference adopted a Convention and a recommendation concerning the prohibition of the sale, hire and use of inadequately guarded machinery. It also adopted a recommendation concerning the termination of employment at the initiative of the employer.

The new instruments brought to 119 the total number of Conventions and recommendations adopted since 1919.

A total of 125 ratifications of ILO Conventions by member-States were registered during the first 11 months of 1963, bringing the total number of ratifications on November 30 to 2,821.

Countries are not bound to ratify Conventions, but they are obliged, under the ILO Constitution, to bring both Conventions and recommendations to the notice of their legislative authorities. Their reports are subject to supervision by a committee of independent experts and by the International Labour Conference.

L. Dust Coating On The Moon —Theory Challenged: Dust of highly porous soil covers the surface of the Moon to a depth of about 12 to 19½ inches, according to Professor Alexander Markov of the Pulkovo Observatory in Leningrad.

The Soviet news agency Tass said on January 29 that in this year's first issue of the magazine Avastia i Kosmonautika (Aviation and Cosmonautics), Professor Markov had refuted the theory put forward by a British astronomer, Dr. Thomas Gold, that the Moon was covered by dust up to 30 yards deep.

Dr. Gold, who is now Director of the Space Research Centre at Cornell University, New York, claimed in 1955 that exploration parties might disappear into the thick dust which he said blanketed the Moon's surface.

Professor Markov and another Russian astronomer, Mr. Nikolai Barabashov, contend that at least 70 per cent of the elements of the Moon's surface must lie at a very sharp angle to the horizontal plane and that therefore dust could not accumulate on the nearly vertical surfaces.

Professor Markov has also asserted that the reflection of radar beams from the Moon's craters had proved to be of a character to be expected when radio waves are reflected from hard rock covered with a very thin layer of white powder.

ADEN

A. Federal Government's Criticism Of Aden Bill: A report on February 11 said that the South Arabian Federal Government had protested over an Aden State Government Bill which seeks to amend the franchise.

The Bill, which was published in Aden and was due for discussion by the Aden Legislative Council on February 25 and for approval before the next election to the Council, was denounced by the Federal Supreme Council (Cabinet) as "retrogressive."

The Supreme Council said it was a measure which encouraged separatist feelings at a time when the Federal Government was trying to create a South Arabian nation.

The Supreme Council particularly condemned the proposed disqualification of Federal and Protectorate (Eastern Aden Protectorate) citizens who had been living in Aden for at least two years—a provision which has been in force for years. Under the Bill, to qualify as an elector a person must be born in Aden, or his father must have been born in Aden, or he must have been naturalized in Aden.

AFGHANISTAN

A. Panj Water Development Scheme: A message on February 14 said that an Agreement had been signed between Afghanistan and USSR on the utilization of the Panj river waters.

The Panj is a very fast-flowing river, rising in the Pamir mountains on the border between Afghanistan and USSR. Eventually, after joining the Vakhsh, it flows into the Amu Darya (Oxus). It is estimated that the river basin, including the upper reaches, has a power potential of over 150,000,000,000 kwh and accounts for 15 per cent of USSR's total hydro-electric power reserves.

Now that the Agreement has been signed, the project is to be carried out by the All-Union Water Power Design Institute. Initial surveys are expected to take at least two years as the site is located in a seismic area.

At present about two million hectares of land in the two countries is irrigated by the Amu Darya and this area can only be increased by another one million hectares at the most with the present resources; if, however, the Panj can be brought under control, almost six million hectares could be irrigated.

According to a very approximate survey, it should be possible to build 8 power stations on the Panj, with an aggregate capacity of 17,000 mw and an annual output of over 80,000 million kwh, the biggest being the Dasht-i-Jum (5,500 mw) and the Rushan (3,000 mw) stations.

BURMA

A. Curbs On Foreign Propaganda: The Government has promulgated a law aimed at curbing foreign propaganda activities.

Under the law, the Information Minister is empowered to set up a committee to inspect all libraries, museums and exhibitions. Any one setting up a library, museum or exhibition will need a registration certificate.

Offenders are liable to a fine of 2,000 kyats or three years' imprisonment.

It was stated that foreign propaganda had made inroads even into the remotest villages.

B. Take-over Of Foreign Airlines' Sales Agencies: The Government has asked all foreign airlines offices in Rangoon to hand over their general sales agency work to the Union of Burma Airways (UBA) by March 1.

The order affected IAC, BOAC and Pan-American airlines, which run their own branches in Rangoon. It did not affect the Soviet, Chinese and Czechoslovak airlines, for whom UBA has already been acting as agents in Burma.

KLM has already closed down its branch in Rangoon and suspended its services to Burma.

CEYLON

A. Talks On Language Issue: Informal discussions were held in the first fortnight of February between senior members of the Government and leaders of the Federal Party, which represents the Tamil section of the population, on the language problem.

The discussions revived hopes of a settlement of the problem.

Though Sinhala became the sole official language of the Administration on January 1, the Minister of Finance, Mr. T. B. Ilangaratne, on February 17 directed the Treasury that the change to Sinhala should be made without any extremism and without hurting the self-respect of those who prefer to transact business in Tamil or English.

Ministers and officials also held discussions on how to put into effect the Tamil Language (Special Provisions), Act, popularly known as the "reasonable use of Tamil Act."

It provides that Tamils can transact official business in predominantly Tamil areas in the Tamil language and can correspond with any Government department in any part of the Island in Tamil.

Reports said that the Government, which hopes that all political parties will treat the language question as being above party politics, is also studying proposals to establish new regional councils which will replace the existing forms of local bodies. It hopes by this means to decentralize the administration and also to enable the conduct of business in Tamil areas in the Tamil language.

Meanwhile, the Federal Party on February 15 postponed a "direct action" campaign, in view of the developments towards a settlement.

B. Curbs On Holiday Travel Abroad: The Government has banned holiday travel abroad as part of the measures to arrest the foreign exchange crisis caused by the rise in food imports.

The Island's foreign assets have declined by Rs. 200 million in the past six months to an estimated Rs. 390 million—the lowest since 1941.

The Government also proposes to cut drastically the imports of industrial raw materials and machinery.

The Central Bank had forecast a decline of Rs. 52 million in the external assets between October, 1963 and January, 1964 but the actual decline amounted to Rs. 153 million because of the unprecedented rise in world sugar prices.

C. Sale Of Textiles—Government Control: The Government has decided to control sale of textiles in the private sector, regulate the prices and prevent hoarding.

A Government communique said on February 5 that legislation for this purpose would be placed before Parliament.

Meanwhile, utility textiles available with the State-run Co-operative Wholesale Establishment of Ceylon will be issued at the rate of four yards per holder of a rice ration book during the period ending June.

The available stock for distribution during this period through about 4,700 co-operative stores is estimated at about 40 million yards, including the locally manufactured sarongs and articles.

A Government source said in Colombo on February 8 that China would lend Ceylon 24 million yards of cloth to help ease the country's shortage of textiles and exchange control difficulties.

China has also offered a gift of 12,100 tons of cement under an economic aid Agreement.

Ceylon's foreign reserves now are down to around $78 million.

CHINA

A. New French Envoy: The French Foreign Ministry announced on February 13 the appointment of Mr. Claude Chavet as Charge d'Affaires in Peking.

Mr. Chavet (44) was Consul-General in Oran (Algeria) and had served in East Asia before.

China has named Mr. Sung Chih-kung as its Charge d'Affaires in Paris (for background see page 5652).

Formosa Severs Ties With France:

Earlier, on February 10, the Kuomintang Administration in Formosa severed diplomatic relations with France.

The break was made known after French Foreign Ministry officials had declared that General de Gaulle's Government no longer regarded the KMT Administration as representing China in Paris.

The KMT action provided the French Government with a welcome escape from the increasingly awkward situation arising from the presence of the KMT mission in Paris after recognition of the Peking Government. When France announced recognition of the regime in Peking, the KMT regime, reportedly under American pressure, did not sever ties immediately.

The former French Premier, Mr. Edgar Faure, who played a key role in the French recognition of Peking, in a television speech on February 7 said France had two formulae—one for diplomatic recognition of the only China and another for arranging relations with a country named Formosa—but he stressed that no prior conditions had been accepted by the French in recognizing Peking.

The KMT announcement severing ties with France said France had ignored the traditional Sino-French friendship, damaging the unity of the 'free world,' seriously impairing the interest of the free world and France itself and violating the basic spirit of the UN Charter by recognizing People's China.

However, the statement said that although normal relations between the countries were cut off, "the traditional friendship between the two peoples will not be affected."

Softening In Japanese Attitude:

Meanwhile, a softening in the attitude of the Japanese Government towards China since the French recognition of Peking has been noted by political observers in Tokyo.

Government spokesmen in Tokyo have refrained from making any adverse comment against China. The Premier, Mr. Hayato Ikeda has refused to share the view of the American Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, that China follows a militant policy.

Mr. Ikeda has also refused to commit himself on the American policy of containing China. The Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayashi Ohira, surprised observers when he told a questioner in the Diet in the first week of February that the Chinese Government was a realistic rather than adventurous regime.

Though observers are agreed that Japan is unlikely to depart from its previous attitude of watching the general trend before deciding its policy on China, the ripples generated by the French-Chinese entente have caused the Government to manoeuvre itself towards a position divorced of hostility to Peking. This is underscored by reports of wide divergencies between Mr. Ikeda and Mr. Rusk on the assessment of China during the latter's recent visit to Japan.

Mr. Ikeda has also emphasized the Japanese friendship and closeness for the people of China and disassociated Japan from USA in this respect.

While Japan is anxious not to adopt a hostile attitude to Peking it is not willing to see Formosa's interest sacrificed in the process. Japan is, in fact working to see that Taiwan does not lose its seat in UN even if Peking were to gain membership.

However, Japan, being a close neighbour of China with long associations between the two peoples would not want to be among the last to recognize Peking. This will certainly be taken note of by China.

According to reports, Mr. Ikeda has spoken in favour of concluding technological, communications and cultural treaties and to work for further expansion of trade. A Japanese fair is to be held in China this year, while a Chinese trade fair is scheduled to be held in Japan this Spring.

B. Anniversary Of Sino-Soviet Friendship Treaty: China celebrated the 14th anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Soviet Treaty of Friendship on February 13 in spite of the quarrel with Soviet leadership.

Peking Radio said that the Soviet Ambassador, Mr. S. V. Chervonenko. was among the foreign guests who attended a party held in Peking.

In Moscow, Izvestia in a special article published to mark the occasion blamed the Chinese Government for the deterioration in Sino-Soviet relations.

The newspaper said: "It is not the fault of the Soviet people that in recent times the economic co-operation of the Chinese People's Republic with our country has been curtailed."

It repeated Soviet charges that it was the Chinese who had refused assistance from Russia in the heat of the Moscow-Peking ideological debate.

It declared that no force in the world would be able to destroy the "fraternal friendship" between the peoples of USSR and China.

It said "the Soviet people are convinced that this friendship will pass all tests and will overcome all the present difficulties."

He was understood to have explained to the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, Malaysia's stand on the Indonesian policy of "confrontation" towards his country.

Later, he called on Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Central Minister without Portfolio, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, Minister of State, and Mr. Dinesh Singh, Deputy Minister in the External Affairs Ministry.

The Indonesia-Malaysia conflict was believed to have been discussed at greater length at these meetings.

Mr. Lee was on his way home after a five-week tour of 17 African countries where he had gone as the personal representative of Tengku Abdul Rehman, Prime Minister of Malaysia, to explain his country's point of view in the situation now prevailing in South-East Asia.

His party included the Chief Minister of Sarawak, Mr. Stephen Kalong Ningkan and the Minister for Local Government in Sabah, Inche Harris Salleh.

He later called on the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan and was with him for half-an-hour.

Mr. Lee, who was due to leave for Colombo, cancelled his visit and left for Rangoon on February 26.

It was understood that the cancellation was because of the visit to Colombo of the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai.

B. Mountain Divisions For Defence: The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan said in the Lok Sabha on February 24 that all five mountain divisions would be ready by the end of this year.

In a statement laid on the table in reply to a question by Mr. Prakash Vir Shastri (Ind.), he said that one mountain division was practically ready. The other four were being raised.

He listed some of the important measures being taken to strengthen the defence. Two Scout battalions were being raised and the organizational structure of infantry, artillery and ASC units was being revised to make each army formation self-contained and capable of operating efficiently in the mountainous regions.

Some additional units had been sanctioned to make the army a properly balanced force. Some of the existing infantry divisions were proposed to be re-organized into mountain divisions.

Arrangements had been made to strengthen the Military Intelligence Directorate at Army Headquarters. The Command Headquarters had been re-organized by creating a new command.

He assured the House that the troops were being trained in the type of operations expected against China. Automatic rifles and other improved weapons were being introduced in the Army. The indigenous production of defence equipment and its procurement from abroad had been stepped up. The transport fleet of the IAF had also been augmented and communications in the border areas were being improved.

C. Refund To IMF: The Government of India has arranged to refund to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) a sum of $25 million, being the first instalment of $250 million (Rs. 119.04 crores) drawn from the Fund on August 1, 1961.

Under the terms of the drawal, repayment on the entire amount has to be completed by the end of July, 1966.

It may be recalled that the Fund provided the equivalent of $250 million in six foreign currencies—$110 million (Rs. 52.38 crores) in dollars, $60 million (Rs. 28.57 crores) in sterling, $45 million (Rs. 21.43 crores) in DM, $15 million (Rs. 7.14 crores) in francs, $15 million (Rs. 7.14 crores) in lira and $5 million (Rs. 2.38 crores) in yen.

Apart from the outstanding balance of $225 million India has a standby arrangement with the Fund for $100 million effective for one year from August, 1963. No amount has been drawn from this standby credit.

D. US Loan For Commodity Imports: India and USA concluded in New Delhi on February 24 an Agreement providing for an American loan of $225 million (Rs. 107 crores) "to finance commodity imports required to carry forward the Indian economy."

The items of imports for which the loans will be available are: steel, non-ferrous metals, lubricants, fertilizers, machinery and machinery parts, sulphur, rubber, tire cord, carbon black, caustic soda, DDT, chemicals, vehicle components and other components. Within these broad categories the Government of India will be free to set the amounts of imports according to the needs of the economy.

Nearly 80 per cent of the imports will be for private industry. It is expected that over 6,000 individual licences will be issued under this loan.

The loan is part of the US commitment of $435 million for the third year of the Third Five-Year Plan. It carries an interest of three-quarters of one per cent per annum for the first ten years and 2 per cent per annum for the remaining years. Repayment in dollars will be spread through 40 years after the first disbursement, with no payments for a period of 10 years.

With the latest loan the total of the US non-project assistance for the Plan amounts to $685 million (Rs. 326 crores). This means 48 per cent of the US commitment of $1,415 million (Rs. 674 crores) for the first three years of the Plan.

In granting non-project loans the US Government is said to have taken into account the urgent need for India to make full use of the industrial capacity already created.

The Agreement was signed by Mr. L. K. Jha, Economic Affairs Secretary, and Mr. Chester Bowles, US Ambassador to India. The Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari was present.

G. Army Officers Killed In Air Crash: An IAF Ilyushin-14 aircraft carrying Maj.-Gen. R. S. Grewal, Divisional Commander, Brig. J. M. Das and 11 others including the crew was reported missing between Srinagar and Udhampur since February 17.

Making this announcement in the Lok Sabha on February 18, the Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan explained that the aircraft took off on duty from Srinagar at 3 p.m. from Udhampur. The aircraft was in contact with the ground station until 3.32 p.m. after which the two-way contact was lost. At about 4-11 p.m. the Pathankot air base heard the aircraft calling up the Jammu airfield. An intensified search for the aircraft was continuing. Bad weather, which delayed early search operations, had cleared up.

Immediately after Mr. Chavan's statement Mr. H. V. Kamath (P-SP) asked for a parliamentary commission assisted by technical staff to inquire into the tragedy.

Mr. N. G. Ranga (Swa.) asked whether any sabotage was suspected and pointed out that earlier two MIGs had collided. Mr. Chavan did not reply to the first question, but said the MIGs had crashed in Jullundur and not in the Jammu and Kashmir area.

In reply to a question from Mrs. Renu Chakravarti (Comm), Mr. Chavan said the Ilyushin aircraft was in a different area from the place where some months ago a helicopter had crashed killing several senior defence officers.

A similar statement was made in the Rajya Sabha by Mr. D. R. Chavan, Deputy Minister for Defence. Mr. A. M. Tariq (Cong.) asked why the aircraft had taken off when the IAC had cancelled its service because of bad weather.

The Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Mr. Hukam Singh, hoped the plane would be traced and directed the Defence Minister to inform the House of any new developments.

The passengers in the aircraft were: Maj-Gen. R. S. Grewal, Brig. J. M. Das, Maj. Niranjan Singh, 2nd-Lt. V. K. Sharma, Capt. G. B. Gairolla, A|C W. G. Sawale, Sep. Jaint Singh, L|Nk Joginder Singh Parmar and L|Nk Gurdev Singh.

The crew consisted of Sqn.-Ldr. K. G. Kanitkar, Pilot Off. A. C. Vig, Sgt. H. A. Kanungo and Sgt. P. S. Parmar.

A week later, it was announced that the plane had crashed and all aboard were killed. The wreckage had been located.

H. Progress Of Third Plan—Mr. B. R. Bhagat's Statement In Rajya Sabha: The Central Minister of Planning, Mr. B. R. Bhagat, told the Rajya Sabha on February 20 that owing to adverse weather conditions the country would be faced with "another year of stagnant agriculture and relative shortage of food crops."

Mr. Bhagat, who was initiating the discussions on the mid-term appraisal of the Third Five-Year Plan (see page 5656), said that agricultural production particularly of grain had received a setback during 1962-63. "I am distressed to say that in the current year we have again been hit by the weather".

Although some improvement is expected in the production of rice and sugar, "owing to the unprecedented cold spell and the meagre Winter rains, the production of wheat, gram and other pulses is reported to have been heavily affected..".

Detailing the various measures for stepping up agricultural production during the current year, he announced that the outlay for agricultural plan for 1964-65 had been stepped up by about Rs. 20 crores.

In the field of education, he said the increase in the annual outlay for 1964-65 over the anticipated expenditure for 1963-64 was of the order of Rs. 31 crores. During the Third Plan over 100,000 additional scholarships for post-matriculation studies had been provided.

He said to speed up the implementation of agricultural programmes the State Governments had agreed to set up integrated and unified organizational committees at different levels. There was also a likelihood of sanctioning additional allocation for minor irrigation, soil conservation and intensive development programmes.

To ensure an increased supply of fertilizers a foreign exchange allotment of Rs. 30 crores involving an increase of Rs. 30 crores over the previous year had been made for 1964-65.

In the industrial field, he said that against the Third Plan outlay of Rs. 1,520 crores for the public sector industries and mineral projects, the expansion now envisaged would be of the order of Rs. 1,754 crores.

Among the new schemes are the setting up of an additional furnace at both Bhilai and Durgapur for pig-iron in advance of the Fourth Plan expansion programme to these steel plants. This has been planned to meet the expected shortage of pig-iron during the first year of the Fourth Plan. The establishment of a structural plant at Bokaro was also under consideration.

In the private sector also, he expected investments to be more or less of the same order as envisaged in the Plan.

He expected the supply position of cement to States to ease considerably with the restoration of cuts in quota made during the Emergency.

To meet power requirements in the Fourth Plan, he said, the Tiruchi boiler plant was being expanded. With a view to maintaining the lead in power generation, advance action had been authorized on 10 new power generation schemes with an aggregate benefit of 1.47 million kw. The sanction for some more schemes was also under consideration.

I. Survey Of The Economy—Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari's Report To Parliament: In an elaborate survey of the country's economy in the current year, the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari on February 21 presented to Parliament a picture showing the "promise of rising growth rates" in the basic fields of industry. But he admitted that these rates were somewhat below Plan expectations.

The survey emphasized that in the coming months it would be necessary to "strengthen the forces which contribute to higher levels of growth" not only in industry but also in agriculture. Presented to both Houses, the survey also stressed the need for "continuing vigilance over prices."

The current wholesale and consumer price trends reflected the growing pressure on supplies of grain and other essential commodities. This was attributable to both a rise in demand and a shift in the pattern of consumption. While the ultimate solution to the price problem lay only in an increase in production, continued action would be required to avoid excess demand and to strengthen Governmental control over distribution.

Referring to the country's balance of payments position the survey did not hide the Government's concern over the growth in the external debt falling due for repayment over the next few years. But it gave out the cheerful news that in 1963-64 India would have repaid a part of its drawals from IMF while the year before it had actually borrowed from that agency. Increased export earnings during the year had been the major factor contributing towards this improvement.

Reviewing the current year's Budget, the survey noted that the increased taxes on kerosene had checked the rising trend in consumption with a resultant relief to the balance of payments.

A considerable part of the survey was devoted to an analysis of the production trends in different fields, the price trends and of short-term measures taken to correct deficiencies. It mentioned the Government's decision to step up the procurement of rice to build up a substantial stock.

On measures to stimulate production, it especially referred to the price support and buffer stock schemes for raw jute, and to the raising of the minimum prices of wheat and sugarcane and the procurement prices of rice.

It also made special mention of the fiscal and price policies employed to stimulate production in priority industries, such as cement and coal, and said that the problems of steel, coal and electricity were receiving more detailed examination.

It emphasized that the need to accelerate the rate of growth had become all the greater in the context of substantially larger defence requirements. This must be achieved "in an environment of reasonable stability of prices", if the levels of living at the most vulnerable points in society were to be protected and raised and if the economy was to be freed from dependence on external assistance.

The survey said indications were that the rise in national income in real terms would be higher in the current year than in the first two years of the Plan.

The favourable situation in regard to transport, power, and other items which existed now would have to be made full use of so as to push production and incomes still higher during the remaining years of the current Plan.

It was estimated that the flow of production inputs to agriculture would be considerably higher in the coming years and said "the dependence on weather conditions should be further reduced."

The survey pointed out that the capacity of the cement industry was expected to rise by more than a third during the next two years. The petroleum refining capacity was expected to go up over the next two years from the current level of 6.8 million tonnes to 17.3 million tonnes.

It was hoped that as a result of the expansion of capital goods output and of the production of import substitutes, such as fertilizers and steel, the import content of economic development would be reduced.

Nevertheless, it was stated, there was an urgent need to increase export earnings further to enable larger imports of components and raw material to make full use of the industrial capacity and to reduce dependence on external assistance.

J. Contribution Of Industries To National Income—NCAER Study: The total contribution made by manufacturing industries to national income in 1960-61 was Rs. 1,892 crores with an employment of 180,00,000, according to a study made by the National Council of Applied Economic Research (NCAER).

The official estimate for the year (Rs. 2,193 crores) was on the high side by Rs. 300 crores.

Maharashtra made the maximum contribution of Rs. 383 crores, followed by West Bengal with Rs. 324 crores and Uttar Pradesh Rs. 164 crores. Madras contributed Rs. 171 crores, Andhra Rs. 71 crores, Mysore Rs. 84 crores and Kerala Rs. 74 crores.

In fact, according to the Council, five States—Maharashtra, West Bengal, Madras, UP and Gujerat—together accounted for as much as two-thirds of the national income generated in manufacturing industry. The joint contribution of Himachal Pradesh, Kashmir, Tripura, Orissa and Rajasthan accounted for a bare four per cent.

Releasing the report to newsmen in New Delhi, Dr. P. S. Lokanathan, Director-General of the Council, expressed the hope that the report would be useful to the planners in formulating the Fourth Plan. It was for the first time, he said, that such detailed estimates had been made available.

An interesting fact brought out by the study was the output employment co-efficient amongst the States, namely, net output per person engaged. Delhi, with a net output of Rs. 2,228 per person, topped the list while Maharashtra, West Bengal and Gujerat occupied the next three positions ranging between Rs. 1,810 and Rs. 1,860.

Andhra, Orissa and Rajasthan had, on the other hand, a very low co-efficient—Rs. 374, Rs. 443 and Rs. 495 respectively.

The main reason for the low figure for Andhra, Orissa and Rajasthan was that these States were very much dependent on household manufacturing establishments for employment.

According to the present study, household manufacturing establishments account for as much as 74.2, 83.3 and 65 2 per cent of the total employment of manufacturing industry in Andhra Pradesh, Orissa and Rajasthan respectively, whereas the corresponding shares in the net output are 34.8, 35.5, and 22.6 per cent.

As a contrast, large manufacturing establishments account for 7.7, 4.9 and 4.96 per cent of the total employment, though they contribute 33.4, 36.6 and 39.2 per cent of net output respectively in these States.

Delhi, Maharashtra and West Bengal, which have a high value of output-employment co-efficient, are comparatively much less dependent on household sector for employment.

K. Steps To Increase Foreign Investment—NCAER Recommendations: A substantial reduction in the present level of taxation on foreign investments has been urged by the National Council of Applied Economic Research (NCAER) in order to stimulate the flow of external private capital into the country.

The most important recommendation by the Council is that the increased taxes on personal incomes and corporate profits levied for defence purposes should be confined to Indian nationals and domestic investors. A downward revision of the rates of super-tax and super-profits tax applicable to foreign investors in different forms has also been urged.

The Council has urged a reduction of the present taxes on inter-corporate dividends and also on royalty income of foreign companies.

According to it, several factors such as the country's political and financial stability, its expanding market and its record in honouring commitments of profit remittances and capital repatriation have inpressed the foreign investor greatly. In spite of this, the flow of foreign capital was much less than what it could be. Venezuela accounted for eight to nine per cent of US investments abroad, while India's share was only 0.5 per cent.

Apart from simplification of procedures, it was necessary in the Council's view to undertake the following steps:

(1) Personal taxation. A system of tax-free allowance must be instituted for foreign technical personnel living in the country. The time limit of six months for tax exemption for foreign managerial personnel should be extended.

The tax on investment income of a non-resident should be limited to 30 per cent when his income consists only of dividends or interests. He should not be required to file any returns of income.

Pensions of foreign personnel should be subjected to tax at the rates applicable to the residents without taking into consideration their foreign incomes.

(2) Corporate taxation. In order to make the tax-holiday to new enterprises more effective, carry-forward facilities should be provided under the income-tax law.

The tax on inter-corporate dividends to foreign companies should be gradually eliminated. As a first step, the rate should be reduced from 35 to 25 per cent on dividends which do not enjoy the super-tax exemption.

The combined rate of income and super-taxes on royalty earnings of foreign companies should be reduced from the present level of 50 per cent to 35 per cent.

In order to enable a ploughing back of profits for expansion of business, private and closely-controlled public companies should be allowed to exceed the statutory percentage now permissible under the law.

The company should have the right of appeal against the application of penal provisions to a board of references.

Further Indian subsidiaries of foreign, private and closely-held public companies may be exempted from the penal provision of Section 104 of the Income-tax Act, as the question of evading progressive personal super-tax rates does not arise in the case of corporate shareholders.

(3) Registered professional firms. Registered firms in legal, accounting and similar professions, which are prevented by Indian laws and regulations from forming themselves into companies, may not be subjected to income-tax on the registered firm as such.

The partners of a registered professional firm may be allowed tax relief in respect of contributions to approved superannuation and provident funds, now restric-

L. Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddi Resigns As Andhra Chief Minister: The Andhra Chief Minister, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddi, said in Hyderabad on January 29 that he had sought the permission of the Congress President to vacate his office because of the Supreme Court judgment in the Kurnool nationalization of bus transport case.

He told a hurriedly called news conference: "I do not want to go into technicalities. The Supreme Court is the Supreme Court. I must bow to its judgment. I feel that I must quit office to lay some sound traditions in the country."

The Supreme Court had remarked that the allegation by the private operators (affected by the nationalization scheme) that the Chief Minister was "motivated by bias and personal ill-will against them stood unrebutted."

The Supreme Court had quashed three schemes framed by the State Government to nationalize bus routes in Kurnool district on the ground that they did not conform to the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act.

The judgment had said: "We are constrained to hold that the allegation that the Chief Minister was motivated by bias and personal ill-will against the appellants stands unrebutted."

Mr. Sanjiva Reddi said it was not just a case of a Government decision being reversed. The Supreme Court, which was the supreme judicial body, was not satisfied that the nationalization of the bus transport in Kurnool was purely on merits. Since it had cast some doubts, "I feel I should honour and respect its decision and vacate my office."

But, he added, he could not simply walk away. He had to take the permission of the party. "I have, therefore, written to the Congress President to immediately permit me to vacate the office of Chief Minister."

He said he had taken the decision without waiting for a copy of the judgment. He said he did not want to be taught morals by anybody. "I stand on a much higher level." The Chief Minister obviously had in mind the demand made by Mr. Tenneti Viswanatham, leader of the National Democrats in the State Assembly, that he should resign because of the judgment.

Leaders of Opposition parties welcomed the Chief Minister's decision.

Mr. N. Rajasekhara Reddi, Secretary of the Andhra Pradesh Council of the Communist Party, said it was a good step. Mr. Tenneti Vishwanatham congratulated Mr. Reddi on his bold decision.

On February 4, the Congress Parliamentary Board allowed Mr. Sanjiva Reddi to resign his office.

Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddi Becomes New Chief Minister:

A new Ministry headed by Mr. Kasu Brahmananda Reddi (54) was sworn-in on February 29.

The Andhra Congress Legislature Party, which met in Hyderabad on February 23, "regretfully" endorsed Mr. Sanjiva Reddi's desire to resign as Chief Minister following the Supreme Court's judgment in the "bus case", and requested him to continue to be the leader of the party.

Mr. Sanjiva Reddi agreed to continue as the leader and proposed that the Finance Minister, Mr. Brahmananda Reddi, should form a new Ministry.

The Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj, was present at the meeting.

Mr. Brahmananda Reddi moved a resolution requesting Mr. Sanjiva Reddi to continue as the leader and it was adopted unanimously.

Mr. Kamaraj told correspondents that he did not see any anomaly in Mr. Sanjiva Reddi being the leader and another person the Chief Minister.

Mr. Sanjiva Reddi, who assumed the Chief Ministership on March 11, 1962, after the last General Election, was in office for 23½ months.

This was the second time that Mr. Sanjiva Reddi relinquished office as Chief Minister before the expiry of the full term—the first occasion was in January, 1960, when he was elected Congress President after having been the first Chief Minister of the enlarged Andhra Pradesh since its formation on November 1, 1956.

N. Mr. P. T. Chacko Resigns From Kerala Cabinet: The Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. R. Sankar, has accepted the resignation of the Law and Revenue Minister, Mr. P. T. Chacko, from the Cabinet.

He announced this in the Assembly on February 21.

Mr. Chacko submitted his resignation immediately after his return from Madras where he met the Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj.

Mr. Chacko later left for his home in Vazhoor, Kottayam district.

Mr. Sankar met the Governor, Mr. V. V. Giri on February 20.

Mr. Chacko also met Mr. Giri to bid him good-bye.

He told newsmen that he might not make any statement in the Assembly about his resignation because it might give rise to more controversies which would not be in the interests of the Congress.

O. Maharashtra Budget For 1964-65: The Maharashtra Budget for 1964-65, presented to the State Legislative Assembly on February 19 by the Finance Minister, Mr. S. K. Wankhede, showed a revenue surplus of Rs. 51,00,000.

There are no new taxes. On the contrary, Mr. Wankhede announced reduction in the incidence of the State sales-tax on meals, clothing and medicines.

Revenue receipts for 1964-65 have been estimated at Rs. 188.45 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 187.94 crores. The surplus is partially accounted for by receipts of Rs. 20.21 crores expected from the taxation measures taken in the first three years of the current Plan, including Rs. 6.50 crores from Inter-State Sales-Tax. The yield of State taxes as they existed in 1960-61 is likely to go up substantially, as also the State's share in Central taxes.

As a result of "buoyancy" in revenues, the revised estimates for 1963-64 stepped up the surplus to Rs. 5.43 crores from the budgeted figure of Rs. 4,00,000, with revenue receipts at Rs. 174.21 crores (Rs. 160.66 crores budgeted) and revenue expenditure at Rs. 168.78 crores (Rs. 160.62 crores budgeted).

Mr. Wankhede attributed this surplus principally to an improvement in the growth rate of taxation in 1961-62, but also, to some extent, to the doubling of the one per cent rate of the Central sales-tax by the Central Government.

The following is the Budget at a glance:

(Rs. in Crores)

P. Bihar Budget For 1964-65: The Budget of the Bihar Government for 1964-65, presented in both Houses of the State Legislature on February 19, showed a small surplus of Rs. 51,00,000.

The total receipts in the consolidated fund for 1964-65 is Rs. 197.27 crores and the total expenditure Rs. 196.76 crores, thus leaving a surplus of Rs. 51,00,000.

The Budget was presented in both Houses by Mr. Ambika Saran Singh, Minister of State for Finance, on behalf of the Chief Minister, Mr. K. B. Sahay, whose speech was also read out by the former.

Mr. Sahay said that the surplus was likely to disappear in the course of the year for several reasons, the chief of which being Plan expenditure.

The total Plan outlay for 1964-65 is of the order of Rs. 78.92 crores, while the provision made in the Budget so far is only Rs. 75.17 crores.

Mr. Sahay said that even this provision could not stand unless additional resources were in sight, because additional non-Plan expenditure might have to be incurred to implement such decisions as the State Government might take on the recommendations of the Pay Revision Committee.

The Budget did not contain any fresh taxation proposal. Mr. Sahay said, however, that fresh resources have to be tapped through more economical operation of commercial and semi-commercial schemes of the Government, taxation and loans.

Q. Orissa Budget For 1964-65: Orissa's Chief Minister, Mr. Biren Mitra, presented on February 24 to the State Assembly the Budget for 1964-65, indicating a revenue deficit of Rs. 3.91 crores.

He did not propose to levy any new taxes. The Government would prefer to draw on the reserves rather than impose a new burden.

Mr. Mitra, who also holds the Finance portfolio, said provision had been made to float a loan of Rs. 8 crores in the open market and another of Rs. 5 crores for the Orissa Port Trust to help it execute the Paradeep project.

Revenue is estimated at Rs. 74,53,26,000 and expenditure at Rs. 78,44,77,000, thus leaving a deficit of Rs. 3,91,51,000.

The estimate for 1964-65 indicates an increase of Rs. 4,12,07,000 over the revised estimate for 1963-64 of Rs. 70,41,19,000 which in turn represents a rise of Rs. 2,81,59,000 over the budget estimate for the same year.

This buoyancy is attributed to increased receipts of Rs. 7,79,00,000 from taxation measures like irrigation rates, tax on motor vehicles, State trading in bidi leaves, electricity duty, increase in registration fees and increased grants-in-aid from the Central Government for Plan schemes.

New schemes costing Rs. 70,38,50,000—Rs. 26.68 crores in the revenue account and Rs. 43.69 crores in the capital account—have been provided in the Budget estimate. This provision for new schemes would leave a deficit of Rs. 19,39,31,000 in the consolidated fund of the State.

The consolidated debt of the State has risen from Rs. 203 crores outstanding on April 1, 1963, to Rs. 228 crores on April 1, 1964. This is expected to reach Rs. 268 crores on April 1, 1965.

R. Punjab Budget For 1964-65: Despite an overall deficit of Rs. 1.58 crores, no new taxation measures were proposed by the Punjab Finance Minister, Dr. Gopichand Bhargava, in the Budget estimates for 1964-65 presented to the Vidhan Sabha on February 25.

The deficit is expected to rise to Rs. 11 crores, because of the additional funds needed during the year for flood control schemes and those which will bring socialism to Punjab.

This gap will remain uncovered for the present in the hope that it will be closed by floating public loans. The Government hoped to "borrow a substantial amount from the people, particularly for flood control schemes".

The Budget estimates an income of Rs. 191.57 crores and an expenditure of Rs. 188.15 crores, showing a surplus of Rs. 3.42 crores. But since this surplus takes into account the Rs. 5 crores earmarked for Harijan welfare schemes, the resulting deficit is one of Rs. 1.58 crores.

The Budget estimates for the coming year provide revenue receipts at Rs. 112.67 crores and expenditure at Rs. 112.91 crores, thus showing a deficit of Rs. 24,00,000 on revenue account. The receipts show an increase of Rs. 1.65 crores over the revised estimates of Rs. 111.02 crores for the year 1963-64, and the expenditure shows a rise of Rs. 5.60 crores, the revised estimates being Rs. 107.31 crores.

A provision of Rs. 19.67 crores has been made for capital expenditure as against the revised estimates of Rs. 20.26 crores for 1963-64, showing a decrease of Rs. 59,00,000, mainly as a result of reduction in the Plan outlay for flood control and drainage schemes.

Dr. Bhargava announced that no shortfalls would be permitted in resources for the Third Plan, for which the original target of Rs. 231.39 crores would be maintained. About Rs. 120 crores (52 per cent) had been spent during the first three years. A mid-term appraisal of the achievements was now being made.

A disquieting feature of the Budget was Dr. Bhargava's admission that prices had shown an upward trend during the year. This he attributed to the low agricultural production due to floods and other natural calamities. Giving an account of the measures taken to check the rise in prices, he said that the "Government is closely watching the position and, if need be, would not hesitate to resort to State trading in foodgrains".

S. West Bengal Budget For 1964-65: West Bengal's Budget estimates for 1964-65, presented in the State Assembly by the Finance Minister, Mr. S. K. Mukherjee, on February 19 revealed an overall deficit of Rs. 2.47 crores, although there was a revenue surplus of Rs. 5.61 crores.

The deficit was proposed to be met by:

(i) Land reforms which would yield an additional revenue of Rs. 1 crore;

(ii) Increase of registration fees which would yield an additional revenue of Rs. 50,00,000; and

(iii) A levy of higher stamp duty on transfer of immovable properties and similar transactions, which would yield an additional revenue of Rs. 40,00,000.

The total revenue receipts for 1964-65 were estimated at Rs. 135.52 crores against Rs. 128.64 crores in the revised estimate for 1963-64. The revenue expenditure for 1964-65 was placed at Rs. 129.91 crores, against Rs. 120.83 crores in the revised estimate for 1963-64.

There was thus a revenue surplus of Rs. 5.61 crores for 1964-65. There was, however, a deficit of Rs. 8.19 crores outside the revenue account. This, together with the opening balance of Rs. 11,00,000 resulted in an overall negative closing balance of Rs. 2.47 crores.

The Government proposed to raise a loan of Rs. 7 crores from the market in 1964-65 to finance the development schemes.

Besides, the State Electricity Board would also raise a loan of Rs. 3 crores for expenditure on schemes included in the State Plan.

T. Andhra Pradesh Budget For 1964-65: The Andhra Pradesh Budget for 1964-65, presented by the State Finance Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddi, to the State Assembly on February 21, showed a nominal surplus of Rs. 15,00,000.

However, he said with the Government's decision to increase dearness allowance, involving an expenditure of Rs. 1.84 crores, the surplus would be converted into a deficit of Rs. 1.79 crores.

The Budget did not envisage any taxes. The increase under State excise duties and sales-tax reflected the full effect of the new taxation measures introduced during the course of 1963-64.

The total revenue receipts for 1964-65 was estimated at Rs. 136 crores and the expenditure at Rs. 135.85 crores.

Mr. Reddi admitted that Central aid for next year's Plan would be limited to Rs. 43.05 crores and the balance of Rs. 29.49 crores would have to be raised by the State through open market borrowings and better collection of existing taxes.

He announced that the State would subscribe Rs. 2,50,000 (Government Rs. 1,00,000 and co-operative institutions Rs. 1,50,000) to the Centrally-sponsored Fruit Export Corporation.

He drew a dismal picture of industrialization. The progress of the two fertilizer projects to be set up in the private sector at Kothagudem and Visakhapatnam had been rather "slow". He announced that the State Government would guarantee up to Rs. 75,00,000 to the Industrial Development Corporation for underwriting the capital issue of Coromandel Fertilizers at Vizag.

W. Major John Dias Passes Away: Major John D. Dias (35), the well-known mountaineer who led the second Indian expedition to Mt. Everest in 1962, died on February 24 of cerebral haemorrhage in the Military Hospital in New Delhi.

Maj. Dias, who was Chief Instructor at the High-Altitude Warfare School, had been deputed for a special course to USA. The course commenced on January 5 and Maj. Dias fell ill after five weeks. He was flown back to India on February 15.

Indian mountaineering has suffered a great loss in the death of Maj. Dias. Commissioned into the Garhwal Rifles in 1948, he was a Ski-ing Instructor at the Winter Warfare School first in 1950 and then again in 1952. He did the basic course at the Himalayan Mountaineering Institute, Darjeeling, in 1954.

He accompanied the late Maj. N. D. Jayal's expedition to Kamet (25,447 feet) in 1955, which, apart from succeeding in its main objective, scaled Abi-Gamin (24,130 feet), and he was among those who climbed the second peak.

He was a member of K. F. Bunshah's successful expedition to Cho-Oyu (26,750 feet) in 1958 and was with Maj. Jayal at the time of his death on the way to this mountain. He was also a member of Gurdial Singh's expedition to Nanda Devi in 1961, and was among those who climbed Devistan I and Maiktoli.

Leading the second expedition to Everest, Maj. Dias, as a member of the support party, went up to the South Col (25,850 feet). His summit party, comprising Inst.-Lt. M. S. Kohli, Sonam Gyatso and Hari Dang, reached 28,000 feet before being hurled back by foul weather.

INDONESIA

A. President A. Sukarno Alleges Encirclement Plot By Britain: Speaking to a post-prayer congregation in a mosque in Djakarta on February 15, President A. Sukarno claimed that he had documentary evidence of a British plan to use Malaysia to encircle and undermine Indonesia.

He said he had received the document after the burning of the British Embassy in Djakarta in September, 1963.

In London on February 16, the British Foreign Office and the Commonwealth Relations Office denied any plan of this nature.

A Government spokesman added: "We have never overtly or in any other way used Malaysia as a springboard against Indonesia."

According to a London Times despatch, it is naturally always possible that, in the confusion consequent upon the sacking of the Embassy (see page 5504) some papers were not locked away, before the staff were forced to leave the building. Clearly any confidential file might contain criticism of members of the Indonesian Government or the diplomatic community, which could be embarrassing to British representatives, if published, though the relevance and importance of such criticism must largely have vanished by now.

Such a file could also contain speculation on what might happen in Indonesia, if, for instance, the economic situation deteriorated much further. Clearly in that case a process of regional fragmentation might take place—such as happened at the time of the Sumatra rebellion in 1958.

President Sukarno had made similar claims on other occasions since the sacking of the British Embassy, but had never produced the documents themselves.

B. Famine Threat In Central Java: The Deputy Governor of Central Java, Mr. Sujono Atmo, said in Semarang on February 16 that an estimated one million people were facing starvation after the longest drought and the worst rat plague within living memory in the region.

He told journalists that 12,000 people were being treated for malnutrition in provincial Government hospitals and special clinics. Fifty persons had died already this year while undergoing medical treatment for hunger. About 15,000 peasant farmers and their families had deserted their barren ricefields in outlying districts to become beggars scrounging for food in Semarang, the provincial capital.

C. Assurance To Foreign Oil Companies: The Department of Basic Industries and Mining announced in Djakarta on February 20 that the Government had no intention of taking over foreign oil companies operating in the country.

The announcement said that the Government hoped the trade unions would "understand the Government's position and divert their intentions of taking over foreign oil companies towards safeguarding the smooth running of the undertakings...." This would "help to stabilize domestic oil production".

Meanwhile, the Permigan State oil company council has agreed to the workers' action in taking over the Shell Oil Company and handing it to the Government. The Permigan company had mining rights and were contractors of Shell.

The same day (February 20), in a speech in Djakarta, President Sukarno said that foreign countries which were supplying aid to Indonesia but did not approve of "the progress of the Indonesian revolution" were welcome to withdraw their support. Indonesia was a country rich in natural resources and man-power, and the people were united behind the common cause.

He said: "You may withdraw your economic aid. We will not withdraw one step".

IRAN

A. Army Drive Against Illiteracy: A despatch on February 15 said that Iran's peasants have over the past year witnessed the incursion of a curious kind of soldier into their villages.

He carried the rank of sergeant, but he is a teacher rather than a military man. On his chest, he wears a cloth badge depicting the Sun bursting with a book, across which lies a pen.

There are at present some 3,000 of these soldiers scattered in villages across Iran, from Azerbaijan to Baluchistan, from Khorasan to Khuzistan. They are the advance guard of Iran's latest plan to battle against rural illiteracy.

In spite of heavy expenditure, Iran remains faced with a large education problem. Primary education was last year available to only two out of every 10 village children. There is proportionately twice as much primary class-room space in the towns, but nearly 80 per cent of the adult population is still illiterate.

Nothing less than a crash programme could hope to make a significant dent in this ignorance. The Government's answer has come in the form of a Literacy Corps, a scheme under which high school graduates are recruited into the army and then sent off to rural areas to teach villagers to read and write.

The plan is sponsored jointly by the Ministries of Education and War, and financed out of development funds. Army conscripts may volunteer to join the corps instead of doing normal military service. So far, the volunteers have outnumbered conscripts by two to one.

A young man entering the Literacy Corps undergoes four months of training. During this period he is treated as a regular soldier. He wears uniform and lives in barracks. He gets the army haircut and keeps army hours. For the first two months, he is initiated into army life. His training includes marching drill, infantry practice, use of small arms, map-reading, and mock attacks.

His schedule for the second two months reads like an intensive teacher-training course. He is instructed in teaching methods for Persian, arithmetic, science, physical education, children's games. Supplementary training is given in agricultural and vocational teaching methods, village sanitation, health and community development. There are, in addition, guest lectures by officials from the Ministries of Health and Agriculture and from Iran's community development organization.

The first group of 2,500 corpsmen completed their training and were assigned to their villages in December, 1962. A second group of 600 joined them a few months later. By the end of 1964, another 3,500 teachers will be in the field. Each corpsman serves out his regular 18-month army term in the Literacy Corps.

The appearance of the corpsman in a village is preceded by visits from a member of the 200 supervisors assigned to the corps by the Ministry of Education. Each supervisor is in charge of 10 to 15 corpsmen. The supervisor talks to the village headman and village elders; he attempts to persuade them of the advantages of the Literacy Corps idea.

The Literacy Corps has already made a substantial contribution to rural education. Before the Literacy Corps, there were 18,000 rural teachers in the field. If the Corps succeeds in putting 6,000 teachers in the villages at any one time (actual plans are even more ambitious), this would increase the teaching force by 33 per cent. Out of 1,700,000 primary school students in the country, only 700,000 of them come from rural areas. The Literacy Corps has added some 150,000 students to this figure.

IRAQ

A. Formation Of National Oil Company—Talks With IPC: After the announcement over Baghdad Radio on February 8 of the formation of the new State-owned National Iraqi Oil Company, the Oil Minister, Dr. Abdul Aziz Wattari, gave further details at a news conference on February 9.

The new Company is to have a £25,000,000 capital and will have the right to seek foreign capital not exceeding three times its own capital. It will have financial and administrative independence and the right to operate throughout Iraq, except in the 740 square miles still retained by the Iraq Petroleum Company (IPC) after the remainder of their original area of 175,000 square miles had been unilaterally taken from the Company under General A. K. Kassem's Law 80 passed in December, 1961.

The National Oil Company is being given six months to decide the areas it proposes to operate in, will share its profits (which are not expected for three or four years) on a 50-50 basis with the Government and will have a six-man board of directors, three to be Government officials.

It will take over the Government oil wells at Khanaquin and market crude oil and refined petroleum.

Dr. Wattari confirmed that 12 international companies had already submitted offers to take part in oil exploration in areas taken over from IPC. The attitude of the most experienced oil men in the business has hitherto been that they would not risk a long and costly legal action with the IPC shareholders who still maintain firmly that Law 80 is illegal, and whose request to the Iraqi Government for arbitration under the terms of the concession agreements has not been met. However, both individual and company newcomers to the field are known to have been staking their claims with the Government for many months now, and bringing pressure to assure the Government that "they can get away with it".

The expected reaction of the Iraq Petroleum Company is a statement that the new Law as at present reported "would constitute a further violation of the three companies' agreements with the Iraq Government" and there is more than a hint in their attitude that the intention to implement Law 80 by the Iraqi Government does not provide a favourable ambiance for the suggested resumption of talks. Their attitude remains that Law 80 must be altered.

Dr. Wattari made it clear that the Government had no intention of nationalizing the existing companies, but on the contrary, so long as they do well and give part of their profits to the Government (which, however, wants at least 2 dinars 300 fils per ton of oil exported in place of the current royalty of 2 dinars), the Government would assist them in every way to solve their problems in a peaceful fashion.

Crude Oil Production:

Production of crude oil in January amounted to 5,352,000 long tons, compared with 4,680,725 long tons in January, 1963.

Output for the Iraq, Basrah and Mosul petroleum companies as compared with 1963 were as follows:

	January, 1963 (in long tons)	January, 1964 (in long tons)
Iraq Petroleum Company	3,607,026	3,817,000
Basrah Petroleum Company	774,753	1,422,000
Mosul Petroleum Company	98,946	113,000
Total	4,680,725	5,352,000

B. Government Plans For Northern Iraq: Plans of the Government for Northern Iraq after the cease-fire between the Kurds led by Mullah Mustapha Barzani and the Iraq Army were announced in Baghdad by the Minister of Guidance, Mr. Abdul Karim Farhan.

He told a news conference that the cease-fire was complete in all areas and Army units were withdrawing gradually to their encampments according to a special plan.

Prisoners of both sides were in the process of being released, and he said the Government was anxious to abolish the emergency measures, including the military courts in the north and the revolutionary court in Baghdad.

It was the Government's intention to reconstruct the north, and he believed this would cause a boom in the national economy. Many fertile areas had been deserted during the hostilities, but these would be recultivated.

He said: "The Kurds are a great part of the Iraq nation who enjoy the same rights as other citizens. They are close brothers linked to us by history, religion, intermarriage and a common destiny."

Asked if Mullah Mustapha wanted to leave Northern Iraq for any other Arab country, he replied that he enjoyed the rights of any other citizen and was entitled to go anywhere he wished.

The reconstruction plans, approved by a special Cabinet meeting, are to be implemented as soon as possible. They include the construction of a net-work of roads linking the north with central and south Iraq, and the building of a number of hospitals, clinics, police posts, and schools. People will be assisted to reconstruct their damaged homes, villages will be revived on modern lines, and industrial projects will be created which depend on the raw materials available in the north. The plan will encourage and develop agriculture and employ the most modern implements to cultivate the land.

The Government newspaper Al Jumhour published several interviews with Ministers who gave further details of the Government's intentions. All restrictions on the marketing of foodstuffs are to be abolished. Employees dismissed because of the emergency are to be re-instated. The Government is to build a 3-million-dinar (£3 million) sugar mill and lay a pipe-line for natural gas from Kirkuk to Baghdad.

Mr. Farhan also said the Government intended to build a television station for the north and a medium-wave radio station, both of which would broadcast to the Kurdish people in their own language.

ISRAEL

A. Atomic Power To Cure Sea Water—US Offer: The US President, Mr. Lyndon B. Johnson, announced on February 6 plans for American co-operation with Israel in search of ways to turn salt water into fresh water through the use of nuclear science.

The White House said this would mark the first joint venture of the United States and another country in important desalination research.

In an address prepared for the 18th annual dinner of the Weizmann Institute of Science, Mr. Johnson said: "This nation has begun discussions with the representatives of Israel on co-operative research in using nuclear power to turn salt water into fresh water."

The Weizmann Institute, named for Dr. Chaim Weizmann, the first President of Israel, has long been engaged in research aimed at converting salt water into fresh water. Israeli scientists see this as a possible avenue for bringing ample water to the parched Negev desert.

Mr. Johnson said that water "should never be a cause of war—it should always be a source for peace."

He said USA was "equally ready to co-operate with other countries anxious to cure water shortages."

Israeli Pledge:

Israel's Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, pledged on February 9 that Israel's achievements in water desalination would be placed at the disposal of her neighbours in a region thirsty for water.

He was reporting to the Cabinet on President Lyndon Johnson's statement on US-Israel co-operation on the use of nuclear energy for converting sea water to sweet water.

He said Israel would welcome continuation of co-operation with USA in this project and in its expansion.

Arab Reaction:

A Cairo message on February 8 said there had been a flare-up in the Arab Press over President L. B. Johnson's proposal to Israel on desalination of sea water.

Cairo papers said it would mean that America would give Israel a large atomic reactor to generate electricity for turning sea water into fresh water. It would also mean, the papers added, that America would train Israeli people in the handling of atomic secrets.

The atomic plant given to Israel would consume large supplies of uranium which in the process of operation would be converted into plutonium used in the production of atomic weapons.

This, the newspapers said, would create a great imbalance in West Asia because the Arabs would neither have such a large atomic reactor nor specialised knowledge in atomic science as would be given to the people of Israel.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Such a step, they added, would violate the American policy of stopping the spread of atomic weapons and dissemination of nuclear 'know-how.'

Meanwhile, the Palestinian representative in the Arab League, Mr. A. Shukairy, said on February 7 that Mr. Johnson's statement would mean that America would help Israel in obtaining fresh water to irrigate the Negev desert, 99 per cent of which belonged to the Arabs according to United Nations.

Mr. Shukairy said: "If Mr. Weizmann (first Israeli President) himself were to rise from his grave he would not have praised Israel as President Johnson did."

JAPAN

A. Trade Agreement With Cuba Extended: Japan has decided to extend the Cuba-Japan Trade Agreement, which is expiring on July 20.

It added that the United States would understand Japan's position:

—That it must import large quantities of sugar from Cuba and must expect counterpart goods in exchange.

—That there is nothing in the existing Agreement which is likely to irritate Washington. The Agreement provides for reciprocal treatment in shipping, trade and tariffs.

The Agreement was signed on July 24, 1961—to be run for three years and to be extended automatically unless a three-month notice of abrogation is given by one of the two parties. Consequently, Japan in extending the Agreement will not give any notice.

During 1962 $46,600,000 worth of trade, both ways, was done between the two countries but during 1963, the amount dwindled down to $26 million on account of the American blockade of the island. Japanese Government sources expected a considerable increase in the trade volume this year.

KOREA (South)

A. Mr. D. Rusk's Visit: The US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, made a flying visit to South Korea on January 29 and had a meeting lasting two hours with President Park Chung Hee.

Mr. Rusk was accompanied by other members of the United States delegation which had spent the past few days in Tokyo attending the third meeting of the US-Japan committee on trade and economic affairs.

The party spent six hours in Seoul before setting off on the return journey to USA.

Mr. Rusk said in a statement on arrival that USA would "continue to stand guard at your side on this rampart of freedom".

After his two-hour meeting with President Park he said the talks had been "profitable".

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued at the close of the talks said Mr. Rusk and President Park had agreed that early completion of the South Korean-Japanese talks "would be of significant benefit" to both countries and to the 'free world' in general.

Mr. Rusk agreed that South Korea would need continued economic aid from USA, but reportedly warned Gen. Park that such grant aid could not be expected to go on indefinitely.

In a memorandum handed to Mr. Rusk, South Korea asked USA to maintain grant aid and farm surplus assistance for 1964 at a $90 million level.

The memorandum asserted that any reduction in the size of US forces in Korea and of the 600,000-man South Korean force would be inadvisable "in view of the deteriorating situation in the Far East."

[South Korea relies heavily on USA to support its large army, and it was believed that a cut in aid would make a reduction of military strength inevitable.]

The joint communique emphasized, however, that "it was agreed that a powerful Korean and United States force adequate for the defence of the Republic of Korea would be maintained to meet the continuing Communist menace in the Far East."

It said President Park and Mr. Rusk had discussed the "implications of the recognition of Communist China by France for the security of free world countries."

MALAYSIA

A. Doubts About Further Peace Talks With Indonesia: The Foreign Ministry, in a statement on February 13, expressed doubts about the value of further peace talks with Indonesia.

It based its opinion on Indonesia's declared unwillingness to withdraw her forces from Sabah.

The issue of withdrawal of Indonesian fighting men from Malaysia dominated the tripartite discussions (between Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines) in Bangkok from January 5 to 10 (see page 5669).

Malaysia holds that a continued cease-fire can be successful only if Indonesian forces are withdrawn. The Indonesian stand is that both the cease-fire and withdrawal are linked with over-all political settlement of the Malaysia dispute.

Withdrawal was not touched on in the Joint Statement (text given below) after the Bangkok meeting, but an attached reservation by the chief Malaysian delegate, Tun Abdul Razak, the Deputy Prime Minister, said that his country believed withdrawal to be essential for continued peace.

The Foreign Ministry statement said that Dr. R. Subandrio, the Indonesian Foreign Minister had promised to communicate by February 12 or 13 the decision of President Sukarno on Tun Abdul Razak's reservation.

"Since the conclusion of the Bangkok meeting nothing has been heard from the Indonesia side", it said. "However, yesterday Dr. Subandrio was reported to have declared that the Indonesian troops would not be withdrawn from Malaysian territories prior to a political settlement of the Malaysian crisis.

"He is also reported to have said that he would be sending liaison officers to Bangkok to arrange for supplies to be dropped by aircraft to Indonesian guerrillas inside Malaysian territory."

The Malaysian Government had grave doubts about the usefulness of further talks with Indonesia, because "it is now clear that Indonesia has no intention of making the cease-fire effective."

It added: "The proposal to drop supplies to Indonesian guerrillas in Malaysian territories cannot be entertained.

"The Malaysian Government considers that this latest move by Djakarta is calculated to give a semblance of the existence of 'occupied' areas within Malaysia, whereas in actual fact there are not more than 200 terrorists, including Indonesian 'regulars' and 'irregulars' in Malaysian territory on the run.

"Any implementation of that move cannot be regarded otherwise than as a further act of aggression which will not be tolerated.

"The Government of Malaysia will exercise its powers and take all action as necessary in accordance with the laws of the country, including those pertaining to the maintenance and preservation of public security within its own territory."

Text Of Bangkok Communique:

Meanwhile, the following is the text of the joint communique issued at the close of the tripartite talks in Bangkok that brought about the cease-fire:

[An account of the talks and the communique was briefly given on page 5669].

"On the invitation of H.E. Thanat Khoman, the Foreign Minister of Thailand, a meeting between Dr. Subandrio of Indonesia, Tun Abdul Razak of Malaysia and Mr. Salvador P. Lopez of the Philippines was held at Bangkok from February 5 to 10, 1964 to discuss and resolve their present differences on the basis of the principles and spirit of the Manila Agreements.

"In frank and free informal discussions, which were also attended by Foreign Minister Thanat Khoman, the three Ministers had a full exchange of views on the problems affecting the relationship between their respective countries.

"In the spirit of Mushawarah Maphilindo, the three Ministers reviewed the implementation of the Manila Agreements with a view to enabling the three Governments to re-affirm their adherence to the principles and objectives of the said Agreements.

"They were satisfied to note the degree of progress made towards a better understanding of each other's position and in their efforts to find a common approach for the solution of their differences and common problems.

"The three Ministers shared the conviction that their present differences could best be solved on the basis and within the frame-work of the principles and spirit of the Manila Agreements.

"They welcomed the cease-fire with regard to the fighting in Sabah and Sarawak as a means of creating a favourable atmosphere for Mushawarah Maphilindo and they agreed on certain detailed arrangements for making it effective as set out in the Appendix attached hereto, together with the reservation made by the Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia thereto. They also agreed to invite the Secretary-General of United Nations to designate Thailand to supervise the cease-fire.

"The three Ministers decided to study further proposals for resolving the main political issues in consultation with their respective Governments and in this context they agreed that prior to a summit meeting another meeting at ministerial level should be convened on a date and at a place to be agreed upon.

"The three Ministers wished to express their appreciation to H.E. Thanat Khoman, the Foreign Minister of Thailand, for the impartial and constructive assistance he had given in the meetings. The three Ministers would also like to express their gratitude to the Government and the people of Thailand for the very warm hospitality they extended to them and their delegations."

"Terms of Cease-fire:

"The Governments concerned have agreed that they will exert their best efforts, in co-operation with the Government of Thailand, to observe the cease-fire.

"The Governments concerned have agreed that, in the event an incident breaks out, they will immediately issue orders to their respective forces to halt the fighting.

"The Governments concerned have agreed to appoint their respective military liaison officers in Bangkok to assist the Thai Government in supervising the cease-fire arrangements.

"The Governments concerned have agreed to accept teams of Thai observers in their respective territories and to provide necessary facilities to enable them to carry out their duties in connexion with the implementation of the cease-fire."

"Note:

"In connexion with the above terms, the Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia reserved the position of his Government as follows:

"It is the sincere desire of the Malaysian Government to adhere to the cease-fire arrangement. However, as there are members of Indonesian Armed Forces, Regulars as well as Irregulars, on the Malaysian side of the border, their presence will provoke incidents. The Malaysian Government therefore consider that the cease-fire would not be fully effective unless the Governments concerned agree to limit the activities and movements of their Armed Forces, Regulars as well as Irregulars within their respective territories."

Tengku-Macapagal Talks:

Following the mediation efforts of the Cambodian Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk (see page 5669) the Premier, Tengku Abdul Rehman, and the Philippine President, Mr. D. Macapagal, held a series of meetings in Pnom Penh and Siem Reap in the second week of February.

On February 12 they took the first step to restore relations between their countries as they agreed to open consulates in each other's territory.

Identical announcements issued by the spokesmen of the two leaders said the Tengku agreed to discuss as soon as possible the settlement of the Philippine claim to Sabah if necessary through the World Court.

Meanwhile, in a joint communique Prince Norodom Sihanouk and Mr. Macapagal expressed the hope that the Philippine President's talks with the Tengku would be followed by a meeting at which the Indonesian President, Dr. Sukarno, be present.

Such a meeting, Mr. Macapagal said, would facilitate discussions to settle the Malaysian crisis.

Prince Norodom said he hoped that as a result of the Tengku's talks with Mr. Macapagal an "atmosphere of better understanding has been restored between the two countries."

The communique was signed after Tengku Abdul Rehman's return home. It marked the climax of President Macapagal's five-day State visit to Cambodia.

Request For RAF Defence:

Malaysia formally asked Britain on February 20 to provide air defence against any Indonesian attempt to supply the guerrilla forces that remain on Malaysian territory.

Britain has a treaty with Malaysia under which British forces must protect the new Federation if requested to do so.

The request for air defence was made to Lord Head, the High Commissioner to Malaysia. The matter was being referred to London for action.

B. Three-Nation Talks On Border Cease-fire: The tripartite talks began after the cease-fire on the Malaysia-Indonesian border by representatives of Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines in Bangkok (see page 5669) and ended on February 10.

The talks concluded with the Indonesians refusing to pull out their troops —"regulars and irregulars"—from Malaysian territory.

Indonesia's attitude did not mean that the six-day conference had been a complete failure. The three Ministers, Tun Abdul Razak (Malaysian Deputy Premier), Mr. E. Lopez (Philippines Foreign Minister), and Dr. R. Subandrio (Indonesian Foreign Minister), all agreed that the conference had helped the countries concerned to appreciate better one another's problems.

In addition, they decided on a four-point plan to ensure that the cease-fire along the Borneo border was maintained.

Under this plan the three Governments will: exert efforts to co-operate with Thailand to observe the cease-fire; issue orders immediately to their forces to halt fighting should incidents break out; appoint military liaison officers in Bangkok to assist Thailand in supervising the cease-fire arrangements; and accept the presence of Thai observers in the respective territories and provide facilities for them to carry out their duties.

Tun Abdul Razak said later: "The very fact that Indonesians are in Malaysian territory will provoke incidents, and the cease-fire will not be fully effective." He emphasized that the Governments concerned must "limit the activities and movements of their Armed Forces—regular as well as irregular—within their respective territories."

The conference statement said that the delegates had agreed that they should meet again before a summit conference of their three Heads of Government was held. They had also agreed to study proposals for resolving "the main political issues".

All parties expressed at least guarded satisfaction at the outcome of the conference.

Mr. Ganis Harsono, an Indonesian official, said: "We feel the conference has been a very satisfactory one in spite of some tensions and heated arguments. It was worth it. The agreement reached was the best we have been able to achieve so far."

Mr. Ahmad Nurdin, a Malaysian official, said: "The most important thing is that there is general agreement that our differences should be solved by peaceful means."

A Philippines official said he hoped that the Malaysian note of reservation could be resolved by agreement soon.

Australian Support To Malaysia:

Meanwhile, the Australian Prime Minister, Sir Robert Menzies, announced on January 28 that Australia would send a military mission to Kuala Lumpur to discuss with the Malaysian Government what help Malaysia needs in developing its defence effort.

The announcement came after a meeting in Melbourne of the Federal Cabinet, which discussed the Malaysia problem at some length.

After the previous meeting of the Cabinet, on January 16, Sir Robert said that the Australian Government was consulting Malaysia to see what contribution Australia could make to the development of its defence effort. Subsequently the Malaysian Government submitted a list of items which it would welcome if Australia could provide them. The list included F. N. rifles, light automatic weapons, ammunition, and training facilities in Australia for Malaysian pilots.

Sir Robert said on January 28: "The Government has been given to understand by the Malaysian authorities that certain assistance in the form of materials and training would be useful. Accordingly it is proposed to send a mission to Kuala Lumpur to discuss and assess what items within Australia's capacity to supply may be needed."

A. Development Loan Talks With India: Nepal will receive a long-term industrial development loan of Rs. 1 crore from India in the near future, according to a joint communique issued in Khatmandu on February 22 at the end of the three-day talks between representatives of the two countries.

The communique said the two countries had also agreed to buy more consumer and manufactured goods from each country.

The joint communique was signed by Mr. Manubhai Shah, India's Minister for International Trade and Mr. Vedanand Jha, Nepal's Minister for Commerce and Industry.

The broad agreement on policy matters was regarded by observers as a happy augury to the eventual replacement of the Indo-Nepalese Trade and Transit Treaty, due to expire in 1965, by a suitable bilateral agreement.

Mr. Shah said: "As soon as this Treaty ends there will be a new treaty after due notice. At present there is identity of views between the two Governments on the need to increase Indo-Nepalese trade and provide facilities to that end."

He told correspondents that India had always tried to meet Nepal's genuine needs by supplying her essential commodities. He said that India welcomed Nepal's aspirations for diversifying her trade.

The joint communique said the ministerial level talks were "marked by a continuing realisation of basic identity of commercial, economic and other interests of the two countries."

Satisfaction was expressed over the fact that Indo-Nepalese trade had expanded considerably. The two Ministers were confident that the rate of increase in the trade between the two countries would go up further in the years to come. Towards this end each country would try to buy more consumer and manufactured goods from the other.

To help Nepal's industrial development India had agreed "to start with a loan of Rs. 1 crore." It would be utilised for buying capital goods in India "as also for investment and loans to industrial ventures to be established in Nepal."

A Nepalese delegation will visit India to discuss details and execute the loan agreement.

The communique added that India would provide training facilities to Nepalese and hold a trade exhibition and fair in the coming Autumn in Khatmandu.

Development Loan Fully Subscribed:

Radio Nepal announced on February 12 that Nepal's first ever development loan had been subscribed fully.

This public loan amounting to Rs. 1.31 crores was floated 15 days earlier.

Purchases of bonds at the Rashtra Bank in Khatmandu amounted to Rs. 1.2 crores.

The loan carries 6 per cent interest and is repayable in five years.

B. Two Steel Bridges Opened: King Mahendra formally opened on February 24 two modern steel bridges—the first of their kind in Nepal.

Traffic between Khatmandu and Trisuli Bazar, the site of the Trisuli hydel project, will be facilitated by these bridges.

Accompanied by Dr. K. L. Rao, India's Minister for Irrigation and Power, and the Indian Ambassador, Mr. H. Dayal, King Mahendra inspected various units of the project where work is in full swing with a complement of 13,000 workers.

Speaking on the occasion, Dr. Rao assured the King that the Trisuli project would be completed by June, 1965 as scheduled.

The Trisuli hydel project, estimated to cost Rs. 15.2 crores, forms part of the Indian aid programme in Nepal and is designed to produce ultimately 21,000 kw of power. In the first phase, to be completed by the middle of 1965, four generating units of 3,000 kw each will be installed. Additional units will be installed as the power requirements increase.

The two bridges lie in idyllic surroundings on the traditional Nepal-Tibet trekking route.

The Tadi Khola bridge on the Tadi river, near the 33rd milestone of the Khatmandu-Trisuli road, is 200 feet long. Constructed at a cost of Rs. 3,90,000, it has replaced a bridge which collapsed two years ago on account of floods.

The 120-foot steel girder bridge over the turbulent Trisuli linking Trisuli Bazar with the Trisuli project colony, has been constructed at a cost of Rs. 6,90,000.

Following the completion in May, 1963 of these two vital links and the improvement of the Khatmandu-Trisuli road by the project authorities, Trisuli has become accessible by road throughout the year.

The construction of the Trisuli-Khatmandu road, originally entrusted to a tripartite road transport organization, was taken over by the Indian authorities early in 1963.

C. Supplementary Budget: New taxes totalling Rs. 70,00,000 (Nepalese) and higher allotment to development work were the main features of the Supplementary Budget presented to Nepal's National Panchayat on February 16 by the Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ministers and the Finance Minister, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa.

He said Nepal's own contribution to development work would be raised from 31 per cent to 34 per cent during the year, thus reducing dependence on foreign aid.

Foreign aid loans amount to over Rs. 14 crores out of an estimated expenditure of about Rs. 20.05 crores on development projects.

Revised budget estimates show an increased expenditure of Rs. 2.51 crores—about Rs. 60,00,000 more under the general head and nearly Rs. 2 crores on development account.

Of the overall deficit of Rs. 2.20 crores, Mr. Thapa said over Rs. 2 crores would be covered through new taxes and internal development loans, thus leaving a net deficit of a little over Rs. 19,00,000. This would not, however, upset the position since all funds earmarked for development would not be utilized this year.

Increase in investments under the revised estimates is mainly distributed among power (Rs. 73,58,000), industries (Rs. 24,72,000) and communications (Rs. 17,60,000).

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. "Elektron" Space Stations Launched By USSR: At a news conference in Moscow on February 6, the President of the USSR Academy of Sciences, Mr. M. Keldysh, said that the space stations Elektron I and Elektron II were the first systems by means of which simultaneous measurements in different spots of the Earth's environment were being carried out.

Att the news conference, noted Soviet scientists told journalists about the programme and purpose of the new scientific space experiment.

Mr. Keldysh recalled that one of the most brilliant successes in the chain of outstanding achievements, started by the launching of the world's first artificial Earth satellite in October, 1957, was the discovery of the Earth's radiation belts. The mechanism of their origin is still unknown. The Elektron system will help to carry out, according to a single programme, simultaneous observations in different spots of outer space of the entire complex of complicated physical processes, which give rise to the radiation belts.

This programme provides for the study of low and high energy particles occurring in the radiation belts, magnetic fields of the Earth and belts, cosmic rays, chemical composition of the Earth's environment, short-wave radiation of the Sun and radio radiation of the galaxies, and micro-meteorites. "The fact that these experiments are being carried out during the International Year of the Quiet Sun," he stressed, "makes them even more important."

Varied and extensive information is being received from the space stations Elektron I and Elektron II, said Mr. Sergei Vernov, Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences, who received a Lenin Prize for the study of radiation belts in 1960. The data obtained showed that the scientific instrumentation is functioning normally. He explained that the Sputniks were to "patrol outer space for a long stretch of time and will permit us to discover rare but extremely interesting phenomena, arising when the Earth enters the corpuscular streams coming from the Sun."

He noted with satisfaction that "the Moscow Treaty on the banning of nuclear tests in outer space gives a chance to study radiation belts without interference."

He added that even now, five years after the discovery of the outer radiation belt, it remained a riddle. His opinion was that the theory explaining the mechanism of the appearance of the inner belt advanced in USSR, and later on in the United States, did not explain the existence of the outer belt. He assumed that some kind of a "cosmic accelerator" of particles was operating at distances of thousands and tens of thousands of kilometres from the Earth. "It is to find an explanation of its nature that we need a system comprising a number of satellites."

The investigations carried out so far have demonstrated, he said, that when the Earth found itself within corpuscular fluxes ejected by the Sun, that is, during magnetic storms and aurorae on the Earth, strong changes occur in the outer radiation belt of the Earth. This meant that just then the "near-terrestrial cosmic accelerator" starts operating.

One of the satellites is used to study the inner radiation belt of the Earth and the "spurs" of the outer radiation belt closest to it. In the meantime the second scientific station pierces the outer belt and goes out into interplanetary space where particles of radiation belts should be absent and cosmic rays are the main type of radiation.

He stressed that due to the identical instrumentation of both satellites, it was possible to draw a picture of the spatial distribution of the radiation belts. A part of the instrumentation is placed within the hermetically-sealed container. These instruments register particles of rather high energies. Particles of lower energy are registered by instruments installed outside the container. The radiation detectors are covered with layers of substance only a few microns thick.

Dr. Konstantin Gringauz spoke on the research in that region of outer space which lies immediately beyond the radiation belts. This region, known as the outer radiation belt of charged particles, was discovered as a result of the research carried out by Soviet Moon probes in 1959.

The magnetic field of the third belt, as proved by subsequent measurements, is changing all the time in size and direction. These data show that the electrons in the belt, which lies at a distance of 50 to 75,000 kilometres from the Earth, are not covered by its magnetic field, and this means that no magnetic trap for charged particles can exist there. Apparently, he surmised, the fluxes of electrons from the outer belt can exercise a very strong influence on the upper strata of the atmosphere when they penetrate into it at high latitudes.

He held that measurements taken by the Elektron II station would enrich the available knowledge of the outer belt.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Repeated measurements of charged particles would give a better idea of the physical properties of the outer belt proper, its shape and its role in different geophysical phenomena.

He noted that the new experiments would give the scientists a chance to answer the question whether the outer radiation belt was closed, that is, whether this belt around the Earth existed in the direction counter to the Earth-Sun direction. He believed that the belt was continuous. The results of observations carried out by the Mars 1 station are also in favour of this hypothesis.

As stated by Mr. Yuri Kalinin, Doctor of Physico-Mathematical Sciences, Soviet scientists have established after experiments with Soviet space rockets and sputniks that a magnetic field of circular electric current, surrounding the Earth far beyond the confines of the ionosphere, is superimposed on the magnetic field of the Earth in the area of the external radiation zone. It was also established that the Moon does not have a noticeable magnetic field.

Noting that the American researchers have also made a valuable contribution to the study of magnetic fields in the outer radiation zone of the Earth, Dr. Kalinin dwelt on the concrete tasks of the experiment which is being carried out with the help of Elektron II space station.

The magnetometers, carried by the station, are similar as regards technical potentialities and design to the models applied earlier, but the exactitude of their measurements is much higher.

The Elektron II station is intended specially for the study of the outer radiation belt for a long period of time. "This shows that our scientists have started studying magnetic fields in the outer radiation belt with the purpose of establishing their variations in time."

The researchers expect to obtain by the method of direct measurements in space a reply to the question what happens, after all, with the outer radiation zone of the Earth during geomagnetic storms. Until recently it was considered that such storms are a period when the Earth and its magnetic field are stricken by a flux of solar corpuscules—electrons and ions. These fluxes are partially trapped by the Earth's magnetic field and remain in the outer radiation belt. and partially enter the Earth's ionosphere, in its Polar regions.

Elektron II will also help to establish the vertical time variations of the border of the magnetic sphere of the Earth, i.e., the region of the Earth's space environment where the movement of electrically charged particles is controlled by the planet's magnetic field.

Replying to correspondents' questions, Mr. Keldysh explained the choice of the orbit plane of the Elektron system which differs from previous launchings. He noted two circumstances which explain the choice—the need for long-lived satellites and the desire to collect full information about the radiation belts.

He said that more than two satellites could be placed into orbits by one booster. Of course, he added, the more satellites there are with different orbits, the more complex is the task technically. "But this is a feasible proposition and, if need be, it will be accomplished."

In view of the fact that Elektron II will be for several days beyond the view of Soviet scientific stations from February 5, the question was asked whether it would be expedient to establish co-operation with foreign tracking stations. He pointed out that the Soviet scientists did not need this because the sputink had memory mechanisms aboard, which would then transmit to the ground all the accumulated information.

If some foreign stations, he continued, expressed a desire to receive information, he could consider such requests. He added that in doing this it should be taken into account that the solar batteries have a limited power potential, necessary for transmitting information.

He pointed out that one of the purposes of the launching of this system was to study radiation at high altitudes and determine what should be done to safeguard human beings during space flights.

He noted that radiation in outer space increased after the American high-altitude blasts, which greatly alarmed the Soviet scientists. He explained that radiation was particularly stable at such altitudes.

When asked about the aim of the launching of the space stations Elektron I and Elektron II he said: "For travelling it is necessary to know the conditions in the place where you want to go. And this is what the space stations Elektron I and Elektron II must find out."

B. ECAFE Activities During 1963: A UN Press release on January 31 said that a growing realization of the need for regional economic co-operation among Asian countries had shaped the activities of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) during 1963.

Trade, it was stressed at ECAFE conferences, was at the root of Asian economic problems and more should, therefore, be done to promote trade with other regions on the basis of regional economic co-operation.

Governments displayed a heightened consciousness that their individual efforts might not be sufficient to shake off the serious economic problems besetting the region. This led to fresh appeals for regional co-operation and stimulated ECAFE to place new emphasis on practical efforts to secure economic betterment.

At the same time, ECAFE was able during the year to build up its advisory services and increase its offers of assistance to its member-countries in a number of economic and social fields. The Commission scheduled no fewer than 38 week-long conferences from March, 1963 to March, 1964 to examine local and regional problems and to plan for future progress.

The Economic Survey for Asia and the Far East, 1962, published in March, 1963 indicated that economic advancement in Asia had not been as rapid as had been hoped. It was mainly this fact—along with the development of regional economic groupings in Europe, Latin America and Africa—which led Governments in the area to place more emphasis in 1963 on regional action.

One manifestation of the interest in regional solutions to regional problems was the request by Australia and New Zealand—formerly ECAFE members from outside the ECAFE region—for regional membership and inclusion within the geographical scope of the Commission. This request was granted at the annual session; and at the same time, Western Samoa was admitted to ECAFE and similarly included in the geographical scope of the Commission.

Members of the Commission are Afghanistan, Australia, Burma, Cambodia, Ceylon, China, France, India, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Laos, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Republic of Viet-Nam, Thailand, USSR, United Kingdom, United States and Western Samoa.

Associate members are Brunei and Hong Kong.

The geographical scope of ECAFE encompasses Afghanistan, Australia, Brunei, Burma, Cambodia, Ceylon, China, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Laos, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nepal, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Republic of Viet-Nam, Thailand and Western Samoa.

The headquarters of the Commission is at Sala Santitham, Bangkok, Thailand, and the Executive Secretary of the Commission is U Nyun of Burma.

Reacting to the concern expressed at the annual session over unsolved economic problems, and to the general desire for stronger regional efforts, ECAFE placed more weight in 1963 on practical activities and on regional and sub-regional programmes. The Commission's activities underwent a re-appraisal intended to bring them solidly to bear on the most pressing difficulties of the region. Greater emphasis was given to the need for new measures, as well as for research, studies and exchange-of-information meetings such as ECAFE has regularly sponsored in the past.

During the year there were new developments in a number of major ECAFE undertakings which originated some time ago, but which, nevertheless, satisfy these three criteria.

The Mekong River Project entered a new phase with the adoption by the ECAFE annual session of a resolution intended to provide funds for a further 5-year development programme.

The project is aimed at the development of the Lower Mekong River Basin crystallized during the year by the establishment at Bangkok of the Asian Institute for Economic Development, which will start operations on January 1, 1964.

An autonomous body functioning under the aegis of ECAFE, the Institute will train Government officials in development planning, advise Governments on economic matters, and act as a centre for development research.

C. Asian Countries' Agreements With World Food Programme: It was reported from Rome on February 9 that four Agreements had been signed with Asian countries by the World Food Programme—a joint undertaking of UN and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO).

Two of these Agreements concern India. One is aimed at increasing the production of milk, the other at developing poultry farming.

A third Agreement has been concluded with Nepal to establish there a centre for collecting and keeping milk. The fourth provides for irrigation work in Ceylon.

These Agreements brought to 12 the number concluded by the World Food Programme with various countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and Europe. They amount to an expenditure of $13,340,500, especially in food, cattle feed, insurance, freight and transport expenses.

ASIAN RECORDER

March 11—17, 1964

Vol. X No. 11

INDIA

SUMMARY: Central Budget; Migration Of Hindus And Christians From East Pakistan; Trade Agreement With Yugoslavia; Agricultural Prospects For 1964; State Budgets.

A. Central Budget For 1964-65: Presenting the Central Budget for 1964-65 in the Lok Sabha on February 29, the Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, announced that for the coming year, he had budgeted for a total revenue of Rs. 2,095 crores and expenditure of Rs. 2,041 crores at the existing level of taxation. This would lead to a revenue surplus of Rs. 54 crores.

As compared to the revised estimates for the current year, revenue receipts next year would be more by Rs. 181 crores. The four principal heads of revenue account for an improvement of Rs. 92 crores, while interest receipts were expected to go up by another Rs. 32 crores. Following the change in the procedure for the release of assistance under PL 480 on an advance basis, the grants for approved projects were now expected to exceed the current year's provision by Rs. 76 crores. But this would be covered by a corresponding transfer to the Special Development Fund for which the expenditure estimates took a debit. These improvements, however, would be partly offset by a drop of Rs. 12 crores under Emergency Risks Insurance receipts and Rs. 4 crores under the surplus profits of the Reserve Bank accruing to the Government.

In the revenue expenditure for next year, he said, Rs. 718 crores would be for Defence Services and Rs. 1,323 crores for civil purposes.

The Defence requirements debitable to revenue next year showed an increase of Rs. 25 crores over the revised estimates of Rs. 693 crores for the current year, while civil expenditure showed an increase of Rs. 191 crores. The growing volume and cost of public borrowings mainly for development accounted for an increase of Rs. 36 crores under debt charges. A lump provision of Rs. 10 crores had been made on account of the increase in the dearness allowance sanctioned recently with retrospective effect from July 1, 1963. Miscellaneous social and developmental services in the fourth year of the Third Plan were expected to cost Rs. 21 crores more, whereas grants to States both for Plan and non-Plan purposes would exceed the current year's revised estimates by Rs. 53 crores. The self-balancing items of grants under PL 480 deposits and Emergency Risks Insurance receipts together accounted for a net increase of Rs. 64 crores. The State's share of Central excise duties would also show an increase of Rs. 5 crores.

He said that excluding the adjustment for the transfer of loan assistance from USA, which was notionally treated as capital expenditure, capital outlay next year was estimated at Rs. 796 crores. This represented an increase of Rs. 34 crores over the current year's revised estimates. Defence capital requirements next year were placed at Rs. 136 crores, showing an increase of Rs. 20 crores over the current year. Repayment of debt, both external and internal, would be of the order of Rs. 259 crores next year. Loans to parties other than State Governments at Rs. 254 crores would be higher by Rs. 64 crores. So far as States were concerned, the revised estimates included Rs. 101 crores as their share in the market borrowing in the current year. He announced that it had since been decided to resume the practice of separate market operations by the Central and State Governments next year. Excluding the States' share of the combined market loan, loans to States at Rs. 606 crores showed an increase of Rs. 81 crores over the current revised.

In this connexion, he said that the financial position of most of the States had been causing a good deal of concern. The total amount due to the Centre by the States at the end of the current financial year would be of the order of Rs. 3,000 crores. In addition, the States' liability on account of market loans at present amounted to Rs. 656 crores. Both in terms of loans from the Centre and market borrowings, the States had been receiving more than what was originally contemplated in the Plan. Their share of Central taxes and duties had also been increased. Yet, most of them were constantly facing ways and means difficulties of a disturbing nature. The whole position would require careful review in the context of the Fourth Five-Year Plan. "While we should aim at giving the States a good deal of flexibility in allocating their own resources, so far as the Central assistance was concerned, we must also ensure that the major portion of it was related to capital expenditure on identifiable projects which were economically sound and could be expected to generate the resources for repaying their liabilities. Other devices would also have to be thought of." As a first step, he said, it was proposed to set up the Fourth Finance Commission at the beginning of the next financial year so that its report would be available before the shape and size of the Fourth Plan was finalized.

About the outlay for the Plan, he said that provision had been made next year for a total expenditure of Rs. 1,516 crores. Of this, Rs. 253 crores would be on revenue account and the balance as capital outlay including loans. In addition, the Railways were expected to provide Rs. 26 crores, Hindustan Steel Rs. 25 crores and other public sector enterprises Rs. 44 crores from their own resources. These estimates included Rs. 559 crores as assistance to the States. The States were expected to find Rs. 353 crores from their own resources. Thus, the total State Plans next year would be of the order of Rs. 912 crores as against Rs. 750 crores budgeted this year. With the Central outlay of Rs. 957 crores, contribution from public sector enterprises of Rs. 115 crores and State plans of Rs. 912 crores, the total plan outlay in the fourth year of the Plan would amount to Rs. 1,984 crores. This would show a step-up of Rs. 333 crores over the budgeted outlay of Rs. 1,651 crores for the current year. Much of this additional outlay, he emphasized, was to strengthen the agricultural sector as well as to meet the cost of Plan projects which were nearing completion.

Referring to the defence outlay, he said this was a painful necessity. The Defence Budget in the coming year, taking revenue and capital together, was somewhat lower than the budget estimate for the current year. But it showed an increase of Rs. 46 crores over the revised.

Promotion of savings, he said, would have to form a cardinal part of the mobilization of resources. The current year was likely to end with record collections of Rs. 115 crores through small savings. For the coming year, he was assuming net collections of Rs. 125 crores. Even at this rate, the sum of Rs. 600 crores targeted for the Plan was not likely to be reached. Special efforts had to be made to step up the level of savings in the community as a whole. To this end, he said, Government policy in regard to incomes, wages and consumption had to be reoriented. Savings, and as a consequence, investment could only be generated by a margin between consumption and incomes or wages. While efforts to improve the lot of low-income groups should not be neglected, such efforts should be directed more towards social security measures than towards an increase in their expendable income. He said that the Government intended to devote special attention to the task of mobilizing savings and social security measures in the coming year. Suitable administrative arrangements were being made for this purpose.

Direct Taxes:

Corporate Sector:

The present tax on corporations of 25 per cent income-tax and 25 per cent super-tax will remain. In substitution of the Super-Profits Tax, it is proposed to levy a surtax on profits of companies.

The capital base for this purpose will consist of equity and preference capital, reserves, debentures, loans from approved financial institutions and loans for 10 years or more from banks or from foreign sources for creating capital assets. The surtax will be at the rate of 40 per cent on the residue of the profits of the tax after deducting 10 per cent on the capital base.

In order to encourage development of certain industries which occupy an important place in our economy, it is proposed to give them a rebate of corporation tax equivalent to 10 per cent of income-tax and super-tax. This rebate will also be applicable in respect of surtax on such profits to the extent of 20 per cent of tax assessed.

In order to discourage the dissipation of the additional resources generated in higher dividends, there will be a tax at the rate of 7.5 per cent on the amounts distributed as dividend on capital other than preference capital. Where dividend has to be compulsorily distributed under the law, such distribution will not attract this tax. New companies will be exempt from this tax to the extent of a dividend of 10 per cent on capital other than preference capital for five years from their first declaration of dividends.

All inter-corporate dividends will be exempt from super-tax. It is also proposed to remove the provisions in the income-tax law regarding disallowance of expenditure incurred by companies on the remuneration of their Indian employees above Rs. 60,000 per annum for each employee. It is, however, proposed to introduce a new provision in the Act limiting the amount of deduction admissible to companies for expenditure incurred by them in providing perquisites to their employees, whether Indian or foreign, to an amount of 20 per cent of the salary of each employee. Any expenditure in excess of this limit will not be deducted in computing the assessable income of the company. It is also proposed to reduce the deduction of income-tax at source from dividends from 30 per cent to 20 per cent for resident holders of shares.

It is proposed to increase the rate of super-tax of non-resident companies from 38 per cent to 40 per cent in respect of their income other than dividends and also royalties and fees for rendering technical services received from an Indian concern under an agreement approved by the Central Government. The super-tax on incomes from royalties and technical fees will be at the rate of 25 per cent.

The rate of super-tax is to be increased from 25 per cent to 35 per cent of companies other than those in which the public are substantially interested or are wholly subsidiaries of public companies, namely, the group now governed by Section 104 of the Income-tax Act, 1961. Such of those companies as are engaged in specific industries will also be eligible for the proposed rebate equivalent to 10 per cent of the income-tax and super-tax. Income-tax on dividends received from non-resident companies engaged in the specific industries will be reduced from 25 per cent to 15 per cent. It is proposed to exempt such Indian companies as are now governed by Section 104 of the Income-tax Act and are engaged in the manufacture or processing of goods or mining or generation and distribution of electricity or any other form of power and other classes of companies as may be notified from the existing requirement of compulsory distribution of dividends.

The Income-tax Act provides for allowing as deductible expenditure amounts spent wholly and exclusively for the purpose of business. This provision is being abused in respect of certain types of expenditure. This tendency is responsible in no small measure for the present high cost. A check at least on some of these expenses will have to be put and provision had been included for this purpose in the Finance Bill.

The availability of development rebate in its present form will continue. But its continuance beyond April 1, 1966 should not be assumed. It is in the interest of industrial development that such notice is given.

Non-corporate Sector:

The personal income-tax structure is being regraded. This will provide a revised and simplified schedule of rates in which most of the surcharges will be integrated.

It will also mean a reduction of tax at all levels. With this change, the burden on the incomes in the lower brackets will be lower than at present.

It is proposed to fix the Central surcharge on earned incomes above Rs. 1,00,000 at 10 per cent and on unearned income above Rs. 10,000 at 12½ per cent where such income does not exceed Rs. 25,000 and at 15 per cent where it exceeds Rs. 25,000 but does not exceed Rs. 75,000 and at 17.5 per cent above that amount.

The Compulsory Deposit Scheme will be discontinued.

Further, in respect of income-tax payers in the small income groups, it is proposed to make a retrospective amendment to the relevant provisions of the Finance Act, 1963 to secure to such assessees appropriate marginal relief from the additional surcharge.

Replacing the CDS, it is proposed to introduce an Annuity Deposit Scheme which will operate at the income level above Rs. 15,000 per annum. This deposit will be at the rate of 5 per cent in the case of assessees having incomes between Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 20,000; 7.5 per cent for those with incomes between Rs. 20,000 and Rs. 40,000; 10 per cent of incomes between Rs. 40,000 and Rs. 70,000 and 12.5 per cent for incomes above this amount. The deposit will be compulsory for resident assessees who are citizens of India. It will be allowed as a deduction in computing the total income for the year in which it is made. The deposit will be repayable in 10 annual equated instalments of principal and interest commencing from one complete year after the assessment. The deposits in 1964-65 will earn interest at a rate slightly above 4 per cent per annum compound. Deposits which are repaid from year to year will, however, be assessed as part of the income of the assessee in the year in which it is so repaid.

It is also proposed to extend, on a voluntary basis, the benefit of this arrangement, to actors, artists and authors who, at their option, can deposit a further amount not exceeding 15 per cent of their income under this scheme in order to reduce the taxable income in the year in which it is earned and get it back in instalments over a period of 10 years. This benefit is to be extended to taxable gratuity income also. Persons receiving a gratuity liable to tax can make, at their option, deposit up to 50 per cent of the amount of the gratuity under this Scheme and get the benefit of saving in tax.

Steps For Checking Tax Evasion:

The following are steps for checking tax evasion:

(1) Every tax return will carry an affirmation about its correctness.

(2) The tax due according to the return will have to be deposited within one month of the submission of the return, failing which the assessee will be liable to a substantial penalty.

(3) The existing provision in the Act regarding the levy of penalty for concealment of income will be amended. In the new provision, where the income returned by a person is less than 90 per cent of the assessed income, the assessee should be deemed to have concealed his income unless he proves his bona fides.

(4) It is proposed to take extensive powers to search for evaded wealth. The new powers are to be used effectively and this should serve as a warning to persons entering into transactions involving large sums in cash.

(5) It is proposed to do away with the secrecy provision in the Income-tax Act and other similar enactments. It is hoped that the combined effect of all these steps will prove beneficial to collection of revenues as well as to ensure a fairer deal to the honest tax-payer.

Rebate of super-tax will be allowed on contributions to recognized Provident Funds, deposits in the Post Office Cumulative Time Deposit Scheme and premiums on life insurance. But the limit for this purpose will continue to be at Rs. 10,000 per annum. Rebate of income-tax and super-tax will cumulatively be limited to 50 per cent of the payments or deposits qualifying for relief.

As a concession to foreigners working in India, it is proposed to allow to resident assessees who are not citizens of India, a rebate of income-tax and super-tax of a sum on Rs. 2,000 per child up to two children under 21 years of age receiving education outside India. It is also proposed that for foreign technicians, the tax exemption for three years will be available provided approval is obtained within one year of their arrival in India. It is also proposed to extend the concession of exemption from tax to foreign teachers and professors coming to India on approved programmes.

In order to encourage exports, it is necessary to remove the disincentive of tax liability and to extend the scope of exemption from tax on interest on approved foreign lending by bringing within its scope investment in approved securities.

The structure of the tax on capital gains is to be revised. Three changes are proposed:

(1) The tax will be on a graduated scale in future without the present ceiling of 25 per cent.

(2) The scale will be different for house and landed property and will be at the rate of 75 per cent of the appropriate slabs in the income-tax cum super-tax rebate of personal taxation. Other types of property will bear tax at 50 per cent of the average rate of tax on personal income.

(3) An investor in shares after receiving bonus shares will be charged to tax on capital gains accruing to him in respect of such shares in the year in which they have been issued to him with reference to the market value of the bonus shares as on the 31st day from the date of their issue.

Wealth Tax:

It has been decided to re-introduce the rate of 0.5 per cent for Wealth Tax on the first slab of a net wealth of Rs. 4,00,000 but beyond Rs. 1,00,000.

Other slabs will be slightly re-arranged, but their rates will remain the same. It is also proposed to exempt from Wealth Tax the value of a house or part of the house owned or used by the assessee for residential purposes subject to the limit of Rs. 1,00,000 where such a house is situated in a place with a population exceeding 10,000.

Estate Duty And Gift Tax:

It is proposed to replace the existing rates of excise duty by a rate structure in which the rate of 40 per cent will be reached on an estate worth over Rs. 10,00,000, going up to 50 per cent on the next slab of Rs. 5,00,000 and to 85 per cent on the value of the estates over Rs. 20,00,000.

With regard to Gift Tax, the highest rate which is now proposed is 50 per cent which will be applicable to taxable gifts of a value above Rs. 3,45,000. The rate of 40 per cent will apply on gifts between Rs. 1,45,000 and Rs. 3,45,000. The existing exemption limit of Rs. 10,000 will be reduced to Rs. 5,000.

Expenditure Tax:

The Expenditure Tax is to be revived. It will attract tax on all expenditure above Rs. 36,000 per annum no matter from which source the money for expenditure came.

Tax exemptions and exceptions are to be reduced to the minimum. The rates will rise from 5 per cent to 20 per cent on successive slabs of Rs. 12,000. There will be no tax on the first Rs. 36,000. The rate will be 5 per cent on the next Rs. 12,000, 7.5 per cent on the slab of Rs. 12,000 after that and 10 per cent on the next slab of Rs. 12,000. It will be 15 per cent between Rs. 72,000 and Rs. 84,000 and 20 per cent above Rs. 84,000.

It is also proposed not to apply the highest slab of 20 per cent for the expenditure in the years 1963-64 and 1964-65. A compulsory return for certain categories of persons will be prescribed in order to ensure that evasion is reduced.

As a result of these changes, there will be an additional revenue of Rs. 15 crores to the Centre. The abolition of CDS and the introduction of the Annuity Deposit Scheme will result in a net credit of Rs. 50 crores in the coming year on the capital side after allowing for a drop of Rs. 7 crores in the accretion to the Iron and Steel Equalization Fund.

Indirect Taxes:

Central Excise:

It is proposed to remove the duty on gramophone records, all gases other than carbon dioxide used for the manufacture of aerated waters, low voltage electric motors and all acids other than sulphuric acid.

The Excise Duty on soap manufactured without the aid of power will be withdrawn. An effective duty of Rs. 40 per tonne on sodium silicate which goes into the manufacture of such soap will be levied. In order to encourage the use of bagasse in the manufacture of paper, the duty on paper in the manufacture of which more than 50 per cent bagasse is used will be reduced by 5 naye paise per kilogram. The special excise duty is being abolished on synthetic dyes, glassware, chinaware, porcelainware, cellophane and certain types of writing and printing paper and electric bulbs and reduced on the initial slabs on tyres. The schedule of duty on cigarettes is being revised lowering the duty on one group and slightly raising it on another.

The surcharge on iron and steel which is transferred to the Iron and Steel Equalization Fund is to be abolished. It will be replaced by an increase in the effective rates of excise duty on pig-iron, certain steels and steel products. The effective rates per tonne now proposed are Rs. 30 on pig-iron, Rs. 90 on semi-finished steel and steel bars, rods and structurals, Rs. 110 on all flat products other than skelp and Rs. 150 on skelp.

It is proposed to extend further the process of transferring excise duty from cotton fabrics to yarn as well as to processed cloth. It is also proposed to raise the effective rates of duty by 50 per cent on rayon yarn and about 100 per cent on other, synthetic fibres and yarn and to reduce the special duty on cellulosic staple fibre.

Customs Duties:

In the case of dry fruit, it is proposed to adopt specific instead of ad valorem rates based on tariff values for most varieties.

The rate of duty on copra is being raised from 25 per cent to 30 per cent and that on caustic soda from 40 per cent to 80 per cent. In both cases, the preferential rates will be 10 per cent lower.

It is proposed to raise the import duty on high carbon or spring steel wire by 20 per cent to place the indigenous product on a competitive basis. The rate of duty on motor cars will be reduced to 60 per cent from 150 per cent. The export duty on jute will be abolished.

The total gain by the changes in indirect taxes will be a little over Rs. 25 crores in the coming year.

The combined effect of the changes in taxes and deposits will be a net gain to revenue of Rs. 40 crores and to capital of Rs. 50 crores, leaving an overall gap of Rs. 86 crores.

Clarifications:

Two important clarifications with regard to the Budget were made available on March 7.

First, the exemption limit in gift tax is to be Rs. 5,000, as indicated by Mr. Krishnamachari in his Budget speech and not Rs. 10,000, the figure given in the Finance Bill. An official amendment is likely to be moved to give effect to this.

In the matter of development rebate, on the other hand, it is the Bill, not Mr. Krishnamachari's speech, which represents the correct position. In other words, the Government intends not to end the rebate or vary the rate before three years, or April, 1967.

Official Analysis Of Tax Rates:

An official analysis of the tax rates introduced by the Budget said that because of the abolition of the Compulsory Deposit Scheme, the total pay for those earning up to Rs. 15,000 a year would be larger as from April, though the net income after tax would be less in many cases.

The analysis conceded that on earned income the incidence of tax under the new scheme would be higher at income levels of Rs. 6,000, Rs. 9,000, Rs. 10,000, Rs. 11,000, Rs. 14,000 and Rs. 15,000.

In respect of unearned income too, the tax incidence would be higher at all levels between Rs. 11,000 and Rs. 15,000.

This disclosure is at variance with Mr. Krishnamachari's claim in his Budget speech that the revised tax structure would mean a lowering of tax at all levels.

The real beneficiaries of the revised tax structure are the higher income brackets, namely, those in the category of Rs. 20,000 a year and above.

The result is that while a man with an income of Rs. 10,000 a year will, for example, have to pay Rs. 19 more by way of tax, another with Rs. 20,000 would be saving Rs. 525.

An official analysis of indirect taxes said that a net additional revenue of Rs. 25.91 crores is expected from this source next year. Customs duties would account for Rs. 6.37 crores and Central excises Rs. 19.54 crores. Allowing for the payment of Rs. 39,00,000 out of the excise revenues to the States, this would mean a net increase of Rs. 19.15 crores for the Centre.

The latter figure is largely made up by changes in cloth and steel excise duties, the first category contributing Rs. 11.81 crores and the second Rs. 6.95 crores. The steel excise duties are counterbalanced by the abolition of the surcharge. This means there should be no perceptible increase in the prices of steel products generally.

The changes made in the excise structure in respect of cotton textiles follow from the decision to transfer the levies from grey cotton fabrics to yarn. Part of the burden has also been shifted to processed fabrics of superior varieties. Care has been taken to ensure that in regard to the yarn supplied to the handloom section in hanks, the margin of preference already enjoyed is not only retained but in many cases also enlarged.

The total reductions in excise (more than made up by higher levies in other cases) account for reliefs aggregating Rs. 5.84 crores. These are spread over a number of consumer goods such as writing paper, glassware, chinaware and electric bulbs up to 60 watts.

Two important intermediates, namely, acids and gases, qualify for concessions aggregating Rs. 2 crores. This would help cut down the cost of production of certain nitrogenous fertilizers and heavy chemicals like soda ash.

B. Migration Of Hindus And Christians From East Pakistan—Mrs. Lakshmi Menon's Statement In Parliament: The Minister of State for External Affairs, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, said in Parliament on March 2 that Hindus and Christians in East Pakistan had been compelled to leave their ancestral homes "due to organized large-scale looting, arson, kidnapping and forcible occupation of their lands by the members of the majority community." The Pakistan police and the Village Defence Corps known as Ansars had connived at these things.

In a statement in Parliament on the influx of Hindu and Christian refugees into Garo Hills of Assam, she said that the Government of India had called upon Pakistan to take immediate steps to restore communal harmony in East Pakistan and rehabilitate the minorities. A Note on this subject was delivered to the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi on February 29.

The following is the text of her statement:

"The House is aware that an unprecedented influx of Hindu and Christian refugees is taking place into Garo Hills district from Mymensingh district of East Pakistan. It is known that this exodus from East Pakistan into Assam began on January 18, 1964, and that the total number of refugee men, women and children who have so far crossed into Assam is about 52,238. Of this number, an estimated 35,000 are Christian families who belong to the Garo tribe. The reason for this exodus is that these Hindu and Christian members of the minority community in East Pakistan have been compelled to leave their ancestral homes due to organized large-scale looting, arson, kidnapping and forcible occupation of their lands by members of the majority community with the connivance of the Pakistan police and the village defence corps known as Ansars.

"The gravity of this mass movement of the minority population from East Pakistan has been brought out clearly by the recent visit by Indian and foreign correspondents to Garo Hills district in Assam where they met refugees and foreign missionaries who are looking after them. Father Buccicri, an Italian missionary, is reported to have told the correspondents that according to the figures he had collected on the basis of identification cards filled up by the refugees themselves, on their arrival in camps, 20,000 of the Garos who had crossed into India were Roman Catholics. Two American Baptist missionaries, the Rev. Julius Downs and the Rev. James Wood stated that 15,000 of the refugees were Baptists. The correspondents also learnt, at first hand, of the East Pakistan Rifles firing on a batch of defenceless Garo refugees fleeing into Assam on February 6, 1964. Dr. M. Hussain, Sub-Divisional Health and Medical Officer of Tura, showed them the bullets taken from the heads of the two children who were killed.

"Dr. Hussain informed the correspondents that seven men, four women and two children were brought to the hospital from the border outpost of Dalu on the night of February 7, and that six of them had bullet injuries and the others had received injuries inflicted by spears and lathi blows. The refugees stated that the total number of persons who were attempting to cross the border was about 3,000 but only 1,500 managed to cross the border near the Indian post of Dalu, 33 miles south-west of Tura. The others who are continuing to cross the border into Assam consist of the Hojong, Banai, Koche, Rajbansi and Dalu tribes. All the refugees who have crossed into Garo Hills district are from the five thanas of Nalta Bari, Sribordi, Halvaghat, Durgapur and Kamalakanda in Mymensingh district of East Pakistan.

"The Government of India in its Note dated February 13, 1964, presented to the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi, protested to the Government of Pakistan at the shooting of the helpless refugees fleeing from persecution in East Pakistan. Though Pakistan has not acknowledged the occurrence of this barbarous act, the Pakistan Foreign Minister has had to contradict the reported statement of Khan A. Sabur Khan, Pakistan's Central Minister of Communications, that 'there is no truth in the Indian Press reports that Christians living in East Pakistan had started fleeing,' by admitting in Dacca, on February 26, that 'some exodus' of Christians from Mymensingh district of East Pakistan into Assam had taken place and regretted on behalf of his Government that this 'unfortunate exodus' is due to 'acts of highhandedness' by Muslims. The President of Pakistan has also admitted the flight of large numbers of Christians from Mymensingh district to India.

"The House will recall that the Government of India in its Note dated February 1, 1964, presented to the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi, the text of which was placed on the table of the House on February 11, 1964, by the Central Home Minister, had pointed out clearly to Pakistan its responsibilities for the restoration of communal peace and harmony in East Pakistan. If the leaders and the Government of Pakistan had taken heed of our advice, these minorities would not now be pouring across the Pakistan border into India, and Pakistan would not have to speculate whether they would return to their ancestral homes from which they have been forcibly turned out. In a Note dated February 29, 1964, delivered to the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi, the Government of India has re-iterated that the Pakistan Government should take immediate steps to restore communal harmony in East Pakistan and rehabilitate the minorities."

The Government of India, in its Note dated February 29 to Pakistan, said that vast crowds were continuing to besiege the Deputy High Commission office in Dacca for migration certificates since the serious communal riots in East Pakistan. These members of the minority community were applying for migration in spite of the Press Note issued by the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Dacca to the effect that migration to India had not become unrestricted.

The Note said that the Government of Pakistan must realise that men, women and children would not voluntarily elect to abandon their hearths and homes if they had been enjoying security of their lives and properties in East Pakistan.

It also referred to the exodus of Hindus and Christians into Assam from Mymensingh district of Pakistan and said the Pakistan Government would like it to be believed that the Government of India was encouraging migration by issuing migration certificates, but the influx into India of 50,000 Hindus and Christians did not prove Pakistan's contention.

"These 50,000 men, women and children," the Note said, "have been driven out of their country of domicile, which is Pakistan, by their fellow citizens of the majority community, while the Government of Pakistan remains a disinterested spectator of this inhuman spectacle. These helpless minorities are being left with no alternative but to seek refuge on the soil of India. If the leaders and the Government of Pakistan would effectively ensure communal harmony in East Pakistan, there would be no need for the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Dacca to issue a single migration certificate or for the Hindus and Christians to flee to Assam from Mymensingh district of East Pakistan. All that is needed is to assure the minorities in East Pakistan of security of their lives and property".

C. Pakistani Incursions On Borders—Mr. Y. B. Chavan's Assurance To Lok Sabha: Amidst cheers from all sides of the Lok Sabha, the Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan on February 27 gave "in all sincerity and seriousness" a categorical assurance that India was prepared to face any major attack.

He was taking part in a debate, which was remarkably free from inter-party invectives, on the recent ambush of an Indian patrol by Pakistani troops and Pakistani incursions on the western and eastern borders.

He said that the threat represented by Pakistan was serious and should not be minimized, but at the same time he advised Members not to take an alarmist view of the situation.

One of the suggestions made by several members, including Mr. Nath Pai (P-SP) who initiated the discussion, was that something telling should be done and the Pakistani intruders should be pursued into their territory.

Mr. Chavan disagreed with the view that the intruders should be pursued into their territory as this would create international complications.

He said it was difficult to say what plot the Peking-Rawalpindi axis might have hatched against India during Mr. Chou En-lai's recent visit to Pakistan, but the Government of India was certainly on the alert.

"Our preparedness in this matter is as good as can be reasonably expected." He added parenthetically that he had discussed the matter with top army officers before coming in to reply to the special defence debate.

His assurances as well as his disclosure that over the past 13 months Pakistan had taken more punishment in the shape of a large number of casualties went a long way in assuaging Opposition apprehensions of complacency on the part of the Government even in the face of a series of provocative border incidents created by Pakistan.

He referred to an incident which took place on February 26 in which an intruding Pakistani party was repulsed four miles south-east of Titwal. The raiders fled, leaving three dead.

"Radio Misdirection" Of Aircraft By Pakistan:

In a Note handed on February 27 to the Pakistan High Commissioner by Mr. C. S. Jha, Commonwealth Secretary, India has protested against "radio misdirection" of Indian aircraft by a radio station in Pakistani territory.

The Note gave two specific instances of "radio misdirection" of Indian aircraft searching for the IAF Ilyushin which had been missing over Kashmir since February 17.

According to the Note, an Indian Dakota flying in the Jammu area was given wrong directions "by an unknown ground station" on February 19 and again on February 20. These misdirectons, it pointed out, would have led the Dakota to Chaklada in West Pakistan.

There had also been other instances of "deliberate and mischievous misdirection" of IAF planes from the ground.

Bringing these instances to the notice of the Pakistani authorities, the Government of India asked them to ensure that such cases of "mischievous and dangerous misdirection" from a radio station in Pakistan or Pakistani-controlled territory were not repeated.

D. Chinese Stone Cairns To Mark "Line Of Actual Control" —Indian Protest: A protest Note which was laid on the table of Parliament on February 29 by the Minister of State for External Affairs, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon said that the Indian Government had obtained "very definite" information that Chinese troops in Aksaichin in Ladakh were setting up stone cairns to mark the so-called "line of actual control" as unilaterally defined by the Government of China.

The Note said that by this action the Chinese Government was deliberately negativing the Colombo proposals. Acceptance of the proposals, according to the sponsors themselves, was not to prejudice "the position of either of the two Governments as regards its conception of the final alignment of the boundaries."

The Chinese attempt to mark their "line of actual control" was first noticed a few weeks earlier. After the relevant facts were collected, the Chinese Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Chen Chao-yuan was called to the Ministry of External Affairs on February 26 and given the Note of protest.

The stone cairns are being set up mainly along the northern portion of the line reached by the Chinese forces in their offensive in October-November, 1962 in the Western Sector. Most of India's 43 posts over-run during the invasion were located on territory to the east of this stretch of the line. The Chinese attempt to consolidate its territorial gains is thus in respect of a part of the zone to be demilitarized under the Colombo proposals.

India's protest Note said: "The Government of India wishes to make it perfectly clear that if it is imagined that these stone cairns that are now being erected will demonstrate, at some future date, the existence of any demarcated boundary along the so-called 'line of actual control' the Government of China is deceiving no one but itself. The Government of India is perfectly well aware that no such stone cairns have existed before and that they are being set up only now during these last few weeks by the Chinese army of occupation completely illegally and with obvious sinister motives.

"The Government of India wishes to place it on record that these latest moves of the Chinese Government must necessarily add to the existing tensions between the two countries and can in no way help towards a peaceful settlement of the India-China differences, which the Chinese Government has always professed to seek."

The Note mentioned the fact that the Chinese Government took many unilateral steps to subvert the Colombo proposals. In open and wilful contravention of the proposals, China established seven posts in the Western Sector, six of which were located in the demilitarized zone. The posts were largely the creation of the Chinese aggression of 1962. It was obvious that China was seeking to impose a unilateral settlement on India in terms of its own declarations of October 24 and November 21, 1962.

said that more Indian and Russian scientists would exchange visits this year.

Fifty Indian post-graduate students would be admitted to Soviet institutions.

In the field of literature too, he said, Indo-Soviet ties would be strengthened. A group of artistes from the Soviet republics, ballet dancers, singers, writers and art critics would visit India and Indian writers, editors and librarians would visit Russia.

There would also be an exchange of cinematographers, exhibitions, and broadcasting programmes.

He said that a similar agreement was being discussed with a Chinese delegation in Moscow.

F. Trade Agreement With Yugoslavia: Indo-Yugoslav trade, which is now around Rs. 20 crores each way, will increase to Rs. 50 crores over the next five years, as a result of a new Agreement on trade and economic co-operation concluded in New Delhi on February 26 between the two countries.

Special stress has been laid in the Agreement on diversification of mutual trade and the need to step up exports of manufactured and semi-manufactured industrial goods.

The Agreement, which was signed by Mr. Jeze Brilej, President of the Yugoslav Board for economic relations with foreign countries, and Mr. Manubhai Shah, Indian Minister for International Trade, also envisages collaboration in the setting up of a number of industries.

Besides shipping, these include thermo and hydro-electric plants, food processing, leather and textiles, cement, mining equipment, chemicals and pharmaceuticals, machine tools, aluminium, geological projecting and oil drilling, iron and steel and aluminium.

In regard to shipping, a further meeting will take place between representatives of India and Yugoslavia to determine the type of vessels to be ordered by Indian shipping companies and the terms of repayment.

It was also proposed to avail of Yugoslav help in pushing up the indigenous shipbuilding capacity. The two Governments will also set up joint standing committees in New Delhi and Belgrade to pursue implementation of the Agreement.

Yugoslavia has also agreed to assist India in improving the productivity in the Vizag shipyard.

It has been agreed that in regard to some export items, such as lemongrass oil, sandalwood oil, desi cotton, cigarettes, cheroots, bananas and fruits, special investigations will be made by Yugoslav enterprises for making imports on a long-term basis.

At present, India's exports to Yugoslavia consist of iron and manganese ores, jute goods, shellac and tobacco. Imports from Yugoslavia include fertilizers, machinery, tractors, non-ferrous metals and mercury.

The forthcoming World Trade Conference was also discussed and there was similarity of views. Both the sides agreed that representatives of both the Governments would closely co-operate before and during the Conference for its success.

H. Statutory Control Over Steel Abolished: The Central Minister for Steel, Mr. C. Subramaniam announced in the Lok Sabha on March 2 that the Government had abolished statutory control over the price and distribution of all but a few categories of steel. The decontrolled categories constitute about two-thirds of the production of steel.

Categories which will continue to be controlled are pig-iron and ingot moulds, bottom plate, billets and tin bars, plates, sheets, widestrips, skelp, tin plates, hoops and their respective defectives.

Everyone will now be free to trade in the decontrolled categories. Regarding other categories, the existing controlled and registered stockists will function as usual for a transitional period after which the distinction between controlled and registered stockists will be abolished.

It has also been decided to discontinue the operations of the Steel Equalization Fund for new transactions, and there will be no new transactions involving payment either to or from the Fund. But accruals to and payments resulting from its previous transactions will continue.

The decision about the Fund means that there will be no longer any distinction between sale prices and retention prices whether in the case of controlled or uncontrolled categories, and therefore no surcharge. Mainly for this reason the excise duties on various categories of steel have been revised.

The decisions have been taken on the basis of the recommendations of the Raj Committee.

Accepting the "principal recommendation" of the Committee, the Government has formed a Joint Plant Committee with representatives of the main producers and the Railways with the Iron and Steel Controller as chairman. Its main function is to plan the production of both controlled and decontrolled categories.

Regarding the decontrolled categories, the Government will not fix prices any longer. But it expects that the Joint Plant Committee will announce and list prices—base prices as well as extras—from time to time. These will be the ex-works prices.

Explaining the implications of the Government's decision to decontrol several categories of steel at a news conference on March 2, Mr. Subramaniam said that the resulting re-organization would involve an average increase of Rs. 30 per tonne in the price of the varieties that would continue to be controlled.

While permitting this increase the Government had taken into account likely increase in costs by a possible rise in the price of fuel.

The changes may also necessitate the levy of a surcharge on imported steel as its price was lower than that of indigenous steel.

I. Agricultural Prospects For 1964: The Central Food and Agriculture Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, said in the Lok Sabha on March 2 that the prospects of improvement in the food situation this year were not very good.

In the course of his reply to a debate on the food situation, he announced that the general crop position except in respect of rice was causing concern to the Government. The position in regard to wheat, pulses and other cereals was not satisfactory, and this necessitated stricter vigilance and more regulatory measures.

He announced a series of measures under the Government's consideration to tide over the difficult situation. One was a review of the rice procurement system with a view to doubling procurement to one million tons this year against half the quantity in 1963.

The second, he said, was to streamline licensing of grain dealers and making conditions more rigid to prevent them from hoarding. Bank credit to dealers had already been squeezed, and there might be further restrictions on such credit.

He observed that the question of progressively taking over rice mills was also engaging the attention of the Government. The Government would also import more wheat and rice under PL 480 to build up an adequate buffer stock of four million tons of wheat and two million tons of rice with a view to minimizing price fluctuations.

Already the Conference of Food Ministers held recently had decided to fix not only floor prices but also maximum prices of foodgrains with a view to ensuring that price variations before and after harvest did not affect the market much.

Long-term measures, he said, were well known as they had been discussed in the House quite often. They included intensification of cultivation in selected districts, increased supply of improved seeds and fertilizers and a greater emphasis on minor irrigation which yielded quicker results.

J. Export-Import Advisory Council Meeting: Inaugurating a two-day meeting of the re-constituted Export-Import Advisory Council in New Delhi on February 26, the Minister for International Trade, Mr. Manubhai Shah, said that the Government proposed to take over trade in certain "highly profitable items" from established importers.

He said the diminishing role of established importers would have to be curtailed further and their quotas "drastically reduced."

State trading organizations and other organized agencies and associations would gradually take over trade in some of the profitable goods, still handled by established importers.

Expansion of State trading in the field of foreign trade, he thought, was not only beneficial but "inevitable".

He however, made it clear that further expansion of the activities of State trading organizations would have to be done with "efficient programming" in respect of selected bulk commodities, which yielded the best results.

He revealed that the volume of State trading had increased over the past few years to an annual rate of Rs. 160 crores, representing nearly 10 per cent of the country's total foreign trade.

He traced at length the achievements on the export front and outlined broadly import policy for 1964-65, to be announced at the end of March.

While export and defence needs would continue to receive priority there might be a "slight liberalization" of imports of plant, equipment, capital goods and basic raw materials and components required by industry.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He pointed out that the main difficulty in liberalizing imports was the non-availability of foreign exchange resources. Despite higher exports and lower imports and the consequent improvement in the balance of payments position, India was still in a difficult situation as she had to repay in the coming years outstanding debts to friendly countries.

Therefore, unless larger aid was forthcoming after the Paris meeting of the 'Aid-India' Consortium in March it would be difficult to increase the foreign exchange allocation for commercial imports. Further cuts might have to be imposed on items of low priority or where indigenous output had gone up.

He expressed the hope that the Consortium would take into consideration India's increasing foreign exchange needs while deciding the quantum of aid for the rest of the Third Plan period. The outcome of this meeting would have an "important bearing on import policy for the coming year."

Investment In Foreign Countries:

Addressing the Council on February 27, Mr. Manubhai Shah said that Indian investment in foreign countries was "an invisible form of export" and should be given full encouragement.

He also suggested a "modest" export target of Rs. 840 crores for 1964-65. He described a suggestion to raise it to Rs. 1,000 crores next year as "rather impractical".

He extended the Government's full cooperation "in cash or kind" to businessmen to step up exports. To reduce freight costs he suggested the formation of a joint committee (to include shipping interests) to work out a system of parity in freight rates, at least for some selected commodities which have a good foreign market.

He promised to do all he could to solve the difficulties which the Goa business community was reported to be facing. He added, however, that while the Government would offer assistance in regard to their freight difficulties and their needs for essential imports, it would not allow consumer goods to be imported.

He advised the auto-ancillary industry to give the Government a list of its import requirements and promised to do what he could to help them. He pointed out that there was a good export market for their products in various countries and efforts should be made to explore such markets.

He rejected a suggestion by Mr. Kamalnayan Bajaj to set up a consortium or corporation to ensure Indian investments in foreign countries. He felt that such a step could be taken only after these investments had grown to a respectable size. He also felt that an offer of protection went against India's own policy on foreign investment in the country.

Earlier, Mr. Bharat Ram, President of the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry said that during his visit to Goa he had found businessmen there suffering from a "sense of frustration."

Dr. V. K. R. V. Rao and Mr. T. N. Singh, members of the Planning Commission, expressed the view that investments in foreign countries should be made only at the request of those countries. The initiative should come from them. Proposals to invite foreign capital to India were usually initiated in this country, they pointed out.

Both Mr. Rao and Mr. Singh suggested that the cost of production should be reduced to enable Indian products to compete in the foreign market.

Mr. Rao called for greater efforts at exporting agricultural produce. He also felt that the possibility of collaboration with "outside interests"—like the British—should be explored to increase exports.

K. National Income: The national income of India (at 1948-49 prices) was Rs. 13,370 crores in 1962-63 and Rs. 13,060 crores in 1961-62 compared to Rs. 12,730 crores in 1960-61 at the beginning of the Third Plan.

The per capita income at 1948-49 prices has been estimated at Rs. 294.7, Rs. 294.3 and Rs. 293.2 in the years 1962-63, 1961-62 and 1960-61, respectively. This was revealed by the 11th issue of the annual White Paper on national income released by the Central Statistical Organization.

The estimates for 1961-62 included in this paper are based on the detailed methods of estimating followed for the earlier years and show an upward revision over the preliminary estimates published last year. These upward revisions, have inter alia, been due to the incorporation, for the first time, of the results of the random sample crop-cutting survey in respect of sugarcane in Punjab.

The estimates for 1962-63, which are still preliminary and based on partial material, have also undergone a slight upward change compared to the 'quick' estimates released in November, 1963 (see page 5527).

As in 1961-62, which recorded a restricted rise of 2.6 per cent in the total national income over the previous year, the year 1962-63 also witnessed a smaller increase of 2.4 per cent in total national income over 1961-62. This was due to a fall of 2.2 per cent in agricultural output in the year 1962-63; the contribution to national income from agriculture in that year being less by Rs. 110 crores compared to the previous year. This fall was, however, more than offset by a total rise of Rs. 420 crores in the contribution made by all other sectors taken together.

	Net national output (in Rs. 100 crores)		Per capita net output (in Rs.)
	At current prices	At 1948-49 prices	At current prices	At 1948-49 prices
1950-51	95.3	88.5	266.5	247.5
1951-52	99.7	91.0	274.2	250.3
1952-53	98.2	94.6	265.4	255.7
1953-54	104.8	100.3	278.1	266.2
1954-55	96.1	102.8	250.3	267.8
1955-56	99.8	104.8	255.0	267.8
1956-57	113.1	110.0	283.3	275.6
1957-58	113.9	108.9	279.6	267.3
1958-59	126.0	116.5	303.0	280.1
1959-60	129.5	118.6	304.8	279.2
1960-61	141.4	127.3	325.7	293.2
1961-62	148.0	130.6	333.6	294.3
1962-63 (preliminary)	154.0	133.7	339.4	294.7

After adjusting for purely statistical differences between the crop production estimates of 1960-61 and 1961-62 and 1962-63 the increase in national income and per capita income in real terms amounts to five per cent and 0.5 per cent respectively during the first two years of the Third Plan period.

Expressed at current prices the national income was Rs. 15,400 crores and Rs. 14,800 crores in 1962-63 and 1961-62 respectively as against Rs. 14,140 crores in 1960-61. The per capita income at current prices was Rs. 339.4, Rs. 33.6 and Rs. 325.7 in 1962-63, 1961-62 and 1960-61 respectively. The larger increase at current prices than at constant prices was due to increase in prices.

L. Mr. Shamsuddin Resigns As Prime Minister Of Jammu And Kashmir—Mr. G. M. Sadiq Elected: At a meeting of the National Conference Legislature Party in Jammu on February 27, the Prime Minister of Jammu and Kashmir, Mr. Shamsuddin said he had decided to resign in deference to the wishes of the former Premier, Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed.

On February 28, Mr. G. M Sadiq, whose name was proposed by Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed, was elected unopposed as leader of the Legislature Party.

On February 29, Mr. Sadiq assigned portfolios to his Cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Sadiq will hold the portfolios of general administration, education, planning, information, cultural academy, Ladakh affairs, law and judiciary.

Mr. Mir Qasim became Revenue, Food and Agriculture Minister. He will also look after relief and rehabilitation, supplies and price control, forests and social welfare.

Mr. D. P. Dhar will be in charge of law and order, transport, housing and tourism.

Mr. Trilochan Dutt has been assigned finance, health, industries and local bodies.

Mr. O. N. Dhar has been appointed private secretary to the Premier.

Policy Statement:

Addressing a news conference in Jammu on March 1, Mr. G. M. Sadiq suggested that an eminent jurist of the calibre of Mr. M. C. Chagla be asked to examine the desirability of abrogating or modifying Article 370 of the Constitution which gives a special status to the State.

He said all barriers "which stand in the way of fuller participation by Kashmiris in the broader currents of national life" should be removed. He was personally in favour of modifying Article 370 rather than abrogating it. Its abrogation might lead to difficulties in achieving closer integration of the State with the rest of the country.

"We cannot afford to live in isolation because it breeds backwardness and fosters parochialism."

Replying to a question, he said he was still hopeful that Mr. Shamsuddin, former Premier, would join the new Ministry.

He announced that a Bill seeking to change the nomenclature of Head of State from Sadar-i-Riyasat to Governor and of Premier (of Kashmir) to Chief Minister would shortly be introduced in the State Legislature.

He was in favour of the "Governor" being appointed by the President rather than being elected by the State Legislature.

He stressed the need for bringing the National Conference and the Congress closer "both ideologically and organizationally." It would be his endeavour to bring back those who had defected from the National Conference.

He said it had been decided to release all persons who had been arrested following the disappearance of the holy relic but were not directly involved in the theft.

Replying to a question, he said he did not want to comment on the question of releasing Sheikh Abdullah. "I cannot say anything about the legal aspect of the case...but so far as the political aspect of the case is concerned, it should be considered."

He affirmed the Government's determination to enforce law and order. All steps would be taken to ensure fundamental rights. "I solemnly pledge to uphold the honour of the individual against high-handedness and coercion. It will be the earnest endeavour of my Government to ensure the rule of law and respect for rights and liberties of the people."

In this context, he said it was proposed to amend the Detention Act to bring it on a par with the corresponding law in force in the rest of the country. The Press Act would also be similarly amended.

He said the Government would make the utmost effort to root out corruption and favouritism.

The transport policy, especially the issue of route permits, would be re-examined.

He appealed to the people to co-operate with the Government and help it to fulfil the "colossal task" before it.

He endorsed the Central Government's policy towards Pakistan which, he said, should change its anti-Indian posture. He called upon the Pakistan Government to guarantee protection to minorities. This would go a long way in improving the relations between the two countries.

Mr. Shamsuddin Elected Deputy Leader: On March 3, Mr. Shamsuddin was elected Deputy Leader of the National Conference Legislative Assembly Party.

Mr. Dina Nath Mahajan was elected Deputy Leader of the Party in the Upper House and Sardar Kulbir Singh was elected Chief Whip.

M. Partial Rationing Of Foodgrains In UP: The Uttar Pradesh Government announced on February 26 partial rationing of foodgrains and took several other measures to tackle the difficult food situation in the State.

Among the other steps to deal with the situation were limitation of the number of guests at any feast to 50, ban on sale by fair price shops of grains supplied by private agencies, permission to roller mills to work on holidays, and opening of fair price shops in every panchayati adalat area.

The State Food and Civil Supplies Minister, Mr. Jagmohan Singh Negi, who outlined these steps at a news conference, disclosed that 1,00,000 tons of imported wheat had been rushed to the State from Bombay and Calcutta.

The Governor, Mr. Vishnu Sahay, hoped that with the help and co-operation of the people, the State would meet the challenge with confidence.

He said: "The State was pre-occupied with the developments consequent on the Chinese attack on our northern borders. Though there has been no armed aggression on our borders during the course of the last year, the situation arising out of the aggression by the Chinese continues to have its effect on our State.

"Various measures, taken to meet the challenge, in the sphere of home guards, civil defence organization, village defence parties and building up the morale of our people have been continued in order to meet any emergency. The Government has kept stocks of essential supplies. I am glad to be able to say that the morale of our civilian population is extremely high".

But with the co-operation of the people, Plan programmes would have to be implemented and the targets achieved so that the common man might be able to feel the dawn of a better future.

He hoped that the Central Government would recognize the difficulties (of the State) and afford necessary financial assistance in order to supplement the resources.

Q. Mysore Budget For 1964-65: The Mysore Finance Minister, Mr. B. D. Jatti, presented in the State Assembly on March 2 a tax-free Budget for 1964-65, with a small surplus of Rs. 7,01,000. Revenue receipts were estimated at Rs. 11,106,03,000 as against an expenditure of Rs. 11,099,02,000.

The Budget envisaged a uniform increase of Rs. 5 per month in the dearness allowance of all the Government employees drawing a basic pay up to Rs. 300 per month. This applied to employees of Government commercial concerns, local bodies and aided educational institutions.

Mr. Jatti announced a grant of Rs. 15 per month as old age pension to those above 70 years, and a five-rupee ad hoc increase in DA for pensioners drawing pensions up to Rs. 100. He also said that the Government would consider grant of family pensions to widows.

He did not include in the Budget the estimated expenditure of Rs. 20,00,000 on old age pension—Rs. 120,00,000 due to increased DA to Government employees and Rs. 2,00,000 on account of increased DA to pensioners. He told the House it would be necessary to find resources to meet the expenditure on the above accounts.

The revised estimates for 1963-64 showed a surplus of Rs. 220,74,000 as against Rs. 109,87,000 surplus anticipated. Revenue was expected to be of the order of Rs. 10,386,09,000 and expenditure Rs. 10,165,35,000, as against the anticipated revenue of Rs. 9,911,52,000 and expenditure of Rs. 9,801,65,000.

An improvement of Rs. 474,54,000 was expected under revenue due to increased collections under State revenue like commercial taxes, State excise and forest, and arrears of allocation of income-tax by the Centre. An increase of Rs. 363,70,000 was anticipated under expenditure mainly due to supplementary grants obtained for additional unforeseen expenditure.

The year (1963-64) was expected to close with a balance of Rs. —272,87,000.

Next year's Budget anticipates an increase in revenue, mainly under sales-tax, other taxes and duties, animal husbandry, industries, forest, the State's share of Central excise duties and grant-in-aid from the Central Government.

The increased expenditure over the revised Budget of 1963-64 is because of a provision for interest on borrowings, larger grants for working expenses of industrial concerns, payments due on account of fee concessions and higher provisions for various departments.

The capital expenditure of 1964-65 is placed at Rs. 3,564,15,000 and the year is expected to close with a balance of Rs. —881,87,000.

Mr. Jatti said the outstanding ways and means advance at the end of 1963-64 on the cover of securities might be Rs. 25 crores and it would be necessary to request the Central Government for temporary accommodation during 1964-65 to cover the overall gap.

R. Gujerat Budget For 1964-65: The Gujerat Chief Minister, Mr. Balwantrai Mehta, presented in the State Assembly on March 2 the Budget for 1964-65, estimating a revenue surplus of Rs. 5.77 crores.

Revenue receipts were estimated at Rs. 94.15 crores and expenditure at Rs. 88.38 crores. No fresh taxes were proposed in the Budget.

Mr. Mehta, who also holds the Finance portfolio, told the House that while he did not propose to levy additional taxes, he had decided to make certain changes, necessitated on grounds of administrative convenience, in the schedules to the Sales-Tax Act.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Budget revealed an overall deficit of Rs. 3.91 crores and the year 1964-65 was expected to close with a cash balance of Rs. 2.86 crores, in addition to the Treasury bills and long-term investment of Rs. 7.15 crores.

But, on account of the relief proposed in the Budget, the year would now close with the cash balance of Rs. 1.51 crores, in addition to the Treasury bills and the long-term investment.

He announced that Government employees drawing pay up to Rs. 300 per month would get an ad hoc increase of Rs. 5 per month in dearness allowance.

This increase would be admissible to Government staff deputed or transferred to panchayats, as well as to primary school teachers. The municipalities and panchayats would get Government grants if they gave similar increase to their employees.

He also announced an increase in the temporary increase in pension that was at present admissible to low-paid pensioners. Over 28,000 pensioners would be benefited by this.

The Budget proposed reduction in the rate of passenger tax in municipal areas from 5 per cent to one per cent. A grant equal to one-third of the tax on lands and buildings in urban areas collected in a municipal area was proposed to be made to the municipalities concerned.

He made it clear that the revenue surplus of Rs. 5.77 crores did not take into account the extra expenditure of Rs. 1.35 crores on account of the increase in dearness allowance and the expenditure on grant from the tax on lands and buildings in urban areas.

The loss of Rs. 8,00,000 on account of reduction in the rate of passenger tax in municipal areas would be offset by an increase of an equal amount on account of certain changes in the entries in the schedules to the Bombay Sales-Tax Act, 1959.

After taking into account all these items, the revenue surplus would go down to Rs. 4.42 crores. Mr. Mehta gave the estimate of capital expenditure for the next year at Rs. 29.44 crores.

He announced that Section 13 of the Bombay Sales-Tax Act, 1959 would be suitably amended so as to extend the period for the liability for the payment of purchase tax from three to 12 months.

He also announced that the production of the certificate under Section 10-B of the Bombay Sales-Tax Act would be done away with for the purpose of claiming exemption from retail sales-tax in respect of sales made by a licensed dealer to a registered dealer.

Reviewing the progress made during the Third Plan, he said that by the end of the current year the State would have spent Rs. 127.50 crores as against the total Plan allocation of Rs. 236.50 crores.

For the Ukai multi-purpose project, a provision of Rs. 2 crores was being provided in the next year's Budget. The annual provision for the project would be stepped up in the years to come so as to complete it by 1971.

He disclosed that the question of increasing the capacity of Koyali Refinery to 4 million tons was under the active consideration of the Oil and Natural Gas Commission.

He stated that according to the programme fixed for the development of petro-chemical complex near the refinery area, the production of benzene, toluence and aromatics would be undertaken in the first phase. In the second phase, the production of isoprene and poly-isoprene had been proposed.

He disclosed that large deposits of good quality fluorite had come to light in Chhota-Udepur area offering great economic advantage to the State and the country.

S. Madras Budget For 1964-65: The Madras Budget for 1964-65 reveals a revenue deficit of Rs. 3.34 crores at current levels of taxation, the receipts and the expenditure standing at Rs. 137.48 crores and Rs. 140.82 crores respectively.

While no fresh taxes have been proposed, the rate of sales-tax on cotton at the point of last purchase and cotton yarn at the point of first sale is being raised from one to two per cent to avoid loss of revenue under Central sales-tax, as also on cotton waste, cotton yarn waste, and artificial silk fibre yarn and staple fibre yarn.

The effect of this adjustment will be lowering the deficit to Rs. 2.34 crores.

Mr. M. Bhaktavatsalam, the State Chief Minister, also in charge of Finance, presenting the Budget in the Assembly on February 29, said that the anticipated revenue deficit coming in the wake of revenue deficit of the same order in the current year called for some remedial action.

The revision of sales-tax as proposed, besides getting increased revenue under general sales-tax, will also yield additional revenue under the Central sales-tax.

He said the Plan outlay for the current year would be Rs. 63 crores as against Rs. 60 crores budgeted. It would be Rs. 70.53 crores for the next year and Rs. 76 crores for the last year of the current Plan.

The total State outlay on the Third Plan will be about Rs. 325 crores. The administrative machinery is now fully geared to the fulfilment of such a plan. Resources gap could best be closed by intensifying small savings and stepping up collections of general revenues.

A major measure proposed in the Budget was free secondary education for all, irrespective of economic status. Other measures included liberalization of the family pension scheme by way of social security to Government employees, grant of a minimum pension of Rs. 20 to all retired Government servants and a promise to expand the old age pension scheme.

T. Madhya Pradesh Budget For 1964-65: Presenting a deficit Budget in the Madhya Pradesh Vidhan Sabha on March 2, the State Finance Minister, Mr. S. N. Shukla, proposed fresh taxation measures designed to augment the revenue by Rs. 145,00,000.

At the same time he increased the dearness allowance of Government employees drawing salaries up to Rs. 200 by Rs. 5 a month.

The existing exemption from payment of entertainment tax in respect of admission fees of 12 nP and below has been abolished to bring a revenue of Rs. 20,00,000. It is proposed to levy a tax on urban immovable property.

Exemption of several items from sales-tax has been withdrawn while that on some items has been raised from 5 per cent to 6 per cent.

Mr. Shukla estimated an original overall deficit of Rs. 815,49,000. This, he thought, would go up to Rs. 820,49,000.

In his Budget speech Mr. Shukla said that the revised estimate for the last year was—revenue Rs. 10,307,85,000 and expenditure Rs. 96,98,57,000, thus showing a revenue surplus of Rs. 609,23,000 against an estimated deficit of Rs. 48,61,000.

He estimated the current year's revenue at Rs. 107,72,97,000 and expenditure at Rs. 102,41,20,000.

He said that the implementation of all the steps proposed by him would result in the State producing as its share of resources for the Third Plan for this year Rs. 18.56 crores as against the Planning Commission's target of Rs. 18.50 crores.

During the past seven years since the new Madhya Pradesh was formed, the Budget had been presented by Mr. M. L. Gangwal, now the Development Minister.

U. Kerala Budget For 1964-65: The Kerala Budget for 1964-65, presented in the State Assembly on February 28 by Mr. R. Sankar, the Chief Minister, showed a revenue surplus of Rs. 3.58 crores.

He estimated revenue for the next year at Rs. 79.58 crores and expenditure on revenue account at Rs. 76 crores. The revenue estimate included Rs. 16.93 crores expected from the Centre as the State's share of Central taxes and grants-in-aid.

Mr. Sankar, however, said that there was a deficit in the capital Budget to the extent of Rs. 2.76 crores. The Budget did not envisage any new taxation proposals.

He said that the Government was exploring alternate sources of raising finances to cover the capital Budget deficit. If those efforts did not succeed, "we have to take appropriate steps to ensure that the expenditure does not outstrip the resources available."

He said that he was expecting a loan of Rs. 27.13 crores from the Central Government next year by way of Plan assistance. Kerala's share of small savings collections was fixed at Rs. 5 crores.

Announcing certain welfare measures, he said that the dearness allowance of low-paid Government employees and private school teachers would be enhanced.

JORDAN

A. Ancient Tomb Discovered: The bejewelled skeleton of a woman was found in the richest tomb ever discovered in Jordan.

Ashes from fires that had cooked meals 800 years before Christ were piled in ovens. Grains of wheat were preserved in storage bins.

American archaeologists reported these findings on February 26 while digging in the ruins of a 5,000-year-old lost city in the Jordan river valley.

Bronze vessels unearthed from the ruins, they said, may be the first ever found of the type used in King Solomon's Great Temple. The archaeological team was headed by Mr. James Pritchard of the University of Pennsylvania.

The archaeologists found a thick wall about half-a-mile long running around the Iron Age city, and a spectacular camouflaged stone stairway for use in times of war. The city had been abandoned since about 800 BC.

An Amman message said on February 19 that the remains of a temple dating back to late Bronze Age had been found during the excavations carried out at Deir

Alla in the Jordan Valley by a Dutch team from the University of Leyden.

According to the Jordan Antiquities Department, the temple was destroyed shortly after 1200 BC by an earthquake which also destroyed the whole city. The earthquake was followed by a fire in which mud bricks were burnt red.

Other discoveries by the same expedition were sugar mills, large mill stones, and potters' workshops where sugar pots were made.

LAOS

A. Renewed Clashes: Renewed fighting was reported in the Plain of Jars region in central Laos in the last week of February.

A Vientiane message on February 27 said that key Right-wing military positions commanding the south-eastern gateway to the Plain of Jars had fallen to Pathet Lao forces after a three-day attack.

Laotian military sources expressed fears that the Pathet Lao attacks, coming after two weeks of relative calm, might be a prelude to large clashes in the region.

In April and May, 1962, the Plain, 110 miles north of Vientiane, became a testing ground for the strength of neutralist forces and the attacking Pathet Lao. Although forced to retreat, the neutralists did not abandon the Plain entirely.

General Phoumi Nosavan, Deputy Prime Minister and commander of the pro-Western Right-wing Army, said on February 27 that the Pathet Lao attacks "seriously compromised a chance for a peaceful settlement of the Laotian problem."

An official speaking for General Phoumi Nosavan announced that Right-wing troops had abandoned their positions on Phou Khe mountain, about 10 miles south-east of the Plain and over-looking a Pathet Lao stronghold in Xieng Khouang, after three days of "intense and prolonged" artillery fire. A Right-wing military communique said that the situation in the Plain had become "critical."

Earlier on February 22, the Viet-Nam News Agency quoted the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, of having said that he could not agree to a request that his troops should cease fire.

It said the Prince in a message to the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, on February 16, said: "It is unjust that the Neo Lao Haksat (political organization of Pathet Lao) armed forces, acting in self-defence, are asked to cease fire while the attackers—Gen. Phoumi Nosavan's troops—continue in wanton disruption and invasion."

The Agency quoted Prince Souphanouvong as saying there could be no relaxation in the "tense situation" in Laos "until US imperialism and Gen. Nosavan stopped their attack and encroachment upon the liberated areas controlled by the Neo Lao Haksat and the neutralist faction."

MALAYSIA

A. Indonesia Accused Of Violating Cease-Fire Agreement: Malaysia charged Indonesia on February 22 with violating the month-old cease-fire on the Sabah border.

A Government statement said protests had been sent to Thailand's Foreign Minister, the UN Secretary-General, and the US Attorney-General, who were the interested parties in the truce.

The Malaysian Government said the Defence Ministry had listed six truce violations between January 30 and February 21. Five of the incidents were said to have taken place in Sarawak and one in Sabah.

British military authorities confirmed that a British marine corporal was killed and four other marines were wounded in an Indonesian attack in Sarawak's Lundu district.

The Malaysian Defence Ministry said a police post in the Bau region of Sarawak was "attacked by an unknown number of Indonesian border terrorists." Two Malaysian police officers were reported killed and six others wounded.

The Malaysian Government on February 25 decided to ask Thailand's Foreign Minister to arrange an urgent meeting of Ministers from Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines to discuss ways of saving the cease-fire.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the decision was reached during an emergency session of the Cabinet. He said it was hoped a meeting could be arranged before this month-end.

But in Bandung, the Philippines Foreign Secretary, Mr. Salvador P. Lopez on a visit to Indonesia along with President Macapagal said moves were under way to call off a new tripartite Ministerial conference and hold a summit conference on Malaysia instead. He indicated the Philippines and Indonesia had agreed that a second round of Ministerial talks would serve no useful purpose.

Indonesian View:

Talking to journalists at Tampaksiring in Bali on February 26, the Foreign Minister of Indonesia, Dr. R. Subandrio said it was hoped that a Malaysia "summit" conference could be arranged after a Foreign Ministers' conference in Bangkok.

He was speaking after a two-hour meeting between President Macapagal and President Sukarno. The two Presidents discussed "all aspects of the Malaysia problem."

Earlier Mr. Salvador Lopez, the Philippines Foreign Minister, said that he and Dr. Subandrio had sent a message to Mr. Thanat Khoman, the Thai Foreign Minister, suggesting that a Foreign Ministers' meeting be held with Malaysia in Bangkok on March 3.

The same day (February 26), President Sukarno said at a rally that Indonesia would continue to "crush Malaysia". "We are happy to have the Filipino people as brothers because they too plan to crush colonialism."

Sukarno-Macapagal Communique:

President Sukarno and President Macapagal in a joint communique issued on February 28 proposed an early "summit" meeting with Tengku Abdul Rehman to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Malaysian issue.

The place and date for the "summit" were still to be determined.

The communique said the two leaders agreed that the tripartite ministerial conference should "prepare the necessary groundwork" for the "summit."

It said both Presidents continued to regard the cease-fire "as an important factor in creating the favourable atmosphere necessary" for a "comprehensive and integrated solution of the Malaysia problem."

President Sukarno re-assured President Macapagal that the Indonesian Government would observe the cease-fire and expected the other parties (Malaysia and Britain) to do likewise.

During the visit, both leaders found they shared a similarity of approach and singleness of purpose in forging the "Maphilindo" confederation into a living reality.

The communique also stressed the need for convening a second Afro-Asian Conference of the Bandung type and emphasized their adherence to the doctrine that Asian problems should be solved by Asians themselves.

At a news conference after the signing ceremony, President Macapagal said he was optimistic about a "summit" conference on Malaysia, but added that finding a solution to the complex issue "is not going to be easy."

He hoped Malaysia would go to a "summit" conference regardless of whether the cease-fire problems in North Borneo had been solved.

Possible "summit" sites suggested during his talks with President Sukarno were Bangkok, Pnom Penh and Tokyo.

Commenting on the communique, Tengku Abdul Rehman said any "summit" peace talks should be preceded by agreement at the ministerial level talks. He said that without ministerial talks there was no point in having a "summit" meeting.

British Support Re-affirmed:

Speaking in Glasgow on February 24, the British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, warned Indonesia: "We stand by Malaysia. We made it clear and our troops are there to do so."

He added: "We must show to the world that countries must cease to threaten each other with war, otherwise we shall end up entering a nuclear exchange."

He said Britain had given the countries of the Malaysian Federation their independence "in the hope and belief that they shall maintain it.... We stand by its independence."

PAKISTAN

A. National Economy—Government And Trade Body's Views: A Rawalpindi message on February 10 said that the Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry and the Government differed on the state of the country's economy.

A committee formed by the Federation has, after six months of study, said that Pakistan "is currently in the grip of one of the worst economic recessions with fall in the general consumption level and sharp rise in the stocks of finished goods".

In a rejoinder an unidentified economist of the Pakistan Government said that various economic indices showed remarkable progress in the economy of the country.

The Federation committee's report entitled "Recession and depression" said that the rate of growth in the national and per capita income had declined. The per capita income which stood at Rs. 251 in 1960-61 had risen to Rs. 261 but declined again by Rs. 2 to Rs. 259 in 1962-63. "Prospects for the current year are not bright."

Similarly the national income had shown a downward trend. The rate of growth of industrial production had fallen. A sharp fall in the value of industrial shares had been recorded in the recent past.

The Government economist said the supply of money stood at Rs. 746 crores in December, 1963—showing an increase of Rs. 92 crores over the amount a year ago. The bank deposits and credits were also high.

The foreign exchange position was "equally satisfactory" although the country's exports increased only by Rs. 9 crores and the imports rose by Rs. 71 crores. The reason for this was the import of large quantities of raw materials and other essential goods. Substantial foreign aid to Pakistan was also responsible for this gap in the import and export trade.

The economist blamed floods, cyclones and other natural calamities for the decline in the national and per capita incomes.

PHILIPPINES

A. President A. Sukarno's Visit: President A. Sukarno of Indonesia visited Manila in the second week of January when he reviewed with President Diosdado Macapagal the developments in regard to Malaysia since they last met and signed the Manila Agreement on July 31, 1963.

A third signatory of the Manila Agreement was Malaya and its successor Federation of Malaysia had since broken off diplomatic relations with both the Philippines and Indonesia. Indonesia continued its "confrontation" policy against Malaysia.

President Sukarno's trip to Manila was officially described as an "official working visit." Dr. Sukarno and the officials who accompanied him on the visit held a series of discussions with Philippine leaders from January 7 to 11.

A joint communique issued in Manila on January 11 on the Sukarno-Macapagal talks said:

"The two Presidents re-affirmed their adherence to the principles of the Manila Agreements and re-iterated their faith in Maphilindo as an effective vehicle for devising Asian solutions to Asian problems by Asians themselves.

"Accordingly, the two Presidents considered it essential to strengthen Maphilindo as a living reality, in the firm belief that within its frame-work constructive and equitable solutions can be found for many of the serious problems of the region, including those arising from the formation of the Federation of Malaysia, the promotion of regional security, and the development of regional economic co-operation. Maphilindo as a living reality has helped to prevent a final and irreparable disruption of normal and friendly relations among the three partners, the present difficulties amongst them being temporary in nature.

"The two Presidents noted with regret that the present mushawarah included only two of the three signatories to the Manila Agreements, but expressed the hope that the next mushawarah will witness the participation of all. They made it clear that the present meeting has been devoted to peaceful and constructive ends in an effort to forge anew a lasting unity amongst the three members of Maphilindo.

"In this context, the two Presidents remain convinced that the present crisis over Malaysia can be solved by firm adherence to the spirit and principles of the Manila Agreement. They cherish the hope that a tripartite mushawarah could be convened to resolve existing differences amongst the three signatories to the Agreement.

"President Sukarno elaborated upon the meaning of the Indonesian policy of confrontation as follows:

"It is not a policy of aggression, much less a policy of territorial expansion. Its main purpose is to oppose the neo-colonialist policy of an outside Power which, by distorting the procedures laid down in the Manila Agreement for the ascertainment of the wishes of the peoples concerned regarding the establishment of Malaysia, is bent on wrecking Maphilindo. This divide and rule policy, backed by preponderant military force, can be checked by only a firm defensive policy of confrontation, lest the national independence and security of the countries of this region succumb to foreign domination.

"President Macapagal, bespeaking the sentiments of the Filipino people, expressed the hope that in keeping with the basic purpose of Maphilindo all the signatories to the Manila Agreement, in the face of the present crisis, shall exercise moderation and restraint in order that an early settlement of the differences amongst them may be reached through peaceful means.

"President Sukarno reassured President Macapagal of the support of Indonesia for the Philippine claim to Sabah within the frame-work of the principle of self-determination. President Macapagal expressed appreciation for this reassurance.

"The two Presidents noted with satisfaction that the principles and purposes of Maphilindo are gradually being understood and appreciated by nations outside the Maphilindo area. They share the confident hope that Maphilindo will find ever increasing acceptance amongst the peoples of the region, in line with the world-wide trend towards closer co-operation among neighbouring countries animated by a common desire for peace, prosperity and security under the aegis of freedom and justice.

"In order to strengthen the economic relations between the two countries, discussions were held on problems relating to trade and economic matters, using as a basis the Philippine-Indonesian Trade and Economic Agreements signed in Djakarta on May 27, 1963. Meetings were held to review the implementation thereof. It was agreed to extend the Agreements to the end of 1965.

"Regarding trade, agreement was reached to expand the volume of trade for the year 1964 above the levels previously agreed upon. Problems connected with trade were discussed and obstacles removed, particularly those governing payment arrangements and sea communications.

"Regarding economic co-operation, the conversations explored further and in detail joint co-operation in the exploitation of forestry and fisheries resources. Arrangements were discussed for the processing of raw materials from Indonesia and the Philippines in Philippine and Indonesian industries having unused capacities.

"On scientific and technical co-operation, the two countries agreed to expand the programme for the exchange of trainees, particularly in the fields of agriculture and forestry.

"The remaining administrative difficulties in the Philippines to the granting of limited traffic rights to Garuda Indonesian Airways were also resolved.

"It was agreed that the Philippines-Indonesian Coconut Commission will formally be in operation as of today, January 11, 1964. This Commission, entrusted with the continuing research, development and promotion of the coconut industry, is open to other coconut-producing countries.

"Agreement was also reached to establish the administrative machinery:

(a) For the promotion and expansion of commercial and economic relations between the two countries;

(b) For the preparation of the ground-work for processing arrangements;

(c) For the continued implementation of the provisions of the agreements.

"The two countries agreed on regular consultations with respect to the full implementation of the Philippine-Indonesian Trade and Economic Agreements.

"President Sukarno expressed his deep appreciation for the cordial reception and hospitality extended to him and the members of his party by President Macapagal. The two Presidents noted with gratification the fruitful results of this first mushawarah since the inception of Maphilindo which provided tangible evidence of its validity and its usefulness to its members and to the region as a whole."

B. Trade With India: India and the Philippines signed on February 14 a memorandum on trade relations between the two countries.

The two countries, ending five days of exploratory talks in Manila, expressed belief that there were considerable prospects for expanding trade and for technical and economic co-operation.

The memorandum said India's import restrictions need not stand in the way of expanded trade.

TURKEY

A. Attempt To Assassinate Mr. Ismet Inonu: Three shots were fired on February 21 at Mr. Ismet Inonu, the Prime Minister, as he entered his car after leaving his office.

All of them missed. The police later arrested a man who was stated to have said under interrogation that he was an "enemy of the May 27 revolution" and was connected with the banned Democratic Party of the late Mr. A. Menderes, the former Prime Minister. (The May 27 revolution is the name given to the military coup in May, 1960, which overthrew the Menderes regime.)

The arrested man was identified as Mesut Suna (32), an employee of a textile factory in Kayseri, central Turkey. Kayseri is the city where Mr. Celal Bayar, the former President, and other members of the deposed Menderes regime had been imprisoned for the past two years.

Mr. Inonu seemed unmoved by the assassination attempt. He said to Ministers and Deputies who came to congratulate him on his escape: "Don't worry. These things will happen."

Mr. Inonu has been Prime Minister since November, 1961. He was formerly President and before that was Prime Minister under Kemal Ataturk.

According to reports, Mr. Inonu was in the back of the car, ready to go to the Grand National Assembly, when the pistol shots were fired by the gunman, standing on a stone platform near the entrance to the Prime Minister's office.

The shots were fired at a range of 10 feet and the police said that all three hit the car in a group less than 3 inches square. A crowd of about 10 civil servants and bystanders rushed at the assailant and began to hit him. The police and Mr. Inonu's bodyguard rescued him from the threatened lynching.

The chauffeur drove the car off at speed, but Mr. Inonu leant forward and said: "Slow down. We must not give the impression of running away."

In the Assembly he took part in the Budget debate. Later, in a broadcast to the nation, he said that an unknown person had fired at him as he was entering his car, but that the nation was not to worry. "I am continuing my duties. I am still on the job."

He also told members of the Press gallery of the National Assembly, with whom he talked and joked: "My health is good, my nerves are good and my brain is working."

About 1,000 youths and students demonstrated in central Ankara in favour of Mr. Inonu. They sang songs and shouted: "Long live Ismet Pasha".

About 20 arrests had been made in Ankara and in Kayseri, in central Turkey, as a result of the attempt to assassinate Mr. Inonu. Some of those arrested were believed to be members of the Justice Party.

Mesut Suna, an electrician in a Kayseri textile factory, who was arrested immediately after the shots were fired, was alleged to have told the police that he had been led astray by religious preachers. "They told me Inonu was an anti-Muslim and communist." He was also alleged to have said that he was alone in the attempt and had no accomplices. The Justice Party has denied all connexion with the affair.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. French Parliamentary Delegation's Visit: A French Parliamentary delegation, which had visited Peking earlier, arrived in Hanoi in the second week of February.

The leader of the delegation, Mr. Francois-Bernard told newsmen in Hanoi on February 8 that the aim of the visit to North Viet-Nam was to promote economic and cultural exchanges between the two countries.

The Hsinhua news agency quoted him as saying that economic and cultural ties between the two countries would surely develop.

However, the delegation was believed by observers to have a much bigger objective than what was being given out officially. Mr. Francois-Bernard's visit to Hanoi was regarded as exploratory in nature, to probe the reactions of the President, Dr. Ho Chi-Minh to Gen. de Gaulle's scheme for neutralization of the Indo-China peninsula.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. New Government: It was officially announced in Saigon on February 9 that the 37-year-old officer who seized power on February 1, Major-General Nguyen Khanh, had become Premier.

Major-General Duong Van Minh, leader of the deposed junta, became Chief of State.

The following is the official Cabinet list:

Head of State—Gen. Duong Van Minh;

Premier—Gen. Nguyen Khanh;

Vice-Premier for Pacification—Nguyen Ton Hoan;

Vice-Premier for Economy and Finance—Nguyen Xuan Oanh;

Vice-Premier for Cultural and Social Affairs—Brig.-Gen. Do Mau;

Commissioner of State without Portfolio—Le Van Hoach;

Foreign Minister—Phan Huy Quat;

Interior Minister—Ha Thuc Ky;

Minister of Works and Communications—Tran Ngoc Oanh;

Minister of Education—Bui Tuong Huan;

Defence Minister—Maj.-Gen. Tran Thien Khiem;

Rural Affairs Minister—Nguyen Cong Hau;

Health Minister—Vuong Quang Truong;

Labour Minister—Dan Sy Hien;

Information Minister—Pham Thai;

Finance Minister—Nguyen Xuan Oanh,

Economy Minister—Au Truong Thanh;

Justice Minister—Nguyen Van Mau;

Secretary for Social Affairs—Tran Quang Thuan; and

Secretary of State at Premier's Office—Nghiem Xuan Hong.

General Minh's decision to join the new regime was seen by observers as a special victory for General Khanh, who had strived to retain the prestige and continuity symbolized by General Minh. Gen. Minh led the junta that overthrew the Government of President Ngo Dinh Diem in November, 1963.

It could not be confirmed what conditions if any, General Minh put on his acceptance. On the day of the coup he refused to go along with General Khanh. He was said to have insisted on the release of the other junta leaders arrested in the coup.

The two Generals appeared side by side at the military ceremony on February 9—General Minh tall and smiling, General Khanh shorter and stern as he read a brief statement of policy.

He said: "The revolutionary Government shall, within a period of one year, do its best to carry out two historic missions: to save the country and to build up the nation.

"To save the country we shall bring forth all our strength to repel the Communist aggression, to bring security to our people, especially those in the countryside.

"To build up the nation we shall establish the basic institutions of the nation, a Constitution and a duly elected Parliament."

B. Americans Killed In Bomb Explosion: Three Americans were killed and about 50 injured, including a number of women and children, when a terrorist bomb exploded in the entrance lobby of an American community cinema in Saigon on February 17.

Confusion and indignation spread among American residents of Saigon as investigators probed the facts and motives of the attack, the second bombing in one week, directed against American Servicemen and dependants.

The explosion was heard miles across the city. The dead and injured were taken to an American Navy hospital, where three of the injured men went immediately into the emergency room.

A week before, a bomb exploded under the grandstand of an American softball park, killing two men and injuring 23 other Americans. Earlier, there were bomb explosions in two bars that killed one American and injured eight.

C. US Support Re-affirmed: President L. B. Johnson re-affirmed on February 22 American support to South Viet-Nam in its fight against Communist guerrillas.

He was speaking at the University of California where he and President Adolfo Lopez-Mateos of Mexico received honorary degrees.

He said that in foreign affairs new challenges "grow daily" at the White House.

"In South Viet-Nam, terror and violence, directed and supplied by outside enemies, press against the lives and liberties of a people who seek only to be left in peace.

"For 10 years our country has been committed to the support of their freedom, and that commitment we will continue to honour.

"The contest in which South Viet-Nam is now engaged is first and foremost a contest to be won by the Government and people of that country for themselves. But those engaged in external direction and supply would do well to remember that this type of aggression is a deeply dangerous game."

Russian Criticism:

Russia in an "authorized statement" published by Tass on February 25 called on USA to withdraw its military personnel and equipment from South Viet-Nam.

The statement said "intensification of hostilities by the United States and their followers can only complicate the solution of the South Viet-Namese problem".

It said USA should "end its interference in the affairs of South Viet-Nam, withdraw its military personnel and military equipment from that country and give the South Viet-Namese people an opportunity to decide their future themselves".

It added that "the Soviet people cannot remain indifferent to such development ...they follow with profound sympathy the just national liberation struggle of the South Viet-Namese people and will render the necessary assistance and support to this struggle."

Troop Activities:

Meanwhile, Viet-Namese troops launched a large operation in the Cambodian border area 120 miles from Saigon known as "Seven Mountains" on February 25.

Initial contact with the Viet-Cong was reported to be heavy.

Only sketchy reports of the action were available, but it appeared the engagement was the heaviest since the lunar New Year holidays.

The worst case of Viet-Cong train sabotage in several months was also reported on February 25. Using mines and a large ambush force, enemy guerrillas blew up the Da Nang-Saigon passenger train and 50 yards of track and then ambushed a relief force.

The incident occurred 280 miles north-east of Saigon near the town of Phy My, on the main North-South rail line.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. ICAO Activities During 1963: A Press release on February 14 said that the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) during 1963 worked on several items affecting those who use the aeroplane to cross international frontiers. Two of these involved international air law.

The Organization also worked towards enhanced safety and efficiency of transportation.

The first of the items affecting international law was the coming into force in August, between more than 30 States, of an amendment to the Warsaw Convention of 1929. This amendment, drafted by ICAO, raised the maximum amount for which an air carrier was liable in the case of injury or death of a passenger travelling internationally, from $US8,291 to $US16,582.

The second was the drafting of an international law convention covering crimes committed aboard aircraft and acts endangering the safety of the aircraft or of persons or property on board. This convention, drawn up in Tokyo in September, will come into force when it is ratified by 12 States.

As the result of the ICAO Facilitation Division meeting in Mexico City in March, and the subsequent amendment by the ICAO Council of the International Standards and Recommended Practices for Facilitation a thorough modernization was made of the rules governing the passage of an aircraft, its passengers, baggage cargo and mail from country to country. It is expected that these revised standards will result in the establishment of new facilities and services at international airports, and in the further reduction of customs nd immigration formalities, both for passengers and shippers of cargo.

In the technical field, many ICAO meetings prescribed changes necessary because of the rapid development of air navigation. One, covering rules of the air, air traffic services and aircraft operations, recommended major changes to the Rules of the Air and to the regulations governing the supporting air traffic services.

Also in the technical field, ICAO continued its efforts to help its member-States provide the air navigation facilities and services necessary for safe and regular flight.

During the year, ICAO continued to participate in the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance (EPTA) of United Nations and in the UN Special Fund. Under agreements with the Fund, ICAO is the executing agency for civil aviation training centres in the United Arab Republic, Mexico, Morocco, Lebanon, Thailand and Tunisia, and for an aeronautical research laboratory in India.

ICAO also provides air navigation facilities and a training centre in the Congo (Leopoldville) for the UN Congo operations.

A Flight Safety Foundation "Award for Distinguished Service"—for assistance to aviation throughout the world in the achievement of safer utilization of aircraft—was given on November 7 in Athens to the personnel of the weather ships which man the ICAO's Ocean Station Net-work in the North Atlantic.

During 1963, Jamaica, Algeria, and Trinidad and Tobago became members of ICAO, bringing the total membership to 101.

The net budget of ICAO for 1964 is $US4,705,397.

B. Tunnel Under English Channel—Agreement Between France And Britain: The British Minister of Transport, Mr. Ernest Marples, said in London on February 6 that Britain and France had agreed to go ahead with plans to build a rail tunnel under the 21-mile English Channel.

An announcement to this effect was also made in Paris.

He told the House of Commons that it was clearly understood that the two Governments would have to have full control of any future operating company. The next step would be to discuss further the legal and financial problems involved.

He said that as a result of joint studies, the British Government and French Government "consider that the construction of a rail-channel tunnel is technically possible and that in economic terms it would represent a sound investment of the resources of the two countries."

In September, 1963, an Anglo-French working group of experts came out in favour of a two-stream rail tunnel.

The tunnel proposal envisages a 32-mile link with 23 miles of tunnel under the sea. It would start at Dover on the English side and Sangatle on the French side.

There would be two separate tunnels, each containing a single rail track and capable of handling car ferry trains, at intervals varying from 5 to 30 minutes. Vehicles would be driven on and off wagons at the two termini.

Estimated cost of the under-water link is about £140 million sterling and it would take about 8 years to complete.

C. World Council Of Churches On Ecumenical Movement: The World Council of Churches, which ended a five-day meeting in Odessa (Ukraine) on February 14, said in a statement that Christianity had entered a "new period" in the history of the ecumenical movement.

While welcoming the attention the Roman Catholic Church was devoting to ecumenism (unity of all the Christian churches), the Council's statement stressed that all its member-churches had equal privileges.

Dr. W. A. Visser T'Hooft, General-Secretary of the Council's executive committee, told a news conference that even if some churches—such as the Roman Catholic—felt they could not take part in the Council's work at present, "we still want close relations with them".

Leading delegates to the Council meeting indicated privately that they hoped the Vatican would make some approach to the Council or some of its member-churches this year.

Council sources said the executive committee had sent President Makarios a telegram from Odessa urging him to act "in the spirit of the United Nations Charter" in the Cyprus crisis.

The committee resolved to start a new Africa appeal with an initial target of $1 million to meet special needs arising from recent disturbances there.

Announcing the decision, Dr. Visser T'Hooft referred particularly to refugees from Angola, Mozambique, Sudan and Ruanda.

He said the next meeting of the World Council's Central Committee would be held in Enugu, Nigeria, at the invitation of Sir Francis Ibiam, Governor of the Eastern Region.

The Council issued a statement urging Governments to discuss disarmament together rather than make unilateral proposals.

He also asked the Chairmen to notify the Geneva Conference participating nations of complaints filed by him.

A. Protest To India On Alleged Violation Of Air-Space: A Press release of the Ministry of Defence and External Affairs in Colombo on February 28 alleged violation of air-space by an Indian military aircraft.

It said the High Commissioner in New Delhi had been instructed to lodge a protest.

It said: "This action has been taken after an investigation into the forced landing of an Indian military aircraft at Ratmalana airport on February 24, 1964.

"The investigation has disclosed that two aircraft took off from the Indian aircraft carrier INS Vikrant at 7-30 p.m. on that day. At that time the carrier was about 65 miles south-west of Colombo and the aircraft were within the Colombo flight information region.

"In accordance with accepted international practice air traffic control at Ratmalana should have been informed when the two aircraft took off to enable it to warn other planes in the vicinity. This was not done.

"It has been learnt that about 10 to 15 minutes after take-off the electrical and navigational systems of one of the aircraft failed completely.

"Around 8-50 p.m. air traffic control heard the drone of aircraft and endeavoured to make contact on the available frequencies. There was no immediate response but shortly afterwards an aircraft identifying itself by its call sign Whisky 34 enquired whether an aircraft with the call sign Whisky 21 had landed. No attempt was made by the aircraft (Whisky 34) to inform air traffic control that Whisky 21 was in distress or that it desired to land at Ratmalana. It was Ratmalana air traffic control which had to initiate contact and even then the signals given were evasive. Whisky 34 was hovering over the airport area for about 20 minutes and was in clear violation of Ceylon's air-space.

"Shortly after these circumstances were reported to the authorities, an internal security squad of the army was sent to Ratmalana. When the aircraft landed, the disabled craft and its crew were taken into custody until bona fides were established.

"Between 1 a.m. and 2 a.m. on February 25 the Indian High Commission contacted the Ministry of Defence and External Affairs and requested clearance for a third aircraft from the carrier to land at Ratmalana with engineers to repair the damaged aircraft. Clearance was granted at 7-30 a.m. The army guard was withdrawn, and the crew released from custody on the morning of February 25."

Indian Reply:

The Government of India in a Note handed to the Ceylon High Commissioner in New Delhi on March 7 denied that the Indian naval plane from the aircraft carrier Vikrant entered Ceylon air-space as had been suggested by the Ceylon Government.

The Government of India expressed its regret that the Ceylon authorities should have subjected the crew of the aircraft, which landed in Ratmalana airport in distress, to severe interrogation.

The following is the text of India's reply:

"The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the Ceylon High Commission and have the honour to say that the matters mentioned in the High Commission's Note dated March 2, 1964 have been enquired into and the following facts have been ascertained from the log book and navigational records of INS Vikrant and of the aircraft concerned.

"On the 24th of February 1964, the aircraft carrier, INS Vikrant, was in the open seas to the west of Ceylon in passage from Cochin to Port Blair. At about 19-30 hrs. that day when the aircraft carrier was about 65 miles south-west of Colombo, an aircraft IN 206 (call sign Whisky 31) was launched. The INS Vikrant lost all communication-contact with it soon after the launching. As the aircraft failed to establish contact the INS Vikrant made efforts to contact it on all channels and also asked IN 210 (call sign Whisky 34) which had been launched shortly after IN 206 to try to contact the IN 206. These efforts to establish contact were unsuccessful. The INS Vikrant then asked IN 210 to climb to 5,000 feet and from this altitude contact the airport authorities at Ratmalana and enquire whether they had any information about IN 206. This was done, the contact being established at about 21-00 hrs. The airport control authorities at Ratmalana a little later informed IN 210 that IN 206 had landed there.

"It transpired that the electrical and navigational system of IN 206 had failed totally soon after it was launched. Since in such conditions landing back on the aircraft carrier would have been extremely hazardous, the aircraft decided to land at the nearest airport, which happened to be Ratmalana. Since its communications system was not functioning, it could not inform Ratmalana airport of its intention to land there, or seek the necessary permission. They regret that in the circumstances in which the aircraft IN 206 was placed, it had to land at Ratmalana airport without permission, causing inconvenience to the Ceylon authorities.

"It will be seen from the above facts that there was no communication between IN 210 and the aircraft in distress. The former did not know the whereabouts of IN 206 and did not at any stage accompany it. It had therefore no reason to seek permission for IN 206 to land at Ratmalana. Furthermore, IN 210 did not at any time come nearer than 15 miles of the coast of Ceylon. This has been verified from the navigational plot kept by the INS Vikrant which had recorded a continuous plot of the tract and position of IN 210 at all times.

"The High Commission's Note under reference mentioned the rules and regulations of the International Civil Aviation Organization. As the Government of Ceylon are doubtless aware, these rules are only applicable to civil aircraft. The INS Vikrant had all her aircraft under positive radar control, and in the event of any other aircraft entering this one would give necessary instruction to her aircraft to prevent collision. Thus, in such cases, there is no hazard whatsoever to other aircraft which may happen to be in the same area.

"Since the second aircraft IN 210 did not enter the territorial air-space of Ceylon, the Government of India are unable to appreciate the protest made by the Government of Ceylon in respect of this aircraft.

"The Government of India have been informed that the crew of the disabled aircraft IN 206 were, on landing at Ratmalana airport taken into custody and subjected to severe interrogation. The Government of India expresses its disappointment at the treatment meted out to the crew of the aircraft who were servicemen from a fellow Commonwealth and a friendly and neighbouring country. In this connexion the Government of India would like to remind the Ceylon Government that the Government of India has always shown the maximum accommodation in the matter of landing of Ceylonese military aircraft at Indian airports. On one occasion in 1962, a Ceylonese military aircraft landed at Madras without diplomatic clearance even when the aircraft was not in distress. The Indian authorities, nevertheless, gave in a spirit of understanding and friendship towards Ceylon, the normal facilities to such aircraft and crew and refrained from treating the latter other than in a friendly manner. While pointing this out the Government of India also wishes to express its appreciation of the help received by the crew of the Indian naval aircraft from the Ceylon naval and air force authorities.

"The Ministry of External Affairs avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the Ceylon High Commission the assurances of their highest consideration."

B. Ban On Private Practice By Government Doctors: The Government has banned private practice by Government medical specialists from August.

Government medical officers in remote areas in the Island, where private practitioners are not available, will, however, be exempted from this rule.

This decision has been described by the Medical Specialists Association of Ceylon as a "retrograde step".

The specialists will be given an option to retire or remain in service without private practice from that date. Those who remain in service will receive an allowance in lieu of private practice.

C. Suspension Of West German Aid: The West German Government told Ceylon on February 19 that its attitude towards the communist regime in East Germany had made it impossible to continue with the agreed development aid programme.

The agreement affected was signed by the West German Government in Colombo in November granting Ceylon a DM6 million (about £540,000) long-term development loan. More aid was in prospect.

The Federal Government said that it had learnt "with the greatest dissatisfaction" of the announcement by the Ceylon Foreign Ministry that agreement had been reached with the East German regime to promote the present trade mission in Colombo to a consulate-general.

Bonn has taken this step against the Ceylon Government in accordance with the Hallstein doctrine, which lays down that the Federal Government does not have diplomatic relations with any country, except Russia, which recognizes East Germany. Bonn has not yet been notified that the Ceylon Government has accorded the East German representative there his exaquatur as consul-general. In previous conflicts with other countries Bonn has made the exequatur the sign of according diplomatic recognition, but being content if this is withheld.

During the last 10 years Ceylon had received DM40 million in capital loans from West Germany for various development projects.

CHINA

A. Bid To Market Crude Oil In Japan: China, though stated to be short of oil, has launched a campaign to sell its crude oil in Japan.

Trade and Government circles in Japan have two explanations for this development. One is that the cost of coal in China is so cheap compared with that of crude oil that the Chinese are in a position to export crude oil by heavy reliance on coal as the source of industrial energy. According to these quarters the price of coal in China is only about 1,500 yen a ton. This is less than one-sixth of the price in Japan which is about 10,000 yen.

Latest figures of China's coal production are not available in view of the complete official silence in the past five years. However, the production in 1958, at the height of the so-called "great leap forward" campaign was announced as 270 million tons, although actual production is believed to be much lower. This is because it is known that in most instances the claimed production figures under the "great leap forward" reflected more the set targets rather than the real physical achievements.

Nevertheless, the 1957 figure was a realistic 130 million tons and, although, for two or three years after 1958, production fell drastically, there is reason to believe that the position has improved somewhat in the subsequent years. In 1963, China's coal production was estimated at about 220 million tons and this figure is believed to be rising steadily again.

Secondly, in 1960, crude oil production is believed to have totalled six million tons, but this was short of China's requirements by about three million tons and the shortage was made up through imported crude which was refined in the country. It is, therefore, safe to estimate that China has capacity for refining about six to nine million tons of crude oil. After 1960, China was placing more emphasis on indigenous production of more crude oil, rather than on refining facilities in order to achieve self-sufficiency in oil.

It is believed, however, that the total energy resources available in the country —power coal and oil—are short of domestic requirements but the offer to export crude oil seems to be motivated by the desire to expand refining facilities by importing them from Japan. The fact that crude oil is being offered despite an indigenous shortage would suggest that China is making sacrifices in other respects in order to become autonomous in its petroleum requirements and thus be free from reliance on the outside world.

There are unconfirmed reports of new rich oil reserves having been struck in the Chinchow region in former Manchuria in north-east China. How vast these new deposits are is not known, but the reports circulating in Japan suggest that they are very big. Even granting that the deposits are large, the question is one of transporting the oil.

Bid For Japanese Freighters:

Shipbuilders in Japan said on February 24 that China planned to order several Japanese freighters, but the deal was in a preliminary stage.

Hitachi Shipbuilding Company, one of Japan's largest shipbuilders, said China had made inquiries about several freighters of 10,000 and 15,000-ton class.

A spokesman said, however, that the deal was very vague, based on a report from Japanese trade representatives in Peking.

Since Japan has no diplomatic ties with Peking, its trade is conducted on a private basis. The trade officials were dispatched by Japanese firms trading with Peking.

PAKISTAN

SUMMARY: Security Council Meeting On Kashmir Issue; Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit; British Loan.

A. UN Security Council Meeting On Kashmir Issue: The UN Security Council met on February 3 at Pakistan's request to discuss the Kashmir issue.

In a 90-minute speech, Pakistan's Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, called for Security Council action to bring about a "speedy and peaceful solution" of the Kashmir problem and at the same time held out an implied threat of resumption of hostilities if no action was taken.

He said his Government could not be expected to remain a spectator "if the people of Kashmir continue to be suppressed by force."

He sought to rebut the argument that conditions in Jammu and Kashmir had changed and warned: "If this change is supposed to operate to the disadvantage of those who had laid down their arms on the pledge given by UN that their rights would be peacefully secured, is it not virtual inducement to them to resume hostilities?"

Mr. Bhutto read from a prepared text from which he departed, though significantly, only in one place when he referred to the situation in Kashmir in 1948 and 1964.

In his text he said: "If it be said that the circumstances have changed they have changed only in this respect, that in 1948 the people of Kashmir and tribesmen were engaged in armed fighting against India in Kashmir and in 1964 they are not." While delivering the speech, he cut out the reference to tribesmen and changed the prepared text about 1964 to read: "They have only recently risen in rebellion."

His speech was built mainly upon the Council resolutions of 1951 and 1957 and alleged that India was violating the resolutions and thus defying the Council.

He put forward the argument about "Indian colonialism" in Kashmir and the plea for self-determination. He also pictured Pakistan as a small State being threatened by a "domineering big neighbour" and, therefore, entitled to sympathy from the Council and UN.

He dwelt at length on conditions in Jammu and Kashmir following the disappearance of the holy relic from the Hazratbal mosque quoting from Anglo-American journals as well as Indian papers to suggest that the Jammu and Kashmir Government had "completely broken down" and the people had "risen in rebellion" demanding a plebiscite.

He also quoted from Sheikh Abdullah's letter to the Indian President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan calling for a change in the Government's Kashmir policy. Though he quoted extensively from Indian and foreign papers about the situation in the State, he also asserted that India had built a "wall of secrecy" and the rest of the world did not know what was happening inside the State because of "censorship" and "police rule."

He also claimed that the situation in East Pakistan had returned to normal, but added: "Nevertheless, the communal situation in the affected areas of both countries remains tense and needs continued vigilance."

He alleged that "rebellion in Jammu and Kashmir" had led to communal riots in the two countries and relations between them had deteriorated.

Mr. M. C. Chagla's Speech:

On February 5, the Indian delegate, Mr. M. C. Chagla addressed the Security Council.

He made it clear that any directive from the Security Council in the shape of another resolution on Kashmir would not be welcome.

In the course of a presentation of India's case, he said such a resolution could only further aggravate feelings. However well drafted, it would not satisfy both parties.

For the record, he told the Council on behalf of India once again that India would not under any circumstances agree to a plebiscite in Kashmir.

He said that the conditions and contingencies which qualified the original offer in this respect had irreversibly changed, first, because Pakistan had never vacated its aggression and secondly because Pakistan had made an irretrievable gift to China of 2,000 square miles from that part of Kashmir illegally occupied by her. Passage of time and other factors, all of them of Pakistan's making, had also made the UN resolutions of 1948 and 1949 obsolete. These resolutions, he declared, were no longer binding on India.

After pointing out how Pakistan was playing the Chinese game of sowing discord and weakening India and how this had become the lodestone of Pakistan's foreign policy ever since she became a nation, he drew the attention of the Council—particularly the UK and USA—to the fact that today it was India alone which was resisting Chinese expansionism southwards and asked it to note the strategic location of Kashmir in West Asia. Point by point, he refuted the arguments and allegations that had been advanced by Mr. Bhutto in his opening speech. He drew special attention to Pakistan's obsession with the two-nation theory and how she sought to give every event in India or Kashmir a communal twist. This was what had coloured Pakistan's version of the Hazratbal incident and communal disturbances in East Bengal and Calcutta which Pakistan had deliberately provoked.

He said: "The two resolutions of the Security Council dealing with plebiscite were conditional and contingent on Pakistan vacating its aggression and the condition has not been complied with. It is really more than a condition. It was the very basis on which these two resolutions were founded and the condition not having been complied with and the basis having disappeared, these resolutions are no longer binding on us. In any case, by the passage of time and various other factors intervening, to which I shall draw attention a little later, they have become obsolete. We cannot possibly contemplate with equanimity the threat to the integration of our country and the danger to our cherished principle of secularism by the holding of a plebiscite in Kashmir. I wish to make it clear on behalf of my Government that under no circumstances can we agree to the holding of a plebiscite in Kashmir."

He indicted Pakistan for its communal policy, its incitement to violence and its treatment of minorities and contrasted these with India's policies and her record in this field.

He said it was Pakistan's animus against India, its hate-India policy and its communal and obscurantist outlook that vitiated relations between the two countries and not the Kashmir issue as had been said sometimes in United Nations and enunciated by Mr. Bhutto.

Re-iterating the Indian view that relations between Kashmir and the Indian Union were purely an internal matter, he said the changes that had taken place between the two since 1947 or were being contemplated were "part of the larger process of the organic growth of the Union of India."

Accusing Pakistan of conspiring with Communist China to make India domestically and internationally weak, he said: "India today is perhaps the only country which can stand up to Chinese expansion and aggression. If India failed, there will be nothing to control China's forward policy. It is therefore not only in the interest of India itself, but also in the interest of peace that India should be strong. We are very grateful for the aid that we have received from friendly countries. But the whole purpose of this would be completely nullified if India becomes domestically weak.

"Pakistan does not want India to be strong: it wants to weaken it both internationally and domestically. Its recent flirtations with China are clear evidence of this fact. In this context, Kashmir assumes great importance."

Dismissing as "baseless and mischievous" the connexion which Pakistan had sought to establish between India and Kashmir and the theft of the holy relic from the Hazratbal shrine, he said Pakistan had tried to give a communal turn to incidents in Kashmir. "To Pakistan, everything is communal. It cannot observe any event except through communal glasses. It cannot understand how Hindus and Muslims can live peacefully in Kashmir and have the best of relations. Its philosophy is that in the very nature of things, Muslims must hate Hindus and Hindus must hate Muslims."

When the relic was stolen, Pakistan expected there would be communal riots in Kashmir. Not only did it expect this, it did its best to incite them.

He then quoted from President Ayub Khan's speech at Sukkur on January 4 and from comments and reports in newspapers abroad—including a sentence of a report in an American newspaper which Mr. Bhutto had failed to cite while quoting earlier portions derogatory to India—and a comment in the Economist of London on Mr. Bhutto's "implausible accusation."

Mr. Chagla said that unfortunately for Pakistan, there was not only complete communal amity inside Kashmir—it required a modern, secular, rational outlook to understand this phenomenon—but a further significant fact was that these demonstrations inside Kashmir were not only not aimed against the Indian Government but showed complete confidence in the policies of the Indian Government.

The people of the State appealed to the Indian Government that they, rather than the local administration, should investigate this crime and bring the guilty to book.

"Hindus and Sikhs joined their Muslim brethren in mourning this loss. To the Hindus and Sikhs, the relic was not a Muslim relic, but a relic belonging to Kashmir, indeed to the whole of India. We in India respect each other's religion. Hindus revere Muslim saints and vice versa. We all join in the celebrations of different communities."

After quoting from other newspaper reports about the recovery of the relic and the special deedar held on February 3 when the relic was identified by representatives of the Action Committee, he said of demonstrations inside the Valley: "It is true that the demonstrations were aimed at the local administration. But surely it is the fundamental right in a democracy of the people to express their dissatisfaction with their Government. Such demonstrations are not unknown even in more sophisticated societies. The people in a democratic country have the inalienable right not only to show their want of confidence in its Government but to turn out the Government and elect another one.

"Having failed in its evil design to stir up trouble in Kashmir, Pakistan diverted its attention to East Pakistan and serious riots broke out in Khulna and Jessore and Muslims there attacked the Hindu minority.

"There were terrible incidents of looting, arson and stabbing. A large number of members of the frightened minority started a trek towards India which lay just across the frontier.

"It is strange that while in Kashmir itself, the large Muslim majority did not suspect Hindus of having a hand in the theft of the relic, 1,500 miles away, the Muslims of East Pakistan were demonstrating against the Hindus and accusing the Hindu community in Kashmir of anti-Muslim actions."

He quoted from a New York Times report on the East Pakistan riots and the "officially approved" processions there and said: "The repercussions of the Khulna riots resulted in riots in Calcutta. Refugees from East Pakistan came to the city with lurid tales of what had happened to their co-religionists on the other side of the frontier. The passions of the Hindus in Calcutta were inflamed and unfortunate incidents took place where Muslim lives were lost and some property burnt down."

Addressing the Security Council on February 9, Mr. Chagla said there was nothing before the Council on which it needed to take action over Kashmir as Pakistan had failed to substantiate any of its charges.

He said: "Pakistan came to the Security Council on two specific charges—that we are trying to integrate Kashmir further into India and that there is a grave situation in Kashmir which calls for some action by the Council. In my submission, the distinguished Minister of Pakistan has failed to substantiate either of these allegations."

Replying to Mr. Bhutto's speech before the Council on February 7, he said: "These recriminations, this unending debate, this making and answering of charges lead us nowhere. We are prepared to discuss all our outstanding differences with Pakistan, including Kashmir, once the bitter feelings and communal passions have subsided.

"Pakistan can help this by eschewing propaganda at home and abroad and by taking every measure to prevent incitement to communal passion in its Press and on its radio.

"I wish to assure the Foreign Minister of Pakistan with all the emphasis at my command that Pakistan has nothing to fear from India. We have no aggressive intentions. We feel that in the prosperity of Pakistan lies the prosperity of the whole sub-continent of India and this prosperity, both of India and Pakistan, depends upon the Hindus and Muslims in both the countries living peacefully side by side.

"Truth is that Pakistan wants Kashmir in support of its two-nation theory and that because the population of Kashmir has a Muslim majority it must necessarily form part of Pakistan."

He added: "Pakistan talks glibly of plebiscite. Does it realise what its consequences might be? In place of peace and quiet we may have bloodshed. If the theft of a sacred relic could be exploited to produce riots 1,500 miles away, stirring of communal passions on a large and massive scale may lead to serious communal riots all over India and Pakistan and migrations."

British Support To Pakistan:

On February 10, the British delegate, Sir Patrick Dean, supported Pakistan's stand on Kashmir.

The following are extracts from his speech in the Security Council:

"First, I wish to re-iterate my Government's position on the status of Kashmir and on the question of self-determination. This was made clear most recently by our sponsorship of the resolution adopted by the Security Council on January 24, 1957, which reminded the Governments and authorities concerned of the principle embodied in the Security Council's resolutions of April 21, 1948, June 3, 1948, March 14, 1950, and March 30, 1951, and the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan resolutions of August 13, 1948 and January 5, 1949, that the final disposition of the State of Jammu and Kashmir will be made in accordance with the will of the people, expressed through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite conducted under the auspices of United Nations. My Government stands firmly by the principles enunciated in that resolution today.

"We consider it unrealistic to consider the status of Kashmir purely in terms of the legal effect of the Maharaja's Instrument of Accession.

"It is impossible to leave out of consideration 15 years of discussion in this Council and the decisions taken by it. In short, my Government does not accept the contention that no dispute now exists, and that there remains, in Kashmir, nothing to be negotiated. Quite the contrary. A dispute does exist, which should be made subject to negotiation with due regard to previous Security Council resolutions and to the wishes of the people most directly concerned, namely, the people of Kashmir.

"I now turn to the action taken by my Government towards trying to find a solution of the Kashmir dispute in the period since the Security Council's last discussion of the matter in 1962. I need not explain to members of the Security Council why my Government has felt compelled to be active in the matter. The Council is well aware of our historical association with the problem and the ties of friendship and Commonwealth with both India and Pakistan, which make the continuing dispute between these two countries so distressing to my Government.

"It will be equally clear to members of this Council and, I trust, to the delegations of India and Pakistan, that a satisfactory, permanent political defence and economic arrangement for the Indian subcontinent can never be reached until there is an agreed Kashmir settlement. My Government is, therefore, bound to regard this as the ultimate objective, and constantly to seek ways and means of moving towards it.

"It was in this spirit, therefore, that my Government warmly welcomed the Joint Statement issued by Mr. Nehru and President Ayub Khan on November 29, 1962 which read as follows:

"'The President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India have agreed that a renewed effort should be made to resolve the outstanding differences between their two countries on Kashmir and other related matters, so as to enable India and Pakistan to live side by side in peace and friendship.

"'In consequence, they have decided to start discussions at an early date with the object of reaching an honourable and equitable agreement.

"'These will be conducted initially at the Ministerial level. At the appropriate stage direct talks will be held between Mr. Nehru and President Ayub.'

"We regarded this statement of intention as a major step forward and we followed the course of the Ministerial meetings which were subsequently held with keen anticipation. There were in all six rounds of Ministerial talks. Unfortunately, they came to an end on May 16, 1963, with an announcement that 'no agreement could be reached.'

"The subsequent course of events is familiar to all. Apart from the question of Kashmir, the delegations of Pakistan and of India have touched in their statements to this Council on other subjects of contention between their two Governments; notably communal rioting in East Pakistan and West Bengal, and the problem of population movements between these two areas.

"My delegation is not qualified to comment on the genesis of these communal outbreaks. Equally we have not got sufficient facts which would enable a judgment to be made on the merits of the case relating to population movements.

"To us the most immediate and practical way of handling these sources of tension between countries is by representatives of the Governments getting together around the conference table. We deplore anything that is allowed to stand in the way of negotiations, while men and women are exposed to injury and death.

"My delegation, therefore, welcomes the statement made by the distinguished delegate of India, in the context of these problems, that his Government is prepared to take any and every step in co-operation with Pakistan and that it would welcome a meeting of Ministers from both countries to discuss ways and means.

"My delegation welcomes the attempts being made by certain delegations to work for such a solution and we have no desire to complicate their efforts by laying down rigid lines of action which in our view should be followed.

"However, I should like to suggest that the Security Council should bear two factors in mind. The first is that the authority of this Council which we are all pledged to preserve, and the principles of the Charter require that the decisions taken by the Security Council in the course of the last 15 years should not be lost to view. The second is that the passage of resolutions which are ignored by one of the parties takes us no further forward and has not in the past led to the constructive solution which all members of the Council, so I presume, desire.

"The Security Council's attention should, therefore, be directed in the first instance to searching for common ground between India and Pakistan. The directions in which this common ground might be found appear to my delegation to be as follows:

"First, that both India and Pakistan should restore normal conditions and inter-communal harmony in their two countries and forthwith undertake talks on their communal and related problems with a view to preventing further outbreaks. If the two parties believe that the exercise of good offices in this connexion would be helpful, my delegation suggest that the Security Council should stand ready to discuss this aspect.

"Secondly, India and Pakistan should be prepared to resume negotiations on Kashmir and as necessary, other related matters. In this connexion I must emphasize that my Government's experience of the negotiations undertaken between India and Pakistan in the course of 1962 and 1963 has convinced them that some degree of outside help will be necessary if satisfactory results are to be achieved. It is for this reason that we have favoured mediation as both parties are aware from discussions we have had with them from time to time.

"We realize that neither Government accepted this contention last August, largely on the grounds that the time was not propitious, although our impression was they both agreed that mediation would be helpful at the right time.

"We now put forward for consideration the view that the extreme tension which characterizes Indo-Pakistan relations at the present time, as reflected in the bloodshed of the last few months, renders urgent the need for a bold approach.

"This, however, is a matter which we cannot press if it is not acceptable to both India and Pakistan. We shall content ourselves, therefore, with commending it to the urgent attention of both delegations. We suggest that they consider all possibilities in this regard, including that of engaging the assistance of the Secretary-General of United Nations. In conclusion, Mr. President, I would say that much clearly hangs on the efforts now being made by certain delegations behind the scenes."

US Stand:

The US delegate, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, told the Security Council on February 14 that India and Pakistan should accept mediation and suggested that the good offices of the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, should be used.

He expressed regret that India and Pakistan had been unable to reach a settlement through mechanism set up by the Council "or through bilateral talks."

He said the origin of the dispute was deeply buried in the history of the sub-continent but that both India and Pakistan had agreed to Council resolutions containing a compromise approach.

He said US support of the resolution was based on the principle of self-determination.

He declared that the Chinese aggression on India's frontier provided impetus for USA to urge a solution in 1963 through bilateral negotiations.

"The international community has a right to expect of these two great countries.... a diligent effort to resolve their dispute by peaceful negotiations, taking into account the free expression of the people concerned."

He said they should consider the possibility of the use of good offices to settle their dispute and that the offices of the Secretary-General could assist "in the third party negotiations."

He expressed the "earnest hope" that the two nations might be stimulated into making "a new and earnest" effort to achieve a solution. He declared that "a fresh start must be made" for the sake of humanity and peace.

Meeting Adjourned:

The Security Council adjourned on February 15 to meet again on February 17 to enable Mr. Bhutto to get instructions from his Government.

Though this was the purported reason for the adjournment, informed sources in New York said that the real objective for the adjournment was to enable Pakistan to exert pressure on the Council members to table a draft resolution or give a favourable consensus. Pakistan could later interpret this to mean that the Council wanted Indo-Pakistan negotiations on the basis of the Council's old resolutions.

India has made it clear that while she would be willing to accept as the Council's consensus any appeal for peace and improvement of the atmosphere and direct negotiations, she was not prepared to consider or accept any wording in a consensus which would imply in any way such negotiations and actions.

Mr. M. C. Chagla opposed India being kept waiting to suit Pakistan's convenience and said that the Council should decide the current exercise if necessary by sitting a couple of days more.

The Soviet Union gave support to India by suggesting that any Council action on adjournment should take note of the convenience of both India and Pakistan.

Though the United States remained silent it was known from American sources that they were opposed to Mr. Bhutto's plea for a short adjournment. An American source said: "We do not want any arm-twisting of us, keeping the Chou En-lai visit in mind."

Mr. Bernardes, the Brazilian President of the Council said that any member of the Council could move that Pakistan's proposal could not be put to vote.

However, the representative of Morocco chose his own motion suggesting that while adjourning the President could make it clear that the item continued on the agenda and the President could convene a meeting after consulting members and the parties concerned.

Debate Postponed Indefinitely:

The Security Council adjourned its Kashmir debate indefinitely on February 17 after Mr. Bhutto had failed to get a short adjournment which would have enabled him to keep the debate alive while he was having talks in Pakistan with the Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai.

Adjourning the Council on Morocco's motion, the President of the Council, Mr. Bernardes, said that the item continued to remain on the agenda as it had been for many years, and the Council could be reconvened if any member asked for a meeting.

Mr. M. C. Chagla's News Conference:

After the adjournment of the Security Council, Mr. M. C. Chagla told a news conference that Pakistan had failed to "get anything she came to obtain."

He added that Mr. Bhutto was returning to his country empty-handed—"perhaps to spread a red carpet" for Mr. Chou En-lai.

"I don't know whether he wants instructions from Mr. Chou as to how he should conduct the Kashmir affair."

He was critical of the stand taken in the debate by Britain and USA. To a newsman who suggested that India had been unhappy with the statement made by Sir Patrick Dean, he said that was the "understatement of the year."

Noting that he had conferred on the Kashmir problem in London with Sir Alec Douglas-Home on his way to New York, he said: "I expected when I came here that if the UK would not support us it would at least take a fair and impartial attitude between India and Pakistan.

"But I am sorry to say that in our opinion the UK took up a most partisan attitude."

He was surprised that Sir Patrick had stated that to discuss legality of the issues was unrealistic. "I thought Britain believed in the rule of law. After all, we were relying on an Act of Parliament—of the British Parliament. Britain should have stood by a law that Parliament had passed."

What was worse was that Sir Patrick had tried to equate India and Pakistan, forgetting that "we had first come to the Council, that we had complained of Pakistan's aggression."

He told newsmen not to forget that even today large areas of Kashmir were "in the unlawful possession of Pakistan."

There was a third point about the British statement which had "really agitated" Indian public opinion. This was Sir Patrick's attempt to "equate India and Pakistan on the communal riots".

Britain had a High Commissioner in New Delhi. Yet she had not obtained the information on what really happened. Had India called for a holy war? Had India incited communal rioting as Pakistan had done? "Surely this is not impartiality. This is not a high judicial attitude. This is refusing to condemn where condemnation is called for."

He said that he had been "very much disappointed with the US attitude." The Americans had taken the same position as the British except that the American representative's speech was "pitched in a much lower key".

"There again the US representative refused to refer to Pakistan's aggression. It was all 'plebiscite' and none of our arguments were considered.

"I take it that USA did not want a resolution, so I understand, though its representative did talk of the realities of the situation as possibly altering (earlier) resolutions. That is the whole point. It is no good harping back to 1948. We are in 1964, let us face the realities."

Of the Soviet statement, he said that this had emphasized Russia's position that "the people of Kashmir had already decided their future". This was consistent with the Soviet attitude.

Asked about France's intervention in the Council debate, he said: "The French attitude, was much more favourable (than the Anglo-American). It did not emphasize resolutions, plebiscite or self-determination.

"It said France appreciated the point that there had been the passage of time that had brought about changes. What it emphasized was that a settlement could only come about through negotiations between the parties."

The ultimate solution to the problem lay in meeting and settling the question. "But for heaven's sake don't make it difficult for us to meet. That is what I say about the UK and USA. They are making it difficult for us to meet by harking back to the past."

He believed that USA was "conscious of the danger of Chinese aggression" and of the fact "that India must be strong and India alone can resist Chinese aggression." He asked: "Why try and weaken us by supporting Pakistan?"

Asked if he considered that India had "won this round on points", he said: "One should not be jubilant. I would put it negatively. In this round Pakistan has failed to get anything that she came to obtain. One should be modest in victory."

He said that in the discussions about a possible consensus of the Council members, the Indian side had made concessions wherever possible, subject to its fundamental stand. If there was no agreement on a consensus it was not the fault of India.

Summing up the situation, he said: "Pakistan came here with a specific complaint to obtain certain reliefs from this high tribunal, the Security Council. She has obtained no relief. What is more she has not pressed for relief. She is going home with empty hands."

He re-affirmed India's readiness to negotiate. "We are prepared to go more than half-way to meet Pakistan."

Asked when the Council might meet on the subject again, he said he hoped that it would never meet again. Pakistan had come with a complaint that there was "open rebellion" in Kashmir and that India was integrating the State. She had failed to pursue these arguments and they had lapsed. Now there must be a new case "and our only hope is that she will not try to bring about a situation which, in her opinion, would call for a meeting of the Council."

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's News Conference:

Addressing a news conference in London on February 18, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto said Pakistan would raise the Kashmir issue again in the Security Council in March.

Pakistan, he said, could not accept any formula from the Security Council which did not state that the future negotiations between Pakistan and India over Kashmir should make reference to the wishes of the people of Kashmir. "Until we really grapple with the central issue it is no use taking back a piece of paper in our pockets."

Pakistan wanted future negotiations with India over Kashmir to have "a tangible purpose."

A special negotiating group composed of Brazil, the Ivory Coast, Morocco, and Norway was discussing the norm of a Security Council formula and might make further proposals. This formula could be a consensus of the Council, a resolution, or an appeal to the two countries.

He said he wanted to consult President Ayub Khan and his Government. Pakistan considered the possibility of a consensus from the Council "as an open question."

But he stressed that any such consensus should say that negotiations "should be conducted within the frame-work of a settlement having regard to the wishes of the people."

He said: "I shall see the latest situation in Azad Kashmir as well as in Kashmir. We have got disturbing reports about Indian-occupied Kashmir. The trouble there has not been controlled and cannot be controlled. The trouble is spreading. This (adjournment) will also give me an opportunity to see what the situation is. I can discuss matters further with my Government so that we can come here in another effort...."

Whatever the result of the present debate in the Council, "it has not been finished yet."

While Pakistan was willing for bilateral negotiations with India, these had not borne fruit in the past. If negotiations were to be held, they must give some direction and a settlement must take place in the context of self-determination. There should be provision for mediation or arbitration under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General. He suggested that the Council call for implementation of the UNCIP resolutions.

On Mr. Chagla's remark earlier that Mr. Bhutto was going back empty-handed, he said: "It is better to go back empty-handed than with illusory success."

Asked why Pakistan had found it difficult to get any one to sponsor a resolution, he said the resolution which would have met the situation would have been difficult for historical reasons.

He said that while Pakistan was not happy with the Soviet Union's position (during the debate), "I am not unhappy either."

He made great play on the fact that India had four divisions in Kashmir but had no answer when it was pointed out that seven out of Pakistan's nine divisions were stationed in West Pakistan near Kashmir and the Indian border. He turned round and asked: "Where do you expect us to take our army, to Cyprus?"

It was revealed in New York that Pakistan had attempted to persuade Dr. Frank Graham, UN representative for India and Pakistan to submit a report to the Council. Dr. Graham was reported to have been willing to accede to Pakistan's persuasion, but wiser counsels prevailed and the scheme was given up.

Dr. Graham is still in UN service as representative for India and Pakistan and costs the Organization about $40,000 a year.

Before the meeting Pakistan had also approached the Kuomintang Chinese representative on the Council seeking support. According to sources close to the KMT delegation, Pakistan was rebuffed with the statement that many things had altered since 1962.

Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's Statement In Indian Parliament:

Intervening in the debate in the Lok Sabha on the Vice-President's Address, the Indian Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, expressed the view that Pakistan and China might hatch up something against India during the visit of the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai to Pakistan.

He added: "We need not take an alarmist view of this and we need not feel nervous. We have to be watchful and strong enough to meet any situation."

He made a categorical declaration that India would not accept any intervention from outside to settle the Kashmir dispute.

He made a strong attack on the partial attitude taken by the leader of the British delegation to the Security Council, and declared that the Council meeting had "considerably increased the bitterness" both in India and Pakistan."

He observed, amidst cheers, that while discussing the plebiscite, the Security Council should not forget that it had declared Pakistan as an aggressor and "Pakistan should be first asked to vacate the occupied territory. If there was no vacation of aggression then the question of plebiscite will never arise." If the matter was considered in this context then he had no doubt the Security Council would be able to arrive at a correct decision.

He said he did not want to deal with the British delegate's speech as the Security Council debate had adjourned. But considering the matter in a theoretical or philosophical way one could say that there were two main reasons on account of which the UK representative was unable to take a dispassionate view.

The first was that Britain and Pakistan were members of a military alliance, S-EATO. Thus Britain found herself in a position of not taking an independent view. The other reason was that the "present ruling party in the United Kingdom still continues to think in old terms and in old ways. It has always felt that Kashmir should go over to Pakistan. They have been thinking in that way—they may not say it—because they have the feeling that Kashmir State could be easily divided into two. The Muslim majority should go over to Pakistan and the Hindu majority may go over to India. They think that it is an easy division, just a division into two territories.

"But they do not visualise the full consequences of such a step. It is not merely a question of division of two territories. The implications are much more complex."

In spite of the fact that the British showed that they were non-communal and believed in a secular kind of State, he added: "They have never given thought to what has been happening or has happened in Pakistan, how the minorities have been dealt with in that country."

He regretted that the Security Council had not given priority to the question of promoting communal harmony and peace at a time when communal riots were taking place in Pakistan.

The Council discussions on Kashmir, he said, had considerably increased bitterness in India and Pakistan and instead of keeping the peace had led to further trouble. "Maybe Pakistan, which has really no case in Kashmir thought that if some trouble is created in India or in some parts of Pakistan it might lead to repercussions which might go against India."

The Security Council had ultimately taken the right decision to end the debate. The best thing for the Security Council would be not to consider the matter, "because in this matter it is only direct talks which can help in evolving something which will bring about some kind of settlement." But nothing could touch India's sovereignty over the State.

Further, the true facts must be considered by the Security Council. "While they discuss about plebiscite, etc., they are apt to forget that the Security Council itself has declared Pakistan an aggressor. They should first ask Pakistan to vacate the occupied territory."

"Unfortunately they (members of the Security Council) do not do it, perhaps they do not think about it at all, but on the other hand ask us to hold a plebiscite. Plebiscite and vacation in a sense go together. If there is going to be no vacation, the question of plebiscite would never arise.

"If the matter is considered in this context, I have no doubt the Security Council will be able to arrive at a correct decision. But as I said just now, it does not mean that we are not prepared to meet and discuss. But certainly we do not want any kind of intervention from outside.

"We want to make a sincere effort, if possible, if Pakistan agrees, to solve our dispute or problems concerning Kashmir. The success of it depends more or less on direct talks and discussion."

B. Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit: The Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, arrived in Karachi on February 18 on a State visit. Accompanying him were Marshal Chen Yi, Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister, and a party of officials.

He was received at the airport by the Finance Minister, Mr. Mohammed Shoaib.

Both at the brief formal reply to the address of welcome from Mr. Shoaib at the airport and later in the evening at the citizens' reception, the dominant theme of Mr. Chou's speeches was the need for an early Afro-Asian conference.

He told the citizens of Karachi: "It is in the interests of Asian-African peoples to bring into full play the Bandung spirit and to strengthen Asian-African solidarity."

"The Pakistan Government and people support the restoration of China's legitimate rights in United Nations and oppose the scheme of creating two Chinas. China's Government and people express their gratitude for this.

"What is of particular importance is the conclusion between our two countries of the historic Sino-Pakistani boundary Agreement as well as the Aviation and Trade Agreements.

"These Agreements not only mark a new development in the friendly relations between China and Pakistan, but also constitute an important contribution to the promotion of Asian-African solidarity and the defence of peace in Asia and the world."

State Banquet:

President Ayub Khan gave a banquet in honour of Mr. Chou En-lai in Rawalpindi on February 20.

In a speech on the occasion, he said: "I am happy to welcome our distinguished guests from the People's Republic of China to the Capital of Pakistan.

"The presence of His Excellency the Prime Minister and Marshal Chen Yi is a source of particular pleasure to us. The Prime Minister comes to us as an old friend, having visited Pakistan seven years ago. At that time, the seat of Government was at Karachi. It will now be our pleasure to show him the new Capital at Islamabad which is coming up a few miles from here.

"The years that have elapsed since your last visit to our country, Mr. Prime Minister, have been marked by much more than a change of Capital. There have been far-reaching changes in many spheres of our national life, brought about with a view to speeding up the pace of our social and economic development so as to provide a better and richer standard of life for our people.

"Recent developments indicate that we are moving in the direction indicated by our history and by the will of our people. The signing of the Pakistan-China Boundary Agreement last year was a notable milestone in this respect as it demonstrated the mutual desire of our two countries to eliminate potential causes of friction and pave the way for the further development of friendly relations.

"I am happy to note that trade between Pakistan and China is growing and that contacts between our peoples through the exchange of cultural and other delegations have also increased. When direct air services will begin between Pakistan and China on the basis of the recently concluded Air Agreement, our countries will come still closer to each other.

"Mr. Prime Minister, the Governments of our two countries are primarily preoccupied with the task of national reconstruction. In order to achieve our objective in this fundamental task we have a vital stake in international peace. Our two countries helped to evolve the 10 principles of peace at Bandung, which have come to be accepted by a growing number of countries of Asia and Africa as a basis of relations between them.

"We share the view that understanding and co-operation between the newly emerged countries of Asia and Africa not only serve their interest but also contribute to the cause of world peace. The age of colonialism is dead. Before long, the last vestiges of this obnoxious system as also of its new manifestations, will vanish from the face of the earth."

Mr. Chou En-lai said in reply: "I visited your country seven years ago, and now having the opportunity of re-visiting our friendly neighbour, I would like to convey to the Government and people of Pakistan the cordial greetings and best wishes of the Government and people of China.

"We are glad to see that Pakistan has scored major achievements on the road of independent development. The Pakistan people have waged unremitting struggles to safeguard their independence and sovereignty. The international status of Pakistan is rising with each passing day.

"In recent years, Pakistan has made valuable efforts and contributions towards the strengthening of its contacts and friendship with Asian-African countries and the promotion of Asian-African solidarity and has thus won the praise of the Asian-African peoples.

"Together with Indonesia and other Asian-African countries, Pakistan has actively called for the holding of a second Asian-African conference so as to strengthen Asian-African solidarity and promote the common cause of Asian-African countries. This is in conformity with the common interests and desire of the Asian-African peoples. The Chinese Government and people firmly support this stand and are ready to make our contribution to its early realization.

"The present situation is most favourable to the struggle of the Asian-African peoples and all peace-loving peoples against the imperialist policies of aggression and war and for the defence of world peace.

"We believe that so long as the Asian-African peoples and all peace-loving people strengthen their unity and persevere in struggle, their ideals and aspirations will certainly come true.

"Together with the Pakistan Government and people, the Chinese Government and people, following their consistent stand, will unswervingly work for the strengthening of Sino-Pakistan friendship, the promotion of Asian-African solidarity and the defence of world peace."

Offer Of Mediation Between USA And China—President Ayub Khan's News Conference:

Addressing a news conference in Rawalpindi on February 21, President Ayub Khan said Pakistan was willing to use her good offices to bring about a settlement between China and USA.

Such a settlement, he added, would ensure peace in Asia and also Pakistan's own security.

He said he was absolutely certain of China's willingness to come to the conference table with India for negotiating a border settlement. "We on our part would like to see that peace prevails between China, USA and India".

He said that Mr. Chou En-lai, during the course of talks, had given a clear impression that his country was prepared to be reasonable with all those who were prepared to be reasonable with them. China, he said, had no intention of having a clash with India. China had invited India again and again for talks round a conference table without response. If somebody insisted that his demands must be conceded first what was the need of a conference? He said mutual consultation was the only way to settle disputes and remove misunderstandings.

He sounded a note of caution against the unrestricted flow of arms to India by the Western Powers. "It may suit global interests of America but it is not good at the cost of a friend's security".

India, he said, had already increased her defence Budget from the standing Budget from $500 million to $1,800 million. "Her standing army is more than enough. Further Western aid is bound to create problems".

He said it would be wishful thinking if somebody thought India could intimidate China by her armed strength. "If India cannot use arms against China (which she won't) where shall she use them? Obviously this armed build-up would be ultimately used against smaller neighbours."

Explaining the inherent dangers to peace in the region on account of arms aid to India, he said: "The United States is doing certain things in India which are not good for our security".

The main object of S-EATO and CENTO, he told a correspondent, was to ensure peace in the region. "These are defensive alliances essentially to avoid wars in the regions. If there is peace in the regions the objective of S-EATO and CENTO is achieved."

He said whatever America was doing in India was not even in her own interest either. He also mentioned briefly certain obvious difficulties in bringing China and America closer. The Chinese leaders had, during the course of talks, explained their difficulties and he had briefly expressed American views.

He said the Chinese leaders' view was that at least America should agree to mutual respect of each other's sovereignty, integrity and the principle of non-interference. Secondly, China wanted that America should at least accept, in principle, Taiwan as part of the mainland and should be prepared to vacate the island if agreement was reached.

On the other hand, America, he said, had her own difficulties. America was committed to Taiwan's security and had been carrying out these commitments.

Asked about "solid results" of Mr. Chou's visit he said friendship between the two countries was itself an achievement which needed efforts to sustain it.

A correspondent, who wanted to know if there were any possibilities of a non-aggression pact with China, was told that the objective of establishing friendly relations with neighbours was to secure peace. He saw little utility of non-aggression pacts if good relations prevailed among neighbours.

The two Indian correspondents based in Rawalpindi and covering Mr. Chou En-lai's tour were not invited to the news conference.

In Lahore:

Mr. Chou En-lai arrived in Lahore on February 23.

Before he boarded the plane for Lahore, he told a correspondent: "I am very, very satisfied with my talks with President Ayub."

Replying to a civic address in Lahore on February 23, he said China was convinced that an independent, strong and prosperous Pakistan would make more contributions to the cause of promoting Afro-Asian solidarity and defending world peace.

The Communique:

The following communique was issued in Lahore on February 23 at the end of the talks between Mr. Chou En-lai and President Ayub Khan:

"At the invitation of Field-Marshal Mohammad Ayub Khan, President of Pakistan, HE Mr Chou En-lai, Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, paid an official visit to Pakistan. He was accompanied by Marshal Chen Yi, Vice-Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs and Madame Chen Yi and high officials of the Chinese Government. In the course of this visit, Premier Chou En-lai and his party were accorded a warm reception everywhere.

"The Prime Minister had a friendly exchange of views with the President of Pakistan. Their discussions covered the general international situation and the need for safeguarding world peace and, in that context, the importance of achieving general disarmament, including the total prohibition and destruction of nuclear weapons. They also reviewed recent developments in this region and arrived at a fuller understanding of matters of common interest to the two countries.

"The President and the Prime Minister expressed satisfaction at the fact that the relations between the two countries had developed further since the Prime Minister's last visit to Pakistan in 1956, particularly since the signing of the Pakistan-China Boundary Agreement in March, 1963. They agreed that friendly co-operation between them should continue within the frame-work of the ten principles of peace enunciated at Bandung.

"The President and the Prime Minister were gratified to note that the movement for national independence had made rapid progress in Asia and Africa and that in recent years many countries had achieved freedom and were now well on the road to independent development. They expressed their firm opposition to colonialism, wherever and in whatever form it exists, and hoped that it would soon be eradicated.

"The President and the Prime Minister recalled that the first Asian-African Conference held in Bandung in 1955 had opened new avenues of co-operation among the peoples of Asia and Africa and helped to strengthen the force of national independence in their struggle against colonialism. Since the historic conference, more then 30 new nations had emerged in Asia and Africa and it was, therefore, time that a second conference of Asian and African countries should be convened. Such a conference could make a valuable contribution to the prevention of aggression, the striving for world peace and the development of friendly co-operation among the Asian-African countries.

"The President and the Prime Minister noted with satisfaction the fact that many newly liberated countries of Asia and Africa had been admitted to the United Nations. They believed, however, that United Nations could not be considered to be fully representative of mankind until the rightful place of the People's Republic of China in the Organization was restored. They agreed that, in any event, as the membership of United Nations had more than doubled since its foundation, it was necessary to give more adequate representation to the countries of Asia and Africa in the organs of United Nations and in the specialized agencies.

"The President and the Prime Minister agreed that the border dispute between India and China should and can be resolved peacefully through negotiations.

"They expressed the hope that the Kashmir dispute would be resolved in accordance with the wishes of the people of Kashmir, as pledged to them by India and Pakistan. It would be of no avail to deny the existence of these disputes and to adopt a big-nation chauvinistic attitude of imposing one's will on others. Massive military preparations have never been the answer to international differences. They only create new tensions and bring added burdens to the people. An early settlement of these disputes, they considered, was necessary in the interest of world peace and the well-being of the peoples of Asia.

"On behalf of Chairman Liu Shao-chi and in his own name, Premier Chou En-lai extended an invitation to President Mohammad Ayub Khan to visit the People's Republic of China at a time convenient to him. The President accepted this invitation with pleasure."

The communique was signed for China by Marshal Chen Yi, and for Pakistan by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto.

Mr. Chou En-lai's Address To West Pakistan Assembly:

Mr. Chou En-lai addressed the West Pakistan Legislative Assembly on February 24.

Praising Pakistanis, he said that in recent years they had carried out an unremitting struggle to secure victory for national independence and sovereignty. He spoke highly of the successes achieved by Pakistan in its economic and cultural undertakings. He spoke of the profound traditional friendship between China and Pakistan.

He supported the move for the convocation of a second Bandung conference. He said it was entirely possible to settle disputes left over by history among Asian-African countries fairly and reasonably in accordance with the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence and the spirit of the Bandung Conference through friendly consultations. In the settlement of disputes it was impermissible to act truculently and impose one's will on others, still less to bully others by relying on outside forces.

He said the new emerging Asian and African countries who had stood up were playing an increasingly important role in international affairs. The imperialists' chauvinistic attitude ignoring the independent will of the Asian and African countries was doomed to failure.

In Dacca:

Mr. Chou En-lai arrived in Dacca on February 24.

Addressing a news conference in Dacca on February 25, he said that his country's position on the Kashmir question was a "fair position".

The Sino-Indian border issue, he said, was a different issue and should not be treated at par with Kashmir. "The border dispute between China and India can be settled only through peaceful negotiations and by no other method."

He paid tribute to the leadership of President Ayub Khan. He said ever since President Ayub Khan started guiding the destinies of Pakistan, relations between China and Pakistan were growing friendlier. Relations of Pakistan and China were so cordial that the Chinese Premier did not feel the necessity of signing a treaty of co-existence between the two countries. Pakistan and China, he asserted, were already pursuing the Five Principles of co-existence.

He declined to offer his explanatory comments on the contents of Pakistan-China joint communique issued at Lahore on the conclusion of his talks with President Ayub. He said he would not offer any further explanation to the joint communique before returning to Peking.

Making a plea for disarmament, he said China's anxiety for disarmament was borne out by the fact that his country's defence budget had been decreasing every year.

He told a correspondent that he had faith in Pakistan's stand in respect of S-EATO and CENTO pacts. The Pakistan Government, he said, had assured him that these were defensive treaties. "We believe what the Pakistan Government says."

However, he was of the view that S-EATO and CENTO pacts were designed by the United States primarily for purposes of aggression and this was quite evident by the acts of sabotage in South-East Asia by Americans, particularly in South Viet-Nam.

He ridiculed the suggestion of a plebiscite in Formosa and asserted that Formosa belonged to China and one day it would become part of the mainland like any other Province of that country.

Repeating President Ayub's statement that the "Chinese people are reasonable with all those who are reasonable with them," he said despite past failures China was still willing to continue talks with America for settlement of the issues. "As events develop with the passage of time a day must come when the United States would withdraw from Taiwan." But, at the same time, he warned Washington that "if America takes this peaceful approach as China's weakness we must tell them that the Chinese people are determined to resist the American designs to the very end."

An American correspondent of Japanese descent had asked if China would agree to the principle of self-determination for settling the Taiwan question as in the case of Kashmir. Mr. Chou En-lai pointed out that Taiwan was essentially a Province of China and the citizens of the Island possessed the same nationality and spoke a dialect similar to that of the mainland.

He refuted the theory of 'two Chinas' and said: "We would like to tell the Americans that their plot would never succeed." He said the entire population of China was opposed to the 'two China' theory. Even Chiang Kai-shek did not support it.

He said the overwhelming majority of the world nations were against the 'two-China' theory including those who had not yet recognized the People's Republic of China.

Answering a question, he said in order to ensure peace in Indo-China the 1954 Geneva Agreement must be fully implemented. The United States military personnel must be withdrawn from South Viet-Nam and Americans should stop their intervention there.

Referring to present strained US-China relations with possibilities of improvement, he said his country had been trying to negotiate with America for the last 8½ years, but Americans were not willing to concede the basic principles. He renunciated two primary conditions for settlement with Washington which he said were: (1) America must accept the principle of co-existence, mutual respect and non-interference, and (2) America must agree to vacate Taiwan in principle. China, he said, had been trying repeatedly to reach an accord with America on these two points since 1955, but without success.

He told another correspondent that his country would not oppose participation of Latin American countries in the second Afro-Asian conference on Bandung style. "Rather we would support it." But he pointed out this question had to be determined finally by a preparatory conference since it was a new issue.

A British correspondent asked if during his coming visit to Ceylon he would discuss the issue of the Sino-Indian border dispute in the light of the six Colombo countries' proposals and whether his views on the Kashmir dispute as embodied in the joint communique would have any repercussions. Mr. Chou En-lai said: "Our position on the Kashmir question is a fair position," and added: "Sino-Indian border issue is another question. It should not be treated at par with the Kashmir issue."

He said that all Afro-Asian countries realised that the Sino-Indian border situation had relaxed and they appreciated China's stand of negotiations with India at the conference table.

He said countries with different social statuses may co-exist on the Five Principles of co-existence. But, he pointed out, if one country occupied the territory of another, it would certainly cause bitterness and the oppressed country would resist it. "There cannot be co-existence between a colonial Power and the oppressed people."

He told a Pakistani correspondent that he was opposed to the idea of Asianism because "we do not exclude friendship with others including Africa, Europe and America, but at the same time we are opposed to policies of imperialism."

Mr. Chou En-lai and his party left Dacca for Colombo on February 26.

US Comment:

A Washington message on February 29 said a hardening of US policy towards China was seen in the wake of the Administration's rejection of Pakistan's offer to mediate between Washington and Peking.

Mr. Dean Rusk, the US Secretary of State, threw cold water on the bid made by President Ayub Khan following the visit of Mr. Chou En-lai to Pakistan.

He also rebuffed Mr. Chou En-lai's own suggestion that "friends" should make an effort to bring USA and China together.

"The most eloquent statement or indication from Peking that it is interested in improving relations with anybody would be to begin compliance with the Geneva accords affecting South-East Asia," Mr. Rusk told a news conference on February 25.

The US State Department on December 11, 1963 had described as "unfortunate" the invitation extended to the Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, and the Chinese Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi, to visit Pakistan.

The Department's spokesman had said in reply to questions at a news conference that while the rest of the world had sought to advance the cause of peace, China had continued "to advocate violence in international relations".

C. Pakistan-China Boundary Commission—Documents Signed: The Pakistan-China Boundary Demarcation Commission on February 18 completed the major part of its work, and the chief delegates of the two countries signed agreed documents.

The documents, finalised by the Commission, included a review of the progress made so far and a common working scheme for the joint survey and mapping of the borders to be done during 1964.

Under the programme, the joint survey teams have to go to the borders to erect permanent boundary markers and to carry out other work necessary for the demarcation.

Work on the outstanding items is likely to be completed shortly. Experts of the two sides are awaiting instructions from their respective Governments before finally settling the points which were reported to have emerged as a result of a comparison between the topographical maps and the recent air photographs of the borders.

Pakistan's Ambassador to China, Maj-Gen. N. A. M. Raza, led his country's delegation at the talks.

The Chinese Ambassador to Pakistan, Mr. Ting Kuo-yu was the chief delegate from his country.

The Commission began its session—third in the series—on January 22. After a few meetings it adjourned, entrusting its experts with the job to thrash out some technical points. The experts submitted their report to the Commission the previous week on the basis of which the major part of the programme was finalised on February 18.

D. British Loan: Under an Agreement signed in Karachi on February 25, the British Government has made a loan of $6,280,000 to Pakistan to finance the purchase in Britain of one new ship, jute machinery, equipment for railways, steel billets, tea-making machinery and equipment for tea gardens.

These are required to implement Pakistan's current Five-Year Plan (1960-65).

The Agreement was signed by Mr. Osman Ali, Secretary, Economic Affairs Division, on behalf of the Government of Pakistan, and by Sir Morrice James, the British High Commissioner, on behalf of Britain.

Britain undertook to make this new loan available at the May, 1963 meeting of the Consortium of friendly countries formed by the International Bank to co-ordinate aid to Pakistan. It brought the total of British Government loans to Pakistan to £53.28 million of which the contribution to the current Plan totals £33.28 million.

The loan has been made under Section 3 of the Export Guarantees Act, 1949. The repayment period will be 25 years including a grace period of seven years before repayment of principal commences and a waiver of interest for the first seven years of the loan.

The loan of £6.28 million is part of a total of £8 million committed at the meeting of the Consortium of donor countries held in Washington under the auspices of the World Bank on May 2 and 3, 1963. The loan agreement for the other £2 million of the pledge was signed on June 18, 1963.

The total of British Government loans to Pakistan is now £53.28 million. This total is made up of eight loans under Section 3 of the Export Guarantees Act 1949—£10 million made on March 2, 1954; £10 million made on February 27, 1959; £5 million made on December 28, 1960; £3 million made on March 16, 1961; £7 million made on January 8, 1962; £10 million made on November 5, 1962; £2 million made on June 18, 1963; and £6.28 million made on February 25, 1964.

E. Growing China-Pakistan Ties —US Concern: The US Under-Secretary of State, Mr. George Ball, said in New York on March 1 that USA was watching Pakistan's growing relations with Communist China "with great concern".

Mr. Ball, who was appearing in a television programme, was subjected to questions by a panel of newsmen on American reactions and attitude to Sino-Pakistani relations.

The panelists cited Pakistan's statements that her main enemy was India and that her purpose in joining the Western alliances was to strengthen herself against India.

All Mr. Ball could say to this was: "But Pakistan also says her enemy is the Soviet Union and that she is a member of alliances which are directed against Communist aggression".

One of the panel suggested that the situation had changed since the time when USA began giving military aid to Pakistan.

Mr. Ball said USA had been watching Sino-Pakistan developments and Mr. Chou En-lai's visit with some concern. He himself had discussed the subject with President Ayub Khan a few months ago.

"We very much hope that he (Ayub) will not carry relations with Red China to the point where it will impair the relations we have with them (Pakistan) and the alliances.

"Up to the present point, what they have discussed are cultural matters, a mutual air service between the two countries and periphery matters. What it reflects in terms of their attitudes is something about which we are very much concerned".

F. Air Agreement With China —Protocol Signed: The New China News Agency reported that Pakistan and China had signed on March 8 a Protocol and related documents on technical and operational arrangements for the air service scheduled to be established between the two countries.

The documents were signed in Peking by the Operations Director of the Pakistan International Airways and the Director of the General Aviation of Communist China.

G. Loan Of US Submarine: A news agency quoting well-informed sources in Washington said on March 1 that USA proposed to lend Pakistan a submarine.

Dawn of Karachi also reported that Pakistan would get a submarine from USA.

It would be a small shore submarine, not of recent design, and would be conventionally fuelled. It would be delivered in June. A Pakistan crew was already training on board the vessel.

The loan of the submarine was approved by the US Congress at the end of 1963 as part of the 1963-64 military aid programme.

The US Defence Secretary, Mr. Robert McNamara, expressed doubt at a news conference in Washington on March 6 that there was any US plan to provide Pakistan with a submarine.

He was asked whether Pakistan was to be provided with a submarine under US military aid plans and if the 7th Fleet was to be deployed in the Indian Ocean.

He said in reply that he did not recall in sufficient detail the military assistance programme to Pakistan for the current and coming fiscal years to remember whether a submarine was included. "I do not believe there is any such vessel included."

Statement By US Embassy In Karachi:

However, the US Embassy in Karachi said on March 7 that an American submarine "is still scheduled for delivery to Pakistan this Summer."

The Embassy in a statement quoted Mr. Robert McNamara as saying at his news conference that he did not believe any such vessel was included in the 1964 or 1965 programme of military assistance for Pakistan.

It added: "The Embassy has been authorized to state that while Secretary McNamara was technically correct in saying that the submarine was not included in the military assistance programme for 1964 or 1965, it was in fact programmed for the military assistance programme of 1963 and is still scheduled for delivery to Pakistan this Summer."

H. No Direct Elections—Opposition Demand Rejected: The Law Minister, Mr. Khursheed Ahmed, said in Rawalpindi on March 1 that the next elections to the Legislatures and the office of the President would be by the 80,000 Basic Democrats and not on the basis of adult franchise as recommended by the Franchise Commission and demanded by the Opposition Parties.

He was talking to correspondents after the meetings of the National Assembly's Special Committee which considered the Commission's report.

He said the Committee would meet on March 13 to sign its report.

Though the Opposition had decided at the end of the last series of meetings about a month earlier to boycott the Committee, four of the seven members attended the two-day meeting which ended on March 1.

All the four Opposition members who attended the meetings were from East Pakistan. One of them, Mr. Farid Ahmed, said they decided to attend the meeting to prevent the Government from having its own way.

I. Rehabilitation Of Non-Muslims—Ordinance Promulgated In East Pakistan: The Government of East Pakistan promulgated on February 17 an Ordinance to provide for rehabilitation of persons affected by the communal disturbances in January and for the protection of the immovable property of the minority community.

The Ordinance, to be known as East Pakistan Disturbed Persons (Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1964, provides that immovable property of the disturbed person would be restored, through summary eviction by a Magistrate or other authorised officer.

It also provides that if on account of panic any member of the minority community has already transferred his land under coercion, threat, intimidation, undue influence, misrepresentation or fraud, a Magistrate or other authorised officer may refer the case to the District Judge for the cancellation of the Instrument of Transfer and order the restoration of possession to the original owner.

Under the Ordinance no deed of transfer of immovable property of a member of the minority communities will be deemed to be valid and legal unless it has been made with the permission of the Deputy Commissioner.

The Deputy Commissioner, when a person applies to him for transferring his immovable property, shall ascertain whether the proposed transfer has been brought about by coercion, intimidation, undue influence etc., or whether the transfer is in due course of business of the transferer.

A. President D. Macapagal's Message To Congress: The Government's domestic and foreign policies were reviewed by President Diosdado Macapagal in his "State of the Nation" message to Congress on January 27.

He said that the nation's conduct in international relations during the past two years had been characterized by a "far more active participation in international affairs, particularly in the affairs of South-East Asia."

"We have willingly accepted the challenge to carry the democratic message in our part of the world, have played a prominent role in Maphilindo, the association of the people of Malay origin (formed last August with Malaya and Indonesia); we have made progress on our claim to Sabah (North Borneo); we have assisted in mediating in disputes between nations."

He said relationships of "lasting importance" had been formed between his country and the United States, "as well as a number of Asian countries including Japan, Indonesia, Thailand and Formosa, the Federal Republic of Germany, Spain, Mexico, and the new nations of Africa, particularly Malagasy."

"Without diminishing our historic relations with the United States and other Western countries, and without weakening our commitment to the cause of democracy and human rights, we have sought to expand our role in Asian affairs and thereby promote the stability and security of our region and enhance mutual understanding between the peoples of Asia and the peoples of the West."

On domestic issues, he said: "Our people suffer from the continuing increase of prices and the short supply of rice.

"These price increases are the result no longer of economic decontrol but of subsequent domestic and external pressures.

"The rice insufficiency in the country is aggravated by a world shortage of this commodity."

He asked Congress to "lay aside our political differences and work for the common goal: the good of our people".

He urged among other things the implementation of his programme of economic and social progress, continuing active participation in foreign affairs, increase in tax revenues, solving the problem of rising prices, ensuring an adequate rice supply, attracting and giving assurances to private investments, both domestic and foreign, implementation of a nationwide housing programme, development of tourism, and adoption of electoral reforms to frustrate frauds and exorbitant spending by candidates.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Return Of Exiled Princes: A Beirut message on January 21 said that the four self-exiled Saudi Princes, including three brothers of King Saud, had said in a Press statement that they had been wrong in criticizing Saudi Arabian policy while abroad and were returning home.

The Princes—Abdel Mohsen, Badr and Fawaz, brothers of the King, and Prince Saad Ben Fahd—had been in the United Arab Republic and Lebanon since they renounced their titles more than two years ago.

They said in their statement that they were returning home out of conviction and faith, and with admiration for the reforms achieved by the Saudi Prime Minister under King Saud's direction.

The Princes left Beirut for Saudi Arabia on January 22.

B. Aramco To Build "Sea Island": A Beirut message on February 5 said that the Arabian American Oil Company (Aramco) would build a $10,000,000 deep water "sea island" off Saudi Arabia that would raise shipping capacity of crude oil by 500,000 barrels daily.

An Aramco Press release said that the new berths would speed loading of supertankers, including the world's largest tanker.

The "sea island" will consist of an operating platform constructed on piles to which two tankers may be berthed simultaneously. Three submarine lines will supply the "sea island."

The new installations will be built offshore about one mile north-east of existing north pier at Ras Tanuras Marine Terminal in a water depth of 85 feet. Construction will start this year, and the project is scheduled for completion by October, 1965.

C. Agricultural Development: It was reported on February 21 that Aramco and the Saudi Ministry of Agriculture would jointly develop as farming land some 12,000 acres of uninhabited desert in the Wadi Sabha area, midway between Hofuf and Riyadh.

The project is to be carried out in two five-year stages and the cost of the first stage is estimated at $13 million of which Aramco will provide some $400,000. This stage will include the establishment of a 100-acre research, demonstration and training centre. The area will eventually grow temperate-zone crops and some forage for livestock and a soil scientist is shortly to begin a series of tests.

The land will be allocated to farmers in lots not exceeding 10 acres, each being required to farm satisfactorily for at least five years before being given title to the land.

SYRIA

A. Second Five-Year Plan—Prof. J. Tinbergen's Report: A Damascus message on February 21 said the Bureau des Documentations Syriennes had published a report on Professor J. Tinbergen's discussions with the Syrian Planning Ministry on the preparation of the Second Five-Year Plan (1966-70).

While Prof. Tinbergen favours a target for the rate of growth of national income which will require special effort both by the country itself and in terms of foreign aid, he considers as "too ambitious" the original aim of a compound rate of growth of 7.2 per cent per annum, aimed at doubling the national income in the period 1961-70. He points out that the inclusion of two big projects, the Euphrates dam and the Latakia-Aleppo-Kamishli railway in the Plan would absorb about one-third of the total investment volume without yielding any permanent increase in the national income during the Plan period. It will have to be further investigated whether, even with special efforts such as increased taxation and additional foreign aid, a growth target of 6 to 7 per cent will be feasible.

He considers that the Planning Ministry should give special attention to a more equal distribution of income and to the more rapid development of the poorer regions of the country. In his opinion, a wide range of medium-sized industries should be left in private hands for the time being to give them an opportunity to develop, but that public services should be State controlled from the start. Long-term investment projects form the core of the Plan and should be chosen so as to utilize local industries to complement such products and services which have to be sought abroad. During the Plan period the Government should make efforts to counteract fluctuations in demand, and so keep up production capacity by increasing its investments and by special incentives, such as tax reductions.

Finally, he urges that facilities for the compilation of statistical data should be improved in order to provide a basis for successful planning work and suggests the employment of two Dutch experts from the Central Bureau of Statistics. The establishment of a Planning Institute for the training of specialists not only from Syria, but from neighbouring countries such as Iraq is advocated, the Institute of National Planning in Cairo which is financed by the Ford Foundation being cited as a pattern.

B. Arab League-Sponsored Commercial Accords: Syria signed on February 27 three Arab League-sponsored Agreements providing for the establishment by joint Arab capital of an international Pan-Arab airline, an oil tanker and a maritime company.

An official announcement in Damascus said the Economy Minister, Dr. George Tomeh, had signed the Agreements on Syria's behalf in the presence of an Arab League economic mission in Damascus.

Syria thus became the first Arab country to sign the oil tanker company agreement and the second after Jordan to sign the Pan-Arab airline and the maritime company accords.

The mission was touring Arab countries in a bid to bring into existence the three projected firms with a combined capital of £E98 million.

The two envoys, Arab League Assistant Secretary-General for Economic Affairs, Mr. Aref Zaher, and Jordan's Communications Minister, Mr. Abdelmajid Murtada, left Damascus for Beirut for talks with the Lebanese Government on the three projected firms.

Their talks are also aimed at bringing in more Arab League member-States into a pan-Arab economic union scheduled for proclamation on April 30 with Kuwait, the United Arab Republic, Iraq, Syria and Jordan already as founding members.

According to the official announcement, the oil tanker company will have a capital of £E35 million equally shared by all Arab League member-States. Oil-rich Kuwait will be headquarters of this firm which is designed to handle transportation and marketing of Middle East oil throughout the world.

The projected maritime company with a capital of £E53,300,000 is designed to create an all-Arab commercial navy of passenger and cargo ships with headquarters in the Arab State which contributes the biggest share to the Company's capital. Syria's share is 10 per cent.

The pan-Arab airline will have a capital of £E10,000,000, with Syria contributing five per cent of the capital. Its headquarters will be chosen by its Board of Directors.

All three firms have been approved by the Arab League Economic Council in 1961 and 1963. The current bid to bring them into being followed the January "summit" conference in Cairo of Arab Heads of State.

THAILAND

A. Funds For Development Of Mekong Basin: A committee co-ordinating investigation of the lower Mekong Basin announced after its annual session, which ended in Bangkok on January 13, that it had gathered all necessary data and was now seeking funds to start work on four projects.

They are:

(1) A hydro-electric project at Prek Thnot in Cambodia costing $13 million;

(2) A barrage and an irrigation and drainage system near Battambang in Cambodia costing $21 million for the first phase;

(3) A hydro-electric power station and irrigation project on the Nam Ngum river in Laos costing $23 million; and

(4) Improvement of transportation in the Mekong river delta in South Viet-Nam costing about $18 million.

The committee also announced that two power stations would be completed in Laos in three years. One station is at Se Done and the other near Luang Prabang.

France has agreed to lend Laos $600,000 for the two projects and Laotian Government will raise an additional $975,000.

Cambodia has decided to go ahead, alone if necessary, with the construction of the Prek Thnot tributary dam and has allotted $500,000.

The committee directs planning and investigation work on the development of the lower Mekong Basin. It was set up in 1957 by Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and the Republic of Viet-Nam.

At the close of 1963 the resources of the committee stood at $42 million or an increase of $6 million over 1962. The funds were contributed by the four Mekong river countries, 20 other nations including USA, UK, Australia, New Zealand and Japan and many UN agencies and foundations.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. American Activities In South Viet-Nam—Note To ITSC: In a message to the International Truce Supervisory Commission (ITSC), the Defence Minister and Commander-in-Chief, Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, alleged on February 28 a series of new violations of the Geneva Agreement (that ended the war in Indo-China in 1954) by USA.

He declared that "any violation of the territory, air-space and territorial waters of North Viet-Nam by USA or South Viet-Nam would be properly dealt with." "They would have to bear full responsibility for all eventual consequences of their criminal acts."

[Recently there had been some speculation whether USA which is massively supporting South Viet-Nam's war against the Viet-Cong, would carry the war into North Viet-Nam.]

Gen. Giap, who had directed the war against the French leading to the debacle at Dien Bien Phu and the eventual French withdrawal, said in his message that within three weeks of the latest coup in South Viet-Nam, President Lyndon Johnson of USA had declared that his Government intended to step up war against the Viet-Cong. Particularly serious was Mr. Johnson's statement on February 21 at Los Angeles that North Viet-Nam was directing and supplying the guerrillas in South Viet-Nam and thus it was engaged in a sort of aggressive war against South Viet-Nam.

[Evidence of North Viet-Nam's involvement in the guerrilla war in the southern half of the country has been confirmed by the International Truce Supervisory Commission's report signed by India and Canada. It was submitted as early as June, 1962. It said in part: "Having examined the complaints and supporting material sent by the South Viet-Namese Mission, the committee (Legal Committee of the International Commission) has come to the conclusion that in the specific instances, there is evidence to show that armed and unarmed personnel, arms, munitions and other supplies have been sent from the zone in the north (that is, North Viet-Nam) to the zone in the south (South Viet-Nam) with the object of supporting, organizing and carrying out hostile activities, including armed attacks directed against the armed forces and administration of the zone in the south. "These acts are in violation of Articles 10, 19, 24 and 27 of the Agreement on cessation of hostilities in Viet-Nam."]

Chinese Support:

The New China News Agency reported on March 5 that the Chinese Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi, had said that "peace-loving people" would not be "intimidated" by the campaign of some American circles for an extension of the Viet-Namese war to North Viet-Nam.

He said this in reply to a letter from the North Viet-Namese Foreign Minister, Mr. Xuan Thuy.

US Stand:

Replying to questions at a news conference in Washington on March 6, the American Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, said that if North Viet-Nam would leave Laos and South Viet-Nam alone, there could be peace in South-East Asia and the countries there need not be formally allied to any one.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He made it clear that there was no objection to neutrality, but he insisted that the territorial integrity of South Viet-Nam would have to be restored and "any talk of neutralization which implied that USA should withdraw its support served only to undermine morale."

He was at pains to emphasize the American commitment to South Viet-Nam which he said was undiminished, but the essence of his remarks on the long-term possibility was that if the problem would go away, so would the American troops.

USA had no desire to establish military bases or a military presence in South-East Asia for her own purposes. The present American involvement in Viet-Nam was a direct response to the announcement in 1959 by North Viet-Nam that it was going to try to take over the South. Neither the communists nor USA needed Laos as an ally. The aim was to have those two million people left alone, but the Pathet Lao, supported by Hanoi and Peking, were not honouring solemn agreements.

Earlier on March 1, President Johnson acknowledged that USA faced "a very difficult situation" in Viet-Nam, but deprecated speculative talk about extending the war or neutralizing the area.

In his first "live" televised news conference, watched by people throughout the country, he said that talk that "we are losing the fight in that area or that things have gone to pot there," were not justified. The Viet-Namese situation and the affairs in South-East Asia dominated the conference.

He also announced that he had chosen Mr. William P. Bundy as Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs to succeed Mr. Roger Kilsman, who had resigned.

A. Warning To French Residents: The Government on March 5 issued a warning, believed to be directed at French residents, that they should "realize that the hospitality granted to them by this country cannot be a one-way business."

In a statement on alleged plots against General Nguyen Khanh, the Prime Minister, the Government said that plots, espionage or action assisting the enemy, such as paying taxes to subversive agents, were regarded as extremely harmful to security. It would be compelled "to take appropriate measures".

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Sir Alec Douglas-Home's Visit To USA—Joint Communique: The US President, Mr. Lyndon Johnson, and the British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, said in a joint communique on February 13 that they considered the "pursuit of peace with security" their primary task and responsibility.

Sir Alec had arrived in Washington on February 12 for talks with President Johnson.

In the communique they expressed the hope that Russia would "examine with the greatest seriousness" proposals put forward at the Geneva Disarmament Conference and elsewhere by USA and Britain to bring about effective and controlled disarmament.

They said that each Government recognized that no progress could be made without a strong and united Western alliance prepared to defend its interests against threat and intimidation.

They called for the widest possible political and economic co-operation in Europe within a broad Atlantic partnership. This remained the common aim of US and British policy.

The communique did not make any specific mention of the Cuban trade issue over which USA and Britain are known to differ.

It said: "The President stressed his concern at the present situation in the Caribbean area and the subversive and disruptive influence of the present Cuban regime. The Prime Minister fully recognized the importance of the development of Latin America in conditions of freedom and political and economic stability. Both expressed their belief that a valuable contribution can be made by Europe to this end".

It said the two leaders gave special consideration to South-East Asian matters.

Sir Alec re-emphasized British support to the US policy in South Viet-Nam and the President re-affirmed the support of USA for the peaceful national independence of Malaysia.

C. British Defence Programme For 1964-65: The British Government announced on February 13 a record peace-time defence programme for 1964-65.

A White Paper on defence policy affirmed the resolve of the Tories to maintain the nation's independent nuclear strike power because: "If there were no Power in Europe capable of inflicting unacceptable damage on a potential enemy he might be tempted—if not now, then at some time in the future—to attack in the mistaken belief that USA would not act unless America herself were attacked."

But Britain now had all the nuclear warheads needed "for the foreseeable future", the document said. Accordingly, production of military plutonium was being ended.

Mr. George Brown, deputy leader of the Labour Party, attacked the Government's programme. In particular he criticized what he called its "ridiculous claim" that Britain's nuclear deterrent was independent.

For the fiscal year beginning on April 1, the nation's defence bill will jump $448 million to $5,595.8 million. The total will be shared about equally by the Navy, Army, Royal Air Force and weapons research and development. From April 1, all the armed forces will be under a single Defence Ministry.

The Government's determination to keep Britain in the nuclear weapons league was spelled out emphatically, almost challengingly, in the White Paper. It noted that 1964 would be the 19th year in which the destructive power of nuclear weapons has ensured peace.

Then, throwing the gauntlet at Socialist and Liberal Party critics who want Britain out of the nuclear arms business, the document added: "In the present state of the world no other realistic policy is apparent."

All this seemed to be in line with the Premier, Sir Alec's avowed intention to make Britain's nuclear role a major electoral issue.

D. Discovery Of Rare Atomic Particle: A New York despatch on February 21 said a scientific breakthrough, that some experts believe could bring order to theories of atomic matter in the way that the table of elements did in chemistry, had been made by an international team of 33 scientists.

The breakthrough was the discovery of a rare atomic particle—the Omega Minus—during an experiment with a 33,000-million-volt atom smasher at the Brookhaven National Laboratory, New York.

The discovery was unexpected—but what excited scientists is that its properties fit in with a two-year-old theory for matter called the "eightfold way".

Existence of Omega Minus—one of 80 to 100 such particles discovered in the last 12 years—had been correctly predicted under the theory.

The 'eight-fold way' theory to explain this vast number of particles in the atomic heart was put forward by Dr. Murray Gell-Man, of the California Institute of Technology, and Dr. Yuval Ne'eman of Israel now at the Institute.

The Brookhaven team was led by Mr. Ralph Shutt. Others who contributed to the discovery included Prof. Abdus Salam and Dr. J. C. Ward, of London, and Prof. Y. Ohnuki of Japan.

Dr. Maurice Goldhaber, Director of Brookhaven, said on February 19 that the discovery of the particle "forms the capstone in a building which was so far held together only by the bold imagination of Dr. Gell-Man, and Dr. Ne'eman."

The Omega Minus, which is invisible and has a life of about 10,000 millionths of a second, was found by hurling negative k-mesons at hydrogen protons to produce a shower of particles. These leave a trail that can be photographed by high-speed cameras.

CAMBODIA

A. Normalization Of Relations With USA—Prince Norodom Sihanouk's Letter To Philippine Newspapers: In an open letter to the Filipino Press and Broadcasting Service, the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, has offered to normalize relations wtih USA if America will back an agreement that would guarantee his country's neutrality.

He has further denied allegations that his policies have been endangering peace in the region and that he is leading his country to communism.

The letter reads:

"Assertions to the effect that I am endangering peace are made, therefore, with the object of concealing the fact that peace is indeed endangered by others who are in a far better position to do so than I am, and who stop at nothing in their attempts to overthrow our regime, which enjoys the support of practically the entire Khmer people.

"Do the people of the Philippines realise that Thailand and South Viet-Nam, aided and abetted by agents of the American Central Intelligence Agency—a fact proved up to the hilt—deliberately tried, with the assistance of a traitor General, one Dap Chhuon, to stir up civil war in my country, designed to lead to the secession of the border provinces of Siem Reap, Kompong Thom and Battambang?

"Do the people of the Philippines realise that Thai personalities, holding ministerial position, are in the habit of broadcasting appeals to the Khmer people, inciting them to rise up in arms against their lawfully constituted Government? Do they know of the existence of camps in South Viet-Nam, where rebels—self-styled Free Khmers—are being trained to carry out sabotage operations in Cambodian territory? Do they know of the rebel wireless-transmitter, installed in Thailand, which heaps insults on our head three times a day, and exhorts the Khmers to overthrow the regime?

"Do the people of the Philippines realise we have been subjected for the past five years to murderous raids by South Viet-Namese aircraft, and to incursions by South Viet-Namese troops—163 in all —which have resulted in hundreds of casualties among the civilian population, many of them fatal, and principally among that section least able to fend for itself—the women and children? Do they realise that the South-East Asian Treaty Organization (S-EATO), which has its headquarters in Bangkok, has adopted the practice of carrying out manoeuvres in close proximity to our frontier, while their aircraft fly through our air-space and their naval vessels cruise in our territorial waters?

"I do not believe the people of the Philippines are aware of the situation, and this is why I consider it essential they should be informed of the tremendous pressure to which our small and ill-equipped country is being subjected to on the specious pretext that it is 'playing the communist game'.

"Another allegation which is continually being levelled at me, is that of 'appealing to the Chinese for assistance.' But I should like to point out that not one single Chinese, or North Viet-Namese soldier is to be found on Cambodian soil. Indeed, the only foreign soldiers in Cambodia are some officers, lent us by France —a Western Power, which is both a member of S-EATO and of NATO—for the purpose of training our army. Finally, no foreign bases exist in my country.

"Indeed, our deep love of peace—a condition which fulfils our deepest aspirations—coupled with our desire to remain neutral, have led us to propose that the International Control Commission (ICC), set up under the terms of the Geneva Agreements of 1954, should be empowered to exercise general control over our national territory for an indefinite period, and should set up posts at 'trouble spots', where the Reds are alleged to be in the habit of crossing the frontier either into Cambodian, or South Viet-Namese territory—a proposal calculated in our opinion to put a stop to further accusations, or threats formulated by our neighbours. Furthermore, we suggested that the entire responsibility for ensuring the success of this operation should be vested in the ICC, itself, the members of which would be empowered to search our villages, our forests and even our homes without prior reference to the local authorities. The impairment of national sovereignty implicit in these proposals, even if freely conceded, is a bitter pill for a proud people, like the Khmers, to swallow. But we were prepared to make this sacrifice in order to live in peace.

"But our proposals, which seemed to meet the demands of the Americans and their allies fully, have been received in very reticent fashion; and, by rejecting our demand for the convening of a conference to discuss their implementation, the Americans have left us isolated, and in no position to defend ourselves against our traditional enemies. What other course of action is open to us, therefore, but to ally ourselves with 'the enemies of our enemies'—or in other words with the Chinese, who have long shown us a consideration and respect which we have looked for in vain from the West?

"Nevertheless, whenever the possibility of a defensive alliance with China is mooted, the Americans and the pro-Americans react in violent fashion, threaten us with reprisals and accuse us of war-mongering. Faced with the rejection of our request for an international guarantee of our neutral status, despite our readiness to accept international supervision of our territory, and perplexed by the violent reaction aroused by any suggestion that we might be contemplating seeking support where support is available, we may ask ourselves what is required of us. Can it be that we are expected to range ourselves under the American banner? But the attacks and humiliations we have been subjected to absolutely excludes such a possibility.

"Make no mistake about it—my dear Filipino brothers and friends—we are not criticizing those who have chosen of their own free will to ally themselves with the West, nor do we question the right of those who have made such a decision to accept the presence of American or English troops in their midst, and to permit foreign bases to be established on their soil. But we merely wish to point out that it is quite illogical to refuse to allow us to exercise a similar right when —the object of adverse criticism, false accusations and threats and unable to ensure respect of our neutral status—we find ourselves reduced to considering the possibility of seeking allies in the other camp.

"Some days ago, I resolved to make a final attempt to preserve our neutral status and proposed that a quadripartite conference should meet in Pnom Penh, a proposal which had the advantage of sparing most of the delegates the long journey to Geneva. The task before this conference, attended by representatives of Cambodia, the United States, South Viet-Nam and Thailand respectively, would be to discuss, and decide upon, the terms of an agreement under which Cambodia's neutral status would be guaranteed by the signatories, who would likewise formally recognize the intangible nature of the national frontiers.

"In the event of such an agreement being signed, I for my part am prepared to place our relations with the United States on a normal footing, as your eminent President would like us to do, and to re-establish diplomatic relations with Thailand and political relations with South Viet-Nam. Surely this is proof enough that I have left no stone unturned in my endeavours to avoid a rupture with your American friends and their allies. And do you really believe that, if Cambodians were as "Red" as certain newspapers insist they are, we would have welcomed to Cambodia, with transports of joy, such firm friends of the West as your distinguished leader and the Prime Minister of Malaysia?"

British Stand Criticized:

On March 2, Cambodia denounced as a "diversionary manoeuvre" the British Government's reply of February 27 to the Soviet proposal that an international conference to guarantee Cambodia's neutrality be held in Geneva in April.

The Soviet Government had proposed that Britain and the Soviet Union, co-Chairmen of the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China, should jointly issue invitations for an April conference on Cambodia.

The British reply published implicitly rejected the Soviet proposal, but welcomed the proposal of Prince Norodom Sihanouk for a four-Power conference in Pnom Penh between Cambodia, USA, Thailand and South Viet-Nam.

In a communique issued by the Khmer Press Agency, the Cambodian Government said the projected four-Power conference in Pnom Penh could not take the place of an international conference in Geneva on Cambodia's neutrality.

British Note To Soviet Union:

In the Note despatched to Moscow on February 27, Britain rejected a Russian charge that British attitude had contributed to the trouble on the frontier between Cambodia and South Viet-Nam.

The Note asserted that it had done its utmost to prevent tension on Cambodia's borders.

It said: "Her Majesty's Government have noted with regret the Soviet Government's suggestion that the inability of Her Majesty's Government to accept all the suggestions made to them in the past by the Soviet Government could in any way have contributed to the present state of tension on Cambodia's borders."

The Note described this tension as "a situation which Her Majesty's Government have throughout done their utmost to eliminate by the exercise of such influence as they possess with all the Governments concerned."

The Soviet Note had drawn attention to a complaint from Prince Norodom Sihanouk alleging South Viet-Namese incursions into Cambodian territory.

The British reply agreed that Prince Norodom's complaint be circulated to participants in the 1954 Geneva Conference and suggested it should be accompanied by the published explanation in which South Viet-Nam denied any deliberate border violation.

The British Note said: "Circulation of both documents would thus ensure that the members of the Geneva Conference were aware of the views expressed by both parties concerned in this extremely regrettable incident..."

Background:

Earlier on November 24, 1963, Cambodia had sent similar messages to the British and Soviet Foreign Ministers as co-Chairmen of the Geneva Agreement of 1954 on Cambodia, proposing a conference of the nine participants in the 1954 Conference—Britain, France, USA, Russia, China, Cambodia, Laos and North and South Viet-Nam.

It was proposed that the conference should be held in Indonesia or Burma.

On December 14, 1963, the Cambodian Government announced the withdrawal of its Embassy personnel from London and Washington. The withdrawal of Embassy staff did not, however, amount to a severance of diplomatic relations. The Cambodian Government indicated that its London Embassy was being closed for reasons of economy and assured the British Ambassador in Pnom Penh that his presence continued to be most welcome. The announcement of the withdrawal of the Embassy staff from Washington followed an American complaint regarding the manner in which the assassination of President Kennedy was announced over the Cambodian Radio. The form in which this complaint was made was objected to by Cambodia, which subsequently demanded an apology for statements attributed to a US official and for the withdrawal of an American request for an inquiry into the matter.

On December 20, 1963 the British Government announced that it had told the Cambodian and Soviet Governments that Britain supported a conference on Cambodia in principle. Such a conference presented difficulties, but Britain was trying to achieve conditions which would make possible the holding of a conference with constructive results acceptable to all Governments concerned. Britain also called upon the Governments concerned to exercise the utmost restraint in the present situation. The British communication took the form of messages from the British Foreign Secretary, in his capacity as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference, to the Cambodian Foreign Secretary and to the Soviet Foreign Minister. It was noted in London that, despite the closing of the Cambodian Embassy in London, the position of the British Ambassador in Cambodia was unchanged. The British Ambassador in Cambodia was not only the representative of Her Majesty's Government but also the representative of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference.

On December 29, 1963, Prince Norodom declared that, if the West refused to guarantee Cambodia's neutrality, his country would sign a formal alliance with China. He again accused Britain and the USA of attempting to prevent a conference on Cambodian neutrality. Whilst the Western Powers continued to consider the desirability of holding a conference on Cambodia's neutrality, it was announced in Saigon that South Viet-Nam would not attend such a conference, since it would be exploited by the Communists and would not, in fact, guarantee Cambodian safety.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk had meanwhile denied that his rejection of US aid was a move towards communism. He indicated that, after the United States had gone, France would continue to have administrative and military technicians in Cambodia.

On January, 2, 1964 Mr. P. Messmer, French Minister of the Armed Forces, left Paris for Cambodia accompanied by Admiral Cabanier, Chief of the Naval Staff, to negotiate a military aid agreement. On January 6, it was announced that France had offered military aid including a complete squadron of 18 tanks, 100 lorries, and 12 fighter and 8 transport aircraft. France had also offered to increase greatly the number of teachers sent to Cambodia and to establish high schools, an agricultural college and a teacher-training college. France would also consider granting a low-interest loan to build a railway line from Pnom Penh to Sihanoukville.

At the end of Mr. Messmer's visit, Prince Sihanouk said: "We are happy to note that, after a very long silence, France seems determined to play in Asia the role imposed on her by the past... France is perhaps today the only Power capable of throwing a solid bridge between East and West." Mr. Messmer, in reply to Prince Norodom Sihanouk, indicated that France had an "unreserved adherence" to Cambodian neutrality.

On January 15 Britain noted that the Prince had welcomed a British draft declaration on Cambodian neutrality as "closely inspired by Cambodian requirements". The draft declaration, together with a protocol suggesting arrangements to supervise any agreement on Cambodian neutrality that might be reached, had earlier been presented to the Cambodian Government and to the Soviet Foreign Minister as co-Chairman of the 1954 Geneva Conference. At the same time, the views of certain other countries were being sought by Britain to see whether the draft declaration and protocol might provide a generally acceptable basis for convening a conference.

The Soviet Government on January 21 proposed to Britain that the 14 nations which took part in the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China, should meet in Geneva in April, 1964 at a conference that would guarantee Cambodian neutrality. The Soviet Government indicated that its proposal would be issued to the other Governments concerned if agreed to by Britain as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference.

Though a number of countries had shown willingness to attend a conference on Cambodian neutrality, the attitude of the United States to the proposal remained unclarified. It was believed that the United States was apprehensive, like their Viet-Namese and Thai allies, that a conference on Cambodian neutrality might be used by the communists as a forum for attacking the United States and for discussing neutrality for South-East Asia generally. According to American Press reports the United States was in favour of the principle of guaranteeing Cambodian neutrality but believed that a signed declaration by the Geneva Powers would be an adequate substitute for a conference. Cambodia, on the other hand, had made it clear that bilateral talks and a signed guarantee to guarantee its neutrality would not be considered an adequate safeguard and that it would only be satisfied if a neutrality conference took place, in order that the details of a neutrality declaration could be worked out. At the same time relations between USA and Cambodia continued to be under strain on account of the unresolved dispute concerning the American representations on the form of the Cambodian radio announcement of President Kennedy's death and Prince Norodom Sihanouk's demand for an American apology on this matter. The Government of the Philippines had agreed to try to reach a solution to the dispute, and Prince Norodom had indicated that, if the Philippines Government could succeed in effecting a reconciliation, the Cambodian Ambassador would remain in Washington.

On January 27, the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, when questioned in the House of Commons as to what reply had been given to the Cambodian Government's request for the summoning of a conference on Cambodian neutrality, stated that as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference he had prepared drafts of documents on Cambodian neutrality such as a conference might agree to. These had been put to the Soviet Government and the Cambodian Government, and the comments of other Governments concerned had been asked for. The Prince had welcomed the drafts, and the Soviet Government had published its proposal that the co-Chairmen should issue invitations for a Geneva conference in April. The British Government was considering its reply in the light of its own attempts, through normal diplomatic channels, to prepare a generally acceptable basis for such a conference.

In reply to a supplementary question, Mr. Butler emphasized that it was the aim of the British Government to do its utmost, and his own aim as co-Chairman with the Soviet representative, to do his best to maintain Cambodian neutrality.

On January 28 in an aide memoire delivered to the Soviet Government, the British Government proposed that Britain and Russia, as co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference, should defer sending a formal message to other Governments on convening a conference on Cambodia until agreement had been reached on the tasks to be achieved. The aide memoire noted the Soviet proposal of January 21 that the co-Chairmen should send a message to the Governments which took part in the 1961-62 Laos Conference calling for the convening of a Cambodian conference in April in Geneva, and stated that the British Government would itself have no objection to the place and composition of the proposed conference. The aide memoire also indicated that Britain was glad that the Soviet Government shared the view that advance preparation was important and envisaged a suitable interval for this purpose. Under such circumstances, however, Britain considered it unnecessary for the two co-Chairmen to attempt to decide on an actual date or to issue a formal invitation so far in advance.

The aide memoire pointed out that all the Governments concerned were well aware that a conference might be required and noted that consultations were actively proceeding with many of them. Such proceedings would, in Britain's view, offer the definite advantage of permitting prior agreement to be reached on the draft texts of the proposed declarations and protocol concerning Cambodian neutrality, and, until this was done, Britain foresaw difficulty in securing the agreement of all the Governments concerned to attend. Britain also considered that fixing the date of a conference so far ahead might actually discourage some of the Governments concerned from continuing to seek agreement in the meantime. Britain accordingly proposed that the co-Chairmen should defer their decision on sending a formal message to other Governments and that, in the meantime, the co-Chairmen should actively pursue their informal discussions with a view to reaching agreement on the tasks to be achieved by the conference. Without such agreement beforehand among the parties principally concerned, the co-Chairmen would be unable to convene a representative and effective conference, which would be in the best interests of Indo-China and of the peace of South-East Asia.

CHINA

A. Mr. Chou En-lai On Chinese Aims: In a television interview released on March 2 in Britain, the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, said that China would never provoke a war.

The interviewer was Felix Greene, journalist and traveller, who visited China and filmed a three-part series of television programmes for Associated Television. It was the third of the series "China Now" on the commercial network.

He said that "US imperialism" had rejected peaceful co-existence with China and maintained a "position of hostility to the Chinese people." "China wants peaceful co-existence with every country in the world, including USA, on the basis of the Five Principles."

He accused "imperialists" of slandering China by calling his country belligerent and asserting that China was willing to lose half her population in a war.

"China will never provoke a war", he said. "But should imperialism impose war on us we would have no alternative but to resist firmly, and, whatever the cost, we would never surrender".

He said that China stood unswervingly for the complete prohibition and destruction of nuclear weapons because "we are perfectly clear that a nuclear war would cause enormous havoc to mankind."

Turning to other subjects, he said that imperialism was doing its utmost to drive a wedge between China and Russia. "Whatever happens the fraternal Chinese and Soviet people will stand together in any storm that breaks out in the world arena".

Of the domestic scene, he said: "It is, of course, a difficult task to build socialism in a country as large and economically backward as China. There have been some shortcomings and mistakes in our practical work, and this was something that cannot be avoided entirely.

"Some tuition fee must be paid to learn how to build socialism."

Asked about rural communes, he said: "The people's communes were, and remain, a form of socialist collectivist ownership. In the process of developing and consolidating this collective economy, we have readjusted and developed some specific measures as circumstances required. This has put the people's communes on a more solid footing. There are no grounds for saying that they are a 'failure' or 'exist in name only'".

On the problem of population, he said the issue was not food production being able to keep up with the rate of population increase, but the social system. China's population increased at the rate of 2 per cent annually.

"But our population is not too big considering our natural conditions, our large territory and rich resources, and considering our great task of socialist construction. We are now advocating planned parenthood because it will help steady improvement in the living standards of the people, the health of the mothers and the care and education of the new generation".

Referring to China's foreign aid programme, he said: "We have given such aid as we could to some newly-independent countries without attaching any strings or asking for privileges. We have done so to help them develop independent national economies and not to make them dependent on us."

China had no feeling of political isolation, he said, adding: "Our friends are growing in number because we consistently pursue a foreign policy of peace and because we firmly support the just struggles of the oppressed nations and oppressed people everywhere."

B. Move For Seat In WHO Fails: The World Health Assembly rejected on March 3 a French proposal to seat Peking in place of Formosa.

The Credentials Committee's report was adopted with 51 votes in favour, 21 against and 22 abstentions.

The Committee had said that Formosa was the "sole representative of the Chinese people".

France voted against the report. The USA, South Viet-Nam and South Korea voted in favour. Sweden, Norway, Yugoslavia and the Malagasy Republic were among those who abstained.

The French demand was rejected by Mr. Nathaniel McKitterick, leader of the US delegation, who said: "China is represented rightfully in this Assembly."

He said the last UN General Assembly had decided that the Formosa regime should represent China in UN.

He added: "In these essentially political matters, let us not here and now challenge the authority of the General Assembly either for innocent reasons or for propaganda purposes."

In Washington, the State Department made it clear that USA would continue to oppose China's admission to UN and all organizations associated with the world Organization.

The spokesman of the French Foreign Ministry made it clear in Paris the same day (March 3) that France would advocate admission of China to all international organizations. France's attitude, he pointed out, was "normal and logical."

INDIA

SUMMARY: Pakistani Activities In Border Areas; Changes In Central Portfolios; FICCI Annual Session; Increase In Coal Prices; State Budgets.

A. Pakistani Activities In Border Areas—Mr. Y. B. Chavan's Statements In Parliament: The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, confirmed in the Lok Sabha on March 4 that Pakistanis had been digging in on the Jammu and Kashmir international frontier and the cease-fire line and along the Feni river on the Tripura-East Pakistan border.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Information had also been received about "some movement of armed personnel and military vehicles" on the Pakistani side of the cease-fire line. He assured members that the situation "is being carefully watched" and measures to guard the frontiers were being taken.

Mr. Chavan, who was making a brief statement on a calling attention motion standing in the names of Mr. Hem Barua (F-SP) and 11 others, cited two specific instances where Pakistanis had dug in the Jammu and Kashmir sector.

In one instance Pakistanis tried to occupy a graveyard area about 20 miles south of Jammu on the international border. Indian police moved forward to prevent encroachment on the area and a complaint was lodged with UN observers.

The UN observers intervened, but no final solution had yet been reached. "Pakistanis are still in occupation of a small portion of the graveyard and are constructing bunkers and digging trenches in the neighbourhood".

The other instance, mentioned by him in the House the previous week, related to an attempt to blow up a wooden bridge about five miles south of Tithwal on February 23. The attempt, he said, was unsuccessful. Only minor damage was caused to the planks.

When an Indian police patrol went to investigate three days later, it was fired upon by Pakistanis. The fire was returned and the Pakistanis retreated leaving behind three bodies and some spent ammunition. "In this area also Pakistanis are digging in opposite the wooden bridge".

As regards the Tripura-East Pakistan border, not only were Pakistanis digging trenches, but their outposts in various areas had been re-inforced.

Anxious questions from several Members elicited the information that the Government knew that Pakistanis were being trained by Chinese experts and tacticians.

Mr. Chavan informed the Rajya Sabha on March 10 that exchange of fire between Indian and Pakistani forces in the Jammu area, which began on March 5, was continuing.

In reply to a supplementary by Mr. A. M. Tariq, he said that the Pakistanis were using heavy mortars in addition to other arms.

He replied in the affirmative when asked whether India had asked for more UN observers to supervise the cease-fire in view of the increase in the number of cease-fire violations by Pakistanis in recent times.

"On the morning of March 5," he said, "Pakistani armed forces opened fire in the area of a graveyard located approximately 20 miles south of Jammu on our side of the international border.

"After a flag meeting between Indian and Pakistani company commanders Pakistani troops opened fire at our post opposite the graveyard, on the pretext of blowing up a blind grenade. The same evening they opened fire on two of our other posts in the same area. This firing continued intermittently on the morning of March 6 and 7. It was resumed by the Pakistanis on March 9 and was continuing this morning.

"There were no casualties on our side on March 5, 6 and 7. On March 9 two of our civilians were killed and one child was wounded. Pakistani casualties were not known.

"Our troops returned fire on each occasion. We have also lodged a complaint with the UN military observers."

Two temples in the border villages of Bannuchak and Hartal were damaged as a result of continuous shelling by the Pakistanis.

Temporary Cease-fire In Jammu Area:

A temporary cease-fire was observed in the Jammu area on March 11 at the request of UN military observers to enable them to visit the spot which had been the scene of Pakistani firing for nearly a week.

The Indian side, which had been returning the fire, accepted the UN team's request. It was understood that Pakistan too agreed to abide by it and no information was available in New Delhi about any fresh outburst of firing since the cease-fire began.

B. India's Right To Move Troops To MacMahon Line—Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's Assurance: India's right to move her troops up to the MacMahon Line in N-EFA was re-iterated by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Minister without Portfolio, in a letter to Mr. M. R. Masani, General Secretary of the Swatantra Party.

The letters exchanged by them on the reported assurance given by the Ceylon Premier, Mrs. S. Bandaranaike, to the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai that India did not intend to advance her forces up to the MacMahon Line again were released for publication on March 5 by Mr. Masani with Mr. Shastri's permission to clarify the Indian position.

Soon after the Bangalore convention of the Swatantra Party, Mr. Masani sent a copy of the letter dated March 7, 1963, which Mrs. Bandaranaike wrote to Mr. Chou conveying an assurance given by Mr. Nehru that "it was not his intention to advance his forces to the MacMahon Line." Mrs. Bandaranaike had mentioned in that letter that Mr. Aly Sabri, UAR Premier, and Mr. Nehru gave this assurance and also authorized her to convey it to Mr. Chou.

In his reply to Mr. Masani, Mr. Shastri explained that Mr. Nehru in his confidential exchanges with Mrs. Bandaranaike and her colleagues in Delhi on January 13, 1963, on the implications of the Colombo proposals, had stated that "India will not accept any restrictions on the deployment of her forces in N-EFA though, on that date, the Government of India did not, while extending the civil administration right up to the MacMahon Line, intend to move Indian troops right up to that Line."

"This statement of the intentions of the Government of India as on January 13, 1963," Mr. Shastri pointed out, "was made at a time when the question of acceptance of the Colombo proposals by India and China was under consideration."

Since then, several developments had taken place, more particularly China's refusal to accept the Colombo proposals without reservation. "There is, therefore, no bar to the movement of Indian military forces to any point in N-EFA within the cease-fire line as recommended in the Colombo proposals."

Mr. Shastri, however, took care to qualify the Indian position with a cautious note that "this is a matter to be decided by the Indian military authorities purely on strategic and defence considerations."

Mr. Masani, in his letter, had drawn Mr. Shastri's attention to the fact that on November 11, 1963 the External Affairs Ministry had flatly contradicted the despatch of the Hong Kong correspondent of The Times of India, which disclosed for the first time that Mrs. Bandaranaike had written to Mr. Chou that Mr. Nehru had assured her that India did not intend to move her troops up to the MacMahon Line. He also pointed out that the External Affairs Ministry had again denied that such an assurance had been given by Mr. Nehru when he referred to this subject to the Swatantra Party convention.

Mr. Masani, who had received a copy of Mrs. Bandaranaike's letter from a friend abroad, called upon Mr. Shastri to consult Mr. Nehru and take the necessary steps "to clear the contradiction between the position taken by Mrs. Bandaranaike on the one hand and our Ministry of External Affairs on the other."

Mr. Shastri's reply disclosed that after the contradiction of The Times of India story by the External Affairs Ministry, the Ceylon Government itself took the initiative to clear up the misunderstanding. And the Government of India took the opportunity to re-iterate the Indian position.

Heavy Chinese Military Build-up:

The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan told the Rajya Sabha on March 10 that the Chinese military build-up all along the Sino-Indian border was now heavier than during 1962, and that it certainly posed a threat to India.

He told Mr. R. S. Khandekar that while the Chinese military build-up all along our borders and in the areas occupied by them continued, "no unusual digging activity has come to our notice."

Mr. Khandekar asked what according to Mr. Chavan was considered "usual activity by the Chinese."

Mr. Chavan replied: "By usual activity, I meant that the build-up activity by the Chinese was going on for some time and hence it was not considered unusual."

Mr. Vajpayee asked: "Is it not a fact that the Chinese build-up now is heavier than before?"

Mr. Chavan said that the Chinese build-up was heavier and it certainly posed a threat.

D. Aid To Tibetan Revolution—Dalai Lama's Appeal: The Dalai Lama has appealed to freedom-loving countries "not to be misled by the propaganda of the Communist Government of China but to continue to help the unfortunate people of Tibet".

In a statement on the fifth anniversary of the Tibetan uprising, the Dalai Lama said that the free nations of the world had rightly condemned the suppression of the coloured people in South Africa, "but the form of oppression and persecution which the Chinese invaders have adopted against the people of Tibet is a thousand times worse than the system of apartheid".

Nowhere in the world, "even under colonialism of the worst type", he said, had a Government ever used public torture as a political deterrent "as the Chinese have done and are still doing in Tibet".

He said that the Tibetans were a distinct people, speaking a language unrelated to Chinese and possessing a religion and culture of their own. Before the Chinese invasion, the Tibetans had remained free and independent for decades.

Recalling the Tibetan struggle against the Chinese, he said thousands of Tibetans had been massacred, thousands had been rendered homeless and thousands of others had escaped to neighbouring States. "But the barbarous atrocities, even to the extent of exterminating the race and the religious belief of the Tibetans, still continue, and the struggle of the people still goes on.

"Today, which marks the fifth anniversary of the spontaneous uprising of my people, we must pay our humble tribute to all those stalwart champions of liberty and faith who have fallen victims to the armed might of the Communist Government of China.

"Today I send my special blessings to all those who are engaged in the bitter campaign against the enemy. I congratulate all my people on their courage and determination in their struggle for political and religious freedom and pray for their success. Our way may be a hard and long one, but I believe that truth and faith must ultimately prevail".

Referring to Tibetan refugees in India, he said: "With the ready assistance of the Government of India and other friendly countries, we have been able to solve their difficulties to a large extent. However, a great deal still remains to be done, particularly for the unfortunate children, who have been deprived of the love and care of their parents.

"I hope and trust that with the help and encouragement of many of our friends here in India and elsewhere we shall be able to arrange for their proper education and upbringing".

E. Dalai Lama's Tour Abroad —Government Of India's Advice: The Dalai Lama, who wants to go abroad to propagate the cause of Tibetan freedom, has been advised by the Government of India that no useful purpose would be served by such a mission at this stage.

Mr. Gyalo Thondup, brother of the Dalai Lama, saw the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Y. D. Gundevia, on March 5. He requested that the necessary facilities be permitted to the Dalai Lama to visit a number of Buddhist and other countries.

Mr. Gundevia was reported to have explained that, while in the normal course the Government of India would be happy to extend such facilities, it did not think that in the present circumstances the cause of the Tibetan people would be served in any way by the Dalai Lama undertaking a tour abroad.

According to political observers in New Delhi, the Dalai Lama wanted to visit Ceylon, Burma and Cambodia two or three years ago to mobilize Buddhist opinion in support of Tibetan freedom, but none of the countries wanted him to undertake such a tour. These countries evidently did not want to risk an open rift with China by permitting such a visit.

It was also argued by some observers that if the Dalai Lama were to tour the West openly campaigning for Tibetan independence or self-determination, it might unnecessarily provoke the Soviet Union and other Communist countries which are otherwise unfriendly to China to come out openly in support of the Chinese occupation of Tibet.

F. FICCI Annual Session: Inaugurating the 37th annual session of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) in New Delhi on March 7, the Central Home Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda underlined the need for changes in the process of production and economic development as well as in the prevailing pattern of distribution of wealth.

He pointed out that this was necessary if the plight of the masses in India was to be ameliorated. Without such amelioration there would be unrest, he warned.

Mr. Nanda, who was replying to the Federation President's criticism, particularly of the demand for nationalization of banks and trade in foodgrains, referred to the rise in prices in recent weeks. "We shall have to revive the spirit of sacrifice and self-regulation that was in evidence among the business community just after the emergency."

He effectively defended the Government's economic policies. At the same time he conceded that failures and weaknesses were not the monopoly of the private sector. State undertakings too had a great deal to explain. As far as procedural delays were concerned, the Government was aware of the bottlenecks and was doing its best to eliminate them.

The underlying theme of his observations was also commended by the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, who in a message to the FICCI President, Mr. Bharat Ram regretted his inability to be present at the session and expressed the hope that the largest good of the nation would be kept in mind during the deliberations.

Mr. Nanda pointed out that the biggest problem confronting democracy, which had come in the country in the wake of a mass struggle, was how to eradicate the back-breaking poverty of the masses. The nation, in other words, had moved into the era of the common man.

There could, under the circumstances, be no conflict between the private and the public sectors: both had to serve a common social and economic purpose, which had been outlined in the Constitution. There was no question of limiting the functions of the State as it served the common objective. The private sector too had to function effectively in pursuit of the same goal.

Explaining the philosophy of the resolution passed at the Bhuvaneswar session of the Congress, he said these only codified the yearnings of our people for more than four decades. The great bulk of the population lived on the fringe of subsistence. It had been calculated that at the present rate of growth, it would take 70 years to ensure a minimum per capita income of Rs. 20 a month.

Obviously, nobody was going to wait that long for this "modest millenium." And if nothing was done about it now there would be unrest on a large scale. Radical changes had, therefore, to be accepted in the process of production and development and in the pattern of distribution of income.

He said he did not believe in regimentation. His basic faith was freedom, but this was no one-way street. The demand for freedom from controls and regulations had to be balanced by freedom from poverty, from exploitation and from enforced idleness. If the present stalemate on the social and economic fronts was to end many changes would have to be brought about.

With a measure of individual and group discipline, many of the existing economic restraints could be done away with. He drew pointed attention to the fact that even a small shortfall in production led to an "exaggerated" rise in prices. There was need for the Government and the Federation to come togethr to devise measures to keep prices in check.

Referring to Mr. Bharat Ram's complaint about Government thinking being dominated by a psychology of scarcity of resources, he said the private sector could help much by reducing its dependence on imported components and raw materials. The Government was keen to help the industry. The very existence of public sector undertakings was of direct assistance to consumer industries. The Government's fiscal policies too were directed towards this goal.

Controls were neither excessive nor rigid. Recently price regulation had been ended in 16 key industries. A number of measures to stimulate production in these and other important industries had been announced in the Budget. There were so many demands on the limited resources that the Government had to take steps to guide investment into priority items.

The Budget also imposed restraints on comparatively well-to-do people, but under a socialistic pattern this was inevitable. A commission would soon be set up to study the problem of concentration of wealth and economic power. Mr. Nanda hoped the industry would cooperate with the Government in checking such concentration.

He concluded with an appeal to businessmen and industrialists to consider favourably applications for employment from retired armed forces officers. These men, he said, gave up active service at a comparatively young age and were excellent human material. During the past seven years only a few had found private employment. He hoped the situation would improve.

Mr. Bharat Ram's Presidential Address: In his Presidential address, Mr. Bharat Ram pointed out the difficulties and objections of industry to the policies and procedures adopted by the Government.

He began by criticising what he termed the psychology of scarce resources, which had come to dominate official thinking. Because of this industrial progress in particular sectors had to be halted as some of the economic infra-structures like power or coal had failed to come up to scratch.

He also appealed for the rationalization or elimination of controls. The demand for nationalization of a wide sector of commerce following the Bhuvaneshwar session was, in his opinion, a retrograde step because "democracy, whether socialistic or otherwise, which curbs individual effort, stifles itself."

The problem of agricultural production which lay at the root of India's economic difficulties, could not be tackled by the existing plethora of authorities without any apparent co-ordination of functions. "What is required is concentrated attention and concerted effort by the best people in the administration at all levels. Also, responsibility must be clearly specified, infringement punished and performance rewarded." The only way of stabilizing the price level was to step up production.

Referring to the Budget, Mr. Bharat Ram said the Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari had declared that the cardinal principle of his taxation policy was to encourage growth. But some of his proposals were at cross-purposes with this objective. He referred particularly to the powers taken by the Government with the object of checking tax evasion, and said these would expose honest assessees also to unprecedented embarrassment and harassment.

He announced that the 20th congress of International Chambers of Commerce would take place in New Delhi in February, 1965. The meeting, which had been sponsored by the Federation, would be attended by over 1,000 delegates from more than 50 countries. It would have as its theme 'World Progress through Partnership'.

Resolutions:

On March 8, FICCI passed a resolution opposing nationalization of banks and extension of the co-operative sector to agriculture, small-scale and processing industries, and wholesale and retail trade.

It attributed the "fall" in the country's economic growth mainly to the fiscal policy pursued by the Government over the years, and said the level of taxation and the type of taxes levied had "substantially reduced the capacity of the people to save and invest".

It demanded the reshaping of the fiscal policy in such a way as "to encourage savings, reward effort, stimulate investment, protect honest taxpayers and create a climate of confidence in the Government".

Mr. Tulsidas Kilachand (Bombay) set the keynote by saying that the business community, which was well organized with membership reaching down to the smallest town and village, should play a bigger role in public life and help build for itself a better public image. "Even if a Minister wants to do something for the business community, he will not be able to do so without public support".

Mr. S. L. Kirloskar (Poona) wanted the business community to send "deserving people" to Parliament, while Mr. Ramakrishna Bajaj (Bombay) said that those people in the Congress who were opposed to the spread of "Communist ideology" should be helped with election funds.

Moving the principal resolution on "Democracy, economic welfare and fiscal policy", Mr. Tulsidas said the business community as a whole should realize immediately its responsibility to perform certain duties without which there would be no salvation for it.

He said the voice of the businessman should be better heard to prevent people from believing all the evil things that were said of the businessman "in the papers".

"We have to win the respect of the people, and convince them that we are not merely for exploiting them but are there to better the conditions of the country".

He said businessmen were not afraid of "socialism" and would in fact work for the achievement of a new social order if socialism was not confused as an end but regarded as a means to bring about the economic welfare of the people.

Fiscal Policies:

The following is the text of the resolution on democracy, economic welfare and fiscal policies:

"The Federation has always held the view that the ultimate end of economic policy is to promote economic welfare and improve the standards of living of the people, which can be accomplished only by increasing production and productivity. The Federation is of the opinion that this end should be the principal consideration in choosing the means, provided the means selected are democratic in form and spirit.

"The Constitution of India, too, enjoins upon the State 'to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting, as effectively as it may, a social order in which justice, economic and political, shall inform all the institutions of national life. It wisely refrains from giving any particular description to the social order, but favours the development of the economic system in such wise that it subserves the common good and avoids common detriment.

"The Federation regrets to note that certain sections of political opinion are assiduously propagating the adoption of means which will not result in economic welfare or in promoting the democratic way of life, and worse still, are commending the pursuit of these means as if they were ends in themselves.

"This confusion between ends and means seems to be the prime reason for the advocacy of nationalization of industry, trade, finance and other economic activity. Of serious concern in this respect is the demand in certain quarters for nationalizing the remaining joint stock banks so that, along with the State Bank and its subsidiaries, the entire field of banking may become a Government monopoly.

"In the opinion of the Federation, nationalization of joint stock banks would not only eliminate competition, resulting in the lowering of standards of service to depositors, but also supplant the present flexibility of the banking system by a bureaucratic rigidity, and open up avenues for political interference, leading to slowing down of growth in the large-scale as well as small-scale industry and trade, in which free enterprise predominates, and thus retarding the rate of growth of the economy and the realisation of the ultimate end of economic welfare.

"The Federation also cautions the public against the view in favour of indiscriminate extension of the co-operative form of organization in the fields of agriculture, small-scale and processing industries and wholesale and retail trade. The country's experience so far does not indicate the advisability of an extension of the co-operative sector without considering the effects on overall production and productivity.

"It is a matter of utmost concern to the Federation that the doctrinaire approach of the Government's fiscal policy, pursued over a period of years now, is chiefly responsible for the fall in the rate of economic growth. The savings of the public are not only diverted to the exchequer—not all of which are productively used—but also the level of taxation and the types of taxes levied have substantially reduced the capacity of the people to save and invest.

"Another matter of great anxiety to the Federation is the powers assumed by the executive in excess of requirements, thereby placing honest assessees in a vulnerable position without the protection of law against avoidable harassment.

"The Federation urges upon the authorities to take immediate steps to reshape fiscal policy, as also the administrative procedures, so as to encourage savings, reward effort, stimulate investment, protect honest taxpayers, and create a climate of confidence in Government policy as well as its implementation."

State Trading:

The following is the resolution on the role of the trading community:

"The Federation views with great concern the serious plight of those engaged in the trade of the country in recent years, on account of the diminution in the area of their activity, diminution brought about by a variety of factors, not all of which are unavoidable or desirable.

"There have been incursions by the State and State-supported co-operative societies into the field of normal trade channels. On account of import restrictions, flowing from paucity of foreign exchange, those in the import trade have also been affected.

"Over and above this, it is distressing to find that the traders, covering the entire gamut of wholesale and semi-wholesale distribution and retail trade, are subjected to unfair criticism and chastised for situations over which they have no direct control. Virtually a Damocles' sword hangs over the heads of the trading community, and every now and then it is threatened with extinction.

"The record of newer agencies like that of the State and co-operative societies—most of which indeed are not genuine ones in terms of their counterparts in other democratic countries—has been far from favourable, judged by reference to their service to the consumer and fair commercial practices.

"In the circumstances, it is a matter, not only of surprise but also disappointment, that faith should be reposed in these newer agencies and the view propagated that their multiplication and expansion are in the interests of the country.

"The Federation appeals to the authorities and the public to take a dispassionate view of the important role of the trading community in our national life. As indispensable links between producers and consumers, traders have to discharge vital economic, financial and social functions. Belonging, as most of them do, to the middle class, they constitute the very back-bone of democracy.

"At the same time the Federation would like to call upon the trading community to undertake their difficult functions with keener zest by way of acquiring technical skills and 'know-how' to handle new products and with a greater sense of discipline, so that their part can be better appreciated by the authorities and the public.

"Organized industry should help the traders, to the fullest extent possible not only by refraining from directly entering the trade, but also in guiding and organizing the trade to fulfil effectively its new role. Any attempt at disturbing the regular and uninterrupted functioning of the normal trade channels cannot but have deleterious consequences on the economy of the country in general".

Population:

The following is the resolution on the growth of population:

"The Federation feels compelled to point out that hitherto sufficient attention has not been given to the problem of the rapid increase in population in India in recent years, in relation to its effect on economic progress and the standard of living of the people. It is estimated that if the present fertility rate continues, the level of population in 1971 will be 555 million and in 1981, 719 million as compared to 439 million in 1961.

"In the view of the Federation, the present rate of increase in population cannot be sustained by our economy, not withstanding accelerated programmes of development. Greater investment outlay may well result only in maintaining, to some extent, the per capita flow of production and consumption. This will minimise the benefits of the development accruing to the society and to individuals.

"The Federation, therefore, is convinced that limitation on population is a pre-condition to better and quicker social and economic progress, and:

"(i) Calls upon business organizations, trade unions, co-operative societies, associations, forums of farmers and the authorities to consider this issue more purposively, so as to impress upon the people the necessity of family planning, and create conditions in which this will be more acceptable;

"(ii) Suggests the study and adoption of methods followed in other countries so as to devise and implement appropriate policies to achieve the goal;

"(iii) Urges the spread of consciousness of limiting the family to a smaller number in rural areas and among the uneducated and poorer classes of society which, at present, are almost wholly unreached by any such schemes;

"(iv) Commends that the allocation of funds for family planning be speedily and purposively utilized;

"(v) Recommends that larger funds should be allocated to this programme in the remaining years of the Third Plan and in the succeeding Plans to make the efforts fruitful in the shortest time;

"(vi) Believes that the authorities, in particular, should take a more urgent interest in the problem."

Farm Production:

The following is the resolution on farm production and productivity:

"The Federation notes with great anxiety the tardy progress in agriculture. This has affected the overall growth of the economy, it feels.

"The importance of agriculture cannot be over-emphasized, in that nearly 70 per cent of the population depend on it for their livelihood. Our major consumer industries also rely on agriculture for their raw materials. Even the fluctuations in our national income from year to year are determined by agricultural production more than any other factor.

"However, while imports of foodgrains have to be continued, the poor rise in the production of commercial crops is affecting the expansion programmes of these industries which depend on them and reducing their capacity to earn additional foreign exchange. The dimension of the problem is painfully sharpened on account of the increase in population, and is reflected in the low standards of health and nutrition.

"This serious situation must be speedily remedied. There is enough data, as also experience, to indicate the areas where specific action has to be taken. The Federation would, however, re-iterate the following, and, while doing so, emphasize the necessity for immediate action, rather than a fresh burst of enquiries into the problem:

"(i) Production must be increased not only by bringing more land into cultivation, but mainly through increasing productivity per acre;

"(ii) The problem of yield of cash crops must be resolved to increase our competitive capacity in international markets;

"(iii) The price policy for our agricultural commodities must be such as to encourage production and increase the income of the producers;

"(iv) A stock-piling programme must be simultaneously implemented;

"(v) Intensive and improved methods of cultivation must be encouraged by making available requisite facilities such as fertilizers, insecticides and pesticides, and credit facilities should be given to the producers;

"(vi) Optimum utilization of available land resources through extension of multiple cropping and the introduction of improved cropping patterns must be effected;

"(vii) Provision for irrigation and water facilities and a proper system of drainage and reclamation of land must be made;

"(viii) Knowledge of soil conservation, utilization of water, the use of better seeds, improved implements and other equipment must be imparted to those on the land;

"(ix) Short-term courses in technical fields for those who are dependent on agriculture and who are likely to continue in it must be established;

"(x) Organized industry also must take positive interest in agriculture, and help the running of agricultural farms as an industrial unit so that agriculture comes to be looked upon and operated as an industry; and

"(xi) The authorities, whether Central or State, must put their best men at all levels to look after agriculture, and in this regard evolve appropriate co-ordination in administrative procedures, which seems to be lacking at present."

World Trade Conference:

The resolution on the forthcoming World Trade Conference said:

"The Federation welcomes the forthcoming World Trade and Development Conference, because it will provide an occasion to look at the trade problems of the developing countries in relation to world economic development.

"By its very nature, unless the content and direction of international trade reflect the changes in the growth of national economies, both the quality of world trade and the development of less developed countries will suffer.

"The terms of world trade have hitherto gone against developing countries, and that can be redressed only if the more developed countries adopt such commercial policies as will help the entry into the international market of processed, semi-manufactured and manufactured goods emerging from the developing nations.

"For this purpose, it is necessary for the advanced countries to accept the principle of preferential treatment for these goods, as also the removal of restrictions on both agricultural products and manufactures of all types, exported by developing nations.

"It is also the expectation of the Federation that the Conference will evolve a satisfactory scheme to ensure greater stability and predictability in the total availability of foreign exchange resources to developing countries.

"At the same time, the Federation hopes that the developing countries, among themselves, will reach a greater degree of harmony, co-operation and like-mindedness in the course of the forthcoming Conference. This co-operative approach must be not only for the purpose of the Conference, but also for the evolution of regional co-operation in investment projects and in the wide objectives of export promotion."

H. Working Of Government Industrial And Commercial Concerns During 1962-63: An overall assessment of the working of 49 industrial and commercial concerns of the Central Government other than departmentally-run undertakings and financial institutions for 1962-63—the second year of the Third Plan—was presented to Parliament on March 10.

According to the assessment, 27 of the 29 running concerns, other than Hindustan Steel Ltd., owned by the Central Government earned net profits of Rs. 15.20 crores in 1962-63.

While the Hindustan Steel—the biggest Government-owned undertaking involving an investment of Rs. 724 crores—incurred a loss of Rs. 23.9 crores, there were substantial increases in the net profits of the Fertilizer Corporation of India (Rs. 146,00,000), Air India (Rs. 96,00,000), Hindustan Machine Tools (Rs. 88,00,000) and National Coal Development Corporation (Rs. 114,00,000) over the previous year.

Nine concerns showed decline in profitability in varying degree. The net profit for 1962-63 earned by these concerns amounted to Rs. 14.83 crores as against Rs. 8.37 crores the previous year.

In terms of percentage of paid-up capital there was an increase in net profits from 4.5 per cent to 7.6 per cent. Eleven of these concerns declared dividends varying from 10 to 2 per cent totalling Rs. 2.09 crores which works out to six per cent of the aggregate paid-up capital of these concerns.

The retained surpluses of different concerns amounting to Rs. 10.91 crores were appropriated by them to the various reserves which stood at Rs. 43.2 crores (including Rs. 13.3 crores on account of development rebate reserve) at the close of the year.

The investment by way of equity and capital loans in the 29 running concerns was Rs. 314 crores, representing 23 per cent of the total investment in Government-owned companies.

by these concerns during the period under review rose to Rs. 264 crores from Rs. 212 crores the previous year—an increase of about 25 per cent. However, the total expenses increased by 21 per cent.

After providing for depreciation amounting to nearly Rs. 16 crores the gross profit for the year was Rs. 24.7 crores—an increase of Rs. 10 crores over the previous year.

These concerns also paid or provided for interest charges amounting to Rs. 3.2 crores on capital loans. The provision on account of tax liability increased by Rs. 2.4 crores—from Rs. 3.7 crores to Rs. 6.1 crores for the year under review.

The total investment in all the 49 industrial and commercial concerns as at the end of 1962-63 was Rs. 1,372 crores.

I. Increase In Coal Prices: It was announced in Parliament on March 4 by the Central Minister for Steel, Mines and Heavy Engineering, Mr. C. Subramaniam, that the Government of India had raised the prices of superior grades of coking and non-coking coal.

He said the Government had accepted in principle the recommendation of an official study group that incentives were necessary to encourage production of superior grades of coal which were in demand.

Accordingly a price increase of Rs. 1.25 per tonne has been allowed in the case of non-coking coal of selected 'A' and 'B' grades in West Bengal and Bihar and "selected grade" in the outlying fields.

In respect of coking coal, every colliery owner will be paid, in addition to the existing prices, two different scales of increase in respect of the coal supplied by him.

The increase allowed in the case of any of the grades of coking coal 'A' to 'E' (conforming to old grades selected 'A' and 'B') is Rs. 1.25 per tonne and in the case of any of the grades of coking coal 'F', 'G' and 'H' (conforming to old grade I) is 75 nP per tonne.

K. Assam Budget For 1964-65: An overall deficit of Rs. 5.7 crores and additional taxation proposals to reduce the gap were the highlights of the Assam Budget for 1964-65, presented to the Assembly on March 7.

The total revenue receipts for the year were estimated at Rs. 61,78,35,000.

The State Finance Minister, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, said the deficit was largely due to the reduction by the Planning Commission of the outlay on the State's Plan "which the State Government has not found it possible to accept."

He said it was necessary that the Centre and the Planning Commission should provide the financial means to enable the Government to carry out a Plan of "the size and magnitude recognized as reasonable and legitimate by the Planning Commission."

The new taxation measures, which are expected to yield Rs. 85,90,000, are: (1) An increase in the general sales-tax from four to five per cent; (2) An increase in sales-tax from four to 10 per cent on a wide range of goods, including thermos flasks, coloured electroplated nickel, silver, german silver or stainless steel articles, upholstered and iron and steel furniture, ivory and ivory-inlaid articles; (3) Sales-tax on coal, coke and coal gas at two per cent; (4) A levy on the consumption of electrical energy at the rate of 2 nP per unit; (5) Excise duty on liquor; and (6) An increase in the rates of agricultural income-tax.

He said the financial implications of the pay committee's recommendations, expected to cost the exchequer about Rs. 2 crores, had not been taken into account in the Budget.

P. Madras Land Reforms Act Declared Unconstitutional By Supreme Court: The Madras Land Reforms Fixation of Ceiling on Land Act, 1961 was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court by a judgment delivered on March 9 by Mr. Justice Wanchoo.

The Court held that the operative provisions of the Act violated the fundamental right to equality before the law and as such contravened Article 14 of the Constitution. In consequence the six writ petitions filed by Mr. A. P. Krishnaswamy Naidu and five other landowners against the State of Madras were allowed and the Act was declared void and inoperative.

The main object of the Act was to provide for a ceiling on land holdings to determine the area of surplus land which could be acquired by the Government subject to the payment of compensation.

The provisions of Section 5 defined the ceiling in different cases and Section 50 read with Schedule III governed the calculation of compensation.

The petitioners challenged the constitutional validity of Sections 5 and 50 and urged that they discriminated between persons in the same circumstances.

Mr. Justice Wanchoo referred to the judgment of the Court in the case of Karimbil Kunhikaman in which Section 58 of the Kerala Agrarian Relations Act 1961 had been declared unconstitutional. He said that the impugned provisions in this case suffered from the same defects as the provisions of the Kerala Act. They discriminated between persons equally placed and had fixed a double standard for land ceilings. The provisions regarding compensation were also discriminatory.

According to the Court, Sections 5 and 50, which were unconstitutional, were pivotal provisions for the working of the entire Act, and if these were bad the whole Act had to be struck down.

The petitions were heard by the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Wanchoo, Mr. Justice Shah, Mr. Justice Ayyangar and Mr. Justice Sikri.

The plane had 22 men, including a crew of five on board and was on its way from Barrackpore to a field area. There were no survivors.

Hundreds of people living at the Barrackpore police base saw the plane crash. They were attracted by the unusual noise from a low flying plane. It crashed only a few feet from the riverside TB Ward Office of the Brigade Police Hospital.

IRAQ

A. Kurdish Problem—Failure To Surrender Arms: A Baghdad message on March 1 said that according to the Kurdish leader, Mullah Mustapha Barzani, all fighting against the Kurds in Northern Iraq had stopped, but the Kurdish guerrillas had not laid down or surrendered their arms to the Iraqi Army.

He said in an interview in the mountain village of Raniyah that the Cease-fire Agreement announced on February 10 was not the only agreement between the Kurds and the Iraqi Government.

"There is a further written agreement which contains secret clauses," he said and these clauses contained conditions to be resolved in later talks.

He said he had been asked to visit Baghdad but had declined, and had asked the Prime Minister and the Interior Minister to come to Raniyah for talks instead. They had agreed, but the date for the visit had not yet been arranged.

He said that President G. A. Nasser of UAR had offered to mediate between the two sides, but before he could accept this offer "the first overture for peace arrived from the Iraqi Government".

He said that during the peace talks he had demanded that future discussions should be attended by envoys from USA, Russia and the United Arab Republic.

Mullah Mustapha Barzani's Assurance:

Mullah Barzani told a group of foreign correspondents that he would gradually disperse the strong Kurdish armed forces, as the agreement he had signed with the Iraqi Government on February 10 was progressively implemented.

He said the Kurdish forces had been built up as a response to injustices suffered by their people in the area, and was simply "normal self-defence." Since an Agreement with the Government had been signed, it was no longer necessary to keep a Kurdish armed force on a war footing.

He said he felt the present Iraqi Government had good intentions and should be allowed to do whatever would be in the interests of the people and the Kurdish zone in general.

He stressed that he had no intention of hampering the Government in its implementation of the Agreement he had signed.

He said that in his negotiations with the Iraqi Government he had stressed two points—recognition of national rights for the Kurdish zone, and a general amnesty.

He said he had insisted that the Iraqi soldiers who had deserted to join his troops should be allowed to take up their service in the Iraqi Army again without prejudice.

He stressed several times that the Kurds were not seeking independence or were not trying to secede. "We are not separatists," he said firmly. He said his party had abandoned many of the concessions it had first demanded in 1963.

Asked if he was prepared to dissolve his party if national unity required it, he said his party was headed by a Central Committee which made decisions and spoke for all of them. But if the authorities decided to dissolve the party, he would be ready to co-operate in carrying out the order.

B. Baghdad Education Conference—Arab Ministers Initial Cultural Pact: Arab Ministers of Education initialled on February 29 a Cultural Union Charter and the constitution of the Arab Education, Science and Culture Organization (ARESCO).

The signing took place at the final session of the second Conference of Arab Ministers of Education at the premises of the National Revolutionary Council in Baghdad.

The Conference opened in Baghdad on February 22, attended by the 13 member-States of the Arab League, as well as representatives of Qatar, Oman, the Arab League and the Arab Teachers' Federation.

About 40 recommendations were adopted by it, including the Cultural Union Charter and the Constitution of ARESCO.

Baghdad Radio said the Cultural Union Charter, to replace the 1954 Cultural Agreement, would be effective as soon as it is ratified by three member-States.

The Charter provides for the establishment of ARESCO, and the establishment of a University Education Higher Council as well as co-operation with UNESCO.

The constitution of the organization will be effective as soon as the Charter is ratified. It will provide for co-ordination of Arab cultural activity and education.

Mr. Sayed Yussef, the United Arab Republic's Education Minister who presided over the closing meeting of the Conference declared that the resolutions were truly expressive of the concerted will of the Arab nation, and that the spirit which prevailed throughout the Conference reflected the feeling of brotherhood, which surged from the Arab Summit Conference.

He paid tribute to President Abdul Salam Aref for his great service to his people and to the entire Arab nation.

In messages to Arab Kings and Presidents on behalf of the Conference, Mr. Mohammed Nasser, Iraqi Education Minister and Chairman of the Conference, said: "The Conference of Arab Education Ministers is happy to inform you that, inspired by the 'Summit' Conference, they have laid the foundation for union of thought in the Arab homeland in the Cultural Union Charter and the charter of the Arab Education, Science and Culture Organization."

The nucleus of the Organization will be the Arab League's Culture Administration. Each Arab country will have a representative at the Organization, which will set up an Arab office with UNESCO to co-operate with it.

One of the chief recommendations passed by the Conference was to draw up a plan for the education of the children of refugees and to set up a committee to assess their educational requirements. A report will be drawn up on the question by the Arab Science, Education and Culture Organization for submission to the third Arab Education Ministers' Conference.

A reference work on Palestine will be compiled under a recommendation which also called for counter-action to be taken against "Zionist propaganda activities which are distorting the facts about the Arabs."

The Conference also urged the promotion of education facilities provided for Arab women, and that an Arab joint stock company be founded for financing the construction of school buildings in the Arab countries.

Special recommendations were passed providing for aid to be rendered to Algeria, Yemen and Oman in meeting their educational needs.

A cultural development fund will be established and placed under the supervision of the Arab Education, Science, and Culture Organization.

The issue of a simplified Arabic reader for the benefit of foreigners studying Arabic was urged. A commission of experts would be entrusted with compiling the material for the book.

The contribution of 350,000 dinars by the Arab countries towards the rebuilding of the Algiers Library and the holding of a drive for the collection of donations for the cause was also recommended.

ISRAEL

A. "Summit" Conference Of Arab Rulers And Heads Of State—Talks On Jordan Waters Issue: The "summit" meeting of Arab rulers and Heads of State to discuss the Jordan river waters issue opened in Cairo on January 13 and went into formal session behind closed doors.

The public meeting ceremony lasted only a few minutes, after which all those not members of the 13 Arab delegations were asked to leave. The closed door session ended at 9 p.m.

The opening ceremony started with President Abdul Salam Arif of Iraq in the chair. He declared the meeting open with a brief speech, after which the Secretary-General of the Arab League, Mr. Abdul Khalek Hassouna delivered the inaugural address.

President G. A. Nasser welcomed the delegations.

President Nasser had a meeting on January 14 with King Hassan of Morocco, President Ahmed Ben Bella of Algeria, and President Arif of Iraq.

He also received President Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia. The meeting was attended by the UAR Vice-President, Field-Marshal Abdul Hakim Amer.

The Communique:

An official communique on the second session of the "Summit" Conference held on January 14 said:

"The Council of the Arab Kings and Heads of the Arab League member-States opened its second session on January 14, 1964, at 10-30 a.m. The meeting was presided over by President Abdul Salam Arif of Iraq.

"The meeting started by reviewing the messages received by the Council, foremost among which were the messages of King Idris el Senussi of Libya, the Imam of Oman and that of the Vice-President and Prime Minister of the People's Republic of China. The Chairman of the Council sent messages in reply expressing gratitude and appreciation.

"The Council heard the proposals made by the some of the Arab Heads dealing with the Palestine cause in general and the question of the diversion of the River Jordan in particular.

"The Council also heard the statement of the representative of the Arab Technical Authority for the River Jordan Waters.

"The meeting ended at 1-40 p.m."

The Statement:

At the close of the first session of the "Summit" Conference on January 16, the Kings and Heads of State issued a statement in which they emphasized that the Arabs, adopting a just and defensive stand, would regulate their political and economic relations with other countries according to the stands of these countries against "Zionist designs" in the Arab world.

The following is the statement:

"The Council of Kings and Heads of State of the Arab League in its first session held at the Arab League premises in Cairo from January 13 to 16, 1964, upon the suggestion of President Gamal Abdul Nasser, President of the United Arab Republic:

"Having studied the threats, and the continuous acts of aggression practised by Israel, since it evicted the Arab Palestine people from their home and since it established an occupying imperialist force on their territory, practising racial discrimination against the Arab minority adopting the policy of aggression and accomplished facts as its base, and insisting on ignoring the resolutions of United Nations which assure the natural right of these people to return to their home, belittling the repeated condemnations recorded to its account by the organs of the international Organization;

"Having examined the dangerous new aggression about to be mounted by Israel against Arab waters, by diverting the course of the River Jordan, and the grievous damage done to the rights of Arabs benefiting from these waters with the object of realizing Zionist expansionist policies by bringing in more aggressive forces, and setting up further centres of aggression against the security of progress of Arab countries and world peace;

"And in pursuance of the legitimate right of self-defence;

"Fully persuaded of the sacred right of the Palestinian Arab people to self-determination and emancipation from the Zionist colonialization of their nation, and that Arab solidarity is the means to off-set avaricious imperialist designs and to realize equitable, joint, Arab interests, and to raise the standard of living of the majority, and implement construction and rehabilitation programmes;

"Has adopted the practical resolutions essential to ward off the imminent Zionist menace whether in the defensive or technical domains, or in the field of organizing the people of Palestine and enabling them to play their role in liberating their fatherland and attaining self-determination.

"The Council meetings also resulted in the Kings and Heads of State unanimously agreeing to settle all differences, to clear the Arab atmosphere of all blemishes, to suspend all campaigns by information media, to consolidate relations between the Arab sister-States, to ensure collective co-operative reconstruction and to ward off the aggressive expansionist designs menacing all Arabs alike.

"The Council also considered that the convening of more of these meetings at the highest levels is a matter necessitated by supreme Arab interests.

"The Council decided that the Kings and Heads of State meet at least once a year, and that the next meeting be held in Alexandria in the month of August, 1964.

"The Arab Kings and Heads of State declare that the Arab nation calls upon those nations and peoples of the world which cherish the rights of individuals in their homelands, and the rights of peoples to utilize their resources, and to self-determination, to extend to it the staunchest support in repelling the new Israeli agreement.

"They affirm that, adopting this just and defensive stand, they will regulate their political and economic relations with other countries according to the stands of these countries towards the Arabs' legitimate struggle against Zionist designs in the Arab world.

"The Arab Kings and Heads of State also hope that these Afro-Asian countries which placed their faith in the Bandung principles and committed themselves to the Addis Ababa Charter, which sacrificed a great deal in fighting imperialism, which fought racial discrimination and which have been and are still being subjected to the Zionist imperialist dangers and designs—particularly in Africa—all these countries will extend their true support and assistance to the Arabs in their just struggle.

"They also look forward to the support of all free nations which believe in peace established on justice.

"The Arab Kings and Heads of State further affirm their conviction in the justice of the Arab struggle and in the need of supporting this struggle against imperialism in the occupied Yemeni South and in Oman, as well as their belief in the justice of the national struggle in Angola, South Africa and in every part in the world, for the causes of liberty and justice are integral and indivisible.

"They confirm their faith in solving world problems through peaceful means in accordance with the United Nations Charter and their belief in the principle of peaceful co-existence among nations and in the policy of non-alignment.

"Inspired by this conviction, the Arab countries welcomed the partial nuclear test ban Treaty of Moscow and hastened to sign it. They support the rapid efforts made towards achieving total and complete disarmament in ways that can safeguard world peace.

"Inspired by their steadfastness to the principles of peace based on equity and justice, and their determination to participate in the economic development of the world, and in the elimination of economic and social under-development, the Arab countries carried out a major role in the Conference of Economic Development held in Cairo in the Spring of 1963 in addition to bringing the same spirit and determination to the World Conference of Development and Trade which will be held this year.

"The Kings and Heads of State welcome the African Unity Charter, for they see in it a new hope for peace, freedom and equality in Africa and the world;

"Moreover, they affirm their determination to consolidate Afro-Asian co-operation, which began particularly from the Bandung Conference in 1955.

"In this, the Arab Kings and Heads of State express their steadfastness to duty towards their Arab nation, and towards the dignity of the human family and in the service of peace and prosperity in the world."

Plan For Joint Arab Command:

According to informed sources in Cairo, the Conference agreed in principle to set up a joint military command for defensive purposes to prevent any Israeli intervention if the Arabs tried to divert the waters of rivers rising in Lebanon and Syria.

It was generally accepted that any single Arab country was not in a position to thwart an Israeli intervention and therefore the formation of a permanent joint military command to deal with such a situation was necessary.

There was general satisfaction that several feuding Heads of State showed a spirit of compromise in settling their long-standing internal differences.

UAR And Jordan Resume Ties:

The UAR and Jordan have announced resumption of diplomatic relations.

The decision to re-establish diplomatic relations was made "as a result of the cordial contacts" between King Hussein of Jordan and President Nasser of UAR, at the "Summit" Conference.

President Sallal of Yemen made a plea before the Conference for recognition of his republican regime by those Arab States which have not recognized it so far.

Meanwhile, high-level contacts were in progress to bring about a meeting between King Saud of Saudi Arabia and President Sallal which might lead to a major break-through in the Yemeni impasse.

Jordan was understood to have agreed to withdraw all its officers and men numbering about 30 who are at present training the Imam's troops against the republican regime.

The Conference also discussed the question of raising funds to strengthen the Jordanian Army with arms and equipment.

Observers noted that King Hussein's suggestion to refer certain issues to special committees was overruled as it was felt that such committees achieved little.

Armament Budget:

It was learnt in Cairo on January 16 that the Arab "Summit" had set aside £15 million as armament budget for one year to boost military preparedness of Jordan, Syria and Lebanon.

Kuwait will contribute £5 million, Saudi Arabia and UAR £3 million each, and Iraq £1.5 million. The remainder will be met by all other Arab States.

Nothing has been provided for UAR as it was felt that it was already in a state of armament and military trim.

General Ali Amer has been charged by the "Summit" to regulate and co-ordinate Arab armies, build up adequate military strength and armaments and be militarily prepared for any emergency. He has also been appointed overall Commander of the Unified Arab Command.

The Command will also formulate plans whereby Arab countries surrounding Israel will be enabled to complete their military preparedness.

Israel To Go Ahead With Jordan River Plan:

The Israeli Cabinet unanimously approved on January 19 an official statement, according to which Israel is determined to carry out its plans for using the waters of the Jordan River and will not be deterred by "Arab threats".

A reply to the "threats and mis-statements" about Israel's National Water Plan uttered at the Cairo "Summit" Conference was given by the Israeli Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, in the Knesset on January 20. He re-affirmed Israel's intention to proceed with her project and protect her vital rights.

The following is a summary of Mr. Eshkol's statement:

"We find ourselves confronted with a doctrine of international relations to which there is no parallel in our generation. It is contrary to all law and morality. It makes a mockery of the repeated declarations by the Egyptian President and his colleagues of their devotion to peace and world disarmament. It runs contrary to the mainstream of international thought in our days—which has as its central objective the relaxation of tensions and the strengthening of peace.

"While it is not yet clear what the practical results of the Cairo Conference will be, it has already brought out into the clear light of day aggressive and destructive aims that should shock the conscience of every lover of peace. Thirteen Heads of State were moved to assemble and deliberate together. How deplorable it is that the purpose of their meeting was not the social and economic advancement of their tens of millions of people. How horrifying that the only aim that could bring them together under one roof was their lust for aggression against a neighbouring State.

"The Cairo Conference has clearly revealed a general posture of hostility to Israel; but the main subject with which it dealt was our country's National Water Scheme. Here the Conference arrived at a dual conclusion; it painted a distorted picture of our legal and constructive enterprise; and it proclaimed a plan of sabotage, which is based entirely on negation and envy, violation of law and deliberate aggression.

"Eleven years ago the Arab States and Israel agreed to the mediation of the President of the United States, who sent the late Ambassador Eric Johnston to this part of the world as his special envoy to work out an agreed regional plan for the utilization of the waters of the Jordan, the Yarmuk and their tributaries. At the opening of the negotiations, the Arab countries on the one hand and Israel on the other submitted separate plans for the allocation of the Jordan and the Yarmuk waters.

"For almost three years Ambassador Johnston conducted parallel and co-ordinated negotiations with the Arab Governments and with Israel.

"After prolonged and exhaustive discussions, in which Arab, Israeli and international engineers took part, Mr. Johnston produced a unified regional plan which was based upon accepted rules and principles of international law and procedure. This plan assured Syria and Lebanon of all the quantities of water demanded by them in the Arab plan without any cuts whatsoever. The unified plan allocated to the Kingdom of Jordan all the waters required by it for the irrigation of its irrigable areas.

"This allocation was based on a detailed objective survey. In other words, the needs of Jordan, Syria and Lebanon were fully satisfied by the unified plan. And indeed, as Ambassador Johnston testified in an article published in the New York Times on August 10, 1958, the Arab countries and Israel agreed to the unified plan from every point of view connected with its technical and other merits. In October, 1958, however, the Arab League decided against ratification of the plan, not for any reasons pertaining to the plan, but on the deliberate principle of opposing any co-operation—even indirect—the Israel.

"This, then, is the situation. The Arab countries are utilizing the Jordan-Yarmuk system to meet all their needs, while they seek to prevent Israel drawing her share from this net-work. They believe, apparently, that what is permissible to them should be forbidden to Israel. Their aim is to injure Israel—even at the cost of injury to themselves. They wish to convince the world that, in the name of hostility to Israel, they are entitled to prevent the flow of the Jordan headwaters in their natural channels in Israel's territory. I note with satisfaction that the world in general has not been convinced by this theory of hostility and hatred. It is becoming clearer and clearer to the world that the arguments of the Arab countries have nothing to do with water, but are meant to deny Israel's right to exist.

"In closing, I wish to clarify the position of the Government of Israel.

"Israel will draw water from Lake Kinneret within the limits of the quantities laid down in the unified plan.

"Israel will oppose unilateral and illegal measures by the Arab States and will act to protect her vital rights.

"We believe that world public opinion will not be misled by malicious misstatements and will reject the campaign of incitements and threats against a legitimate and constructive development project. This area needs the benefits that will flow from the waters, and not incitement to bloodshed; it needs economic development, not barren strife; cooperation, not envious hostility; the utilization—not the waste—of its water resources; the advancement of peace and not the fomenting of war.

"The more firmly world public opinion rejects hostility and aggression, and encourages useful and constructive development, the more it will help the Arab Governments to abandon a policy of reckless adventurism, and will help our area to advance along the road of progress, constructive endeavour and peace."

Background:

The following is a background to the Jordan river waters issue:

Three tributaries, the rivers Hisbani (rising in Lebanon), Banias (main sources in Syria) and Dan (main sources in Syria, some in Israel), unite inside Israel to form the Jordan, which flows south through the Hula Valley (Lake Hula was drained in 1958) and on through Lake Tiberias (the Sea of Galilee). For five miles south of Tiberias it flows through Israel territory or through the demilitarized zones on the border between Israel and Syria. It is then joined from the east by its largest tributary, the Yarmuk (which is almost all in Arab territory dividing Syria and Jordan).

For the next 20 miles the west bank of the river Jordan is in Israel and the east bank in Jordan. For the last 40 miles, until it empties into the Dead Sea, the River Jordan passes through Jordanian territory.

Jordan and Israel are, therefore, the principal riparian States, but Lebanon and Syria have claims to a share in the control and use of the water, which is essential for economic development in an area based on agriculture and dependent on irrigation.

The total flow of the Jordan River watershed is 1,800 million cubic metres, of which 77 per cent originates in Arab territory, and 23 per cent in Israel. At present, only a seventh of the waters is used; the rest evaporates or flows into the Dead Sea.

1952-53: The United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) prepared a plan for use of the Jordan waters on which Mr. Eric Johnston negotiated as President Eisenhower's special representative.

1953-54: After discussions on the technical level a broad measure of agreement on a much revised "Johnston plan", giving the Arab States about three-fifths of the annual flow of water, and Israel the rest. The United States Government offered to pay two-thirds of the cost, but the Arab States refused, as agreement implied recognition of Israel.

Meanwhile, Israel had begun projects in Israel territory—one of them to carry water to the Negev from the River Jordan, with offtake just south of Lake Hula, in a demilitarized zone. Syria complained to the Security Council that this altered the status quo in a demilitarized zone, and therefore, violated Article 5 of the Armistice Agreement between Israel and the Arab States. After a Security Council resolution of 1953 calling upon Israel to stop, the work was suspended.

The present Israel plan is to pump water from Lake Tiberias at a point outside any demilitarized zone and carry it through Israel to the Negev by canal, tunnel, and pipe.

Arab objectives are variously stated, but they appear to be:

(i) The Israel scheme violates Article 5 of the Armistice Agreement, and defies the Security Council resolution of 1953. But Article 5 and the resolution concern the demilitarized zones; the present scheme pumps water at a point well away from any demilitarized zone. Work done in 1953 in a demilitarized zone has not been resumed.

(ii) Irrigation of the Negev will enable millions of immigrants to settle in Israel —a threat to the Arab world. There is, no doubt, a genuine fear of the results of population pressure in Israel, but the scheme would make little difference in this respect. It would enable the present Israelis (2,250,000) to absorb better the large number of additional immigrants—possible one million—which, given adequate investment, could easily be maintained within the present boundaries of Israel.

(iii) The scheme violates legal rights. But each of the riparian States has a prima facie right to an equitable proportion of the water, though upstream States should not interfere with reasonable use of the water by downstream States. There are no universally accepted principles of international law to govern division of river water. Division can, therefore, only be made saistfactorily by international agreement. Failing agreement (which the Arabs have refused), Israel will be acting unilaterally and, it may be said, illegally and provocatively. But she appears to have allowed, so far as quantity is concerned, for reasonable use by other States, as the present plans seem broadly consistent with the division proposed in the Johnston plan.

(iv) The Jordan south of the diversion will become too saline for irrigation. This is difficult to assess. Some increase in salinity will occur, but so it will from the Jordanian Yarmuk scheme.

The Johnston plan offered a rational solution, but no agreement between the Arab States and Israel is politically practicable. Israel should show that she is keeping within reasonable limits arrived at by negotiations (not necessarily with formal governmental approval). If the Arab States refuse agreement—and therefore any control over the amount of water withdrawn and then undertake action to interfere with Israel's reasonable use of water —Israel's position over her present plan is likely to be strengthened.

The Israel plan is now expected to come into operation, with a test pumping by one pump only, early in 1964. This cannot possibly pump more than the Johnston plan permitted. Under the full plan, three pumps are expected to be used. The Israelis claim that they, too, will not exceed the Johnston plan limits. But this will certainly be disputed.

SPORT

A. East Zone Davis Cup: India took a winning 3-0 lead over Ceylon in their East Zone Davis Cup match in Hyderabad on March 1 when Premjit Lall and S. P. Misra beat Fernando and B. Pinto 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, 6-3. India will now meet Pakistan at Lahore.

The Ceylonese visitors gave a better performance on the second day. Pinto in particular was deadly accurate with his fast services, but his poor backhand was exploited to the full by Lall. In his first appearance for the Indian side, the young local player, Shiv Prakash Misra, gave a good account of himself. Though he looked nervous and erred in the beginning, he recovered and proved himself a valuable partner to Lall.

The Ceylonese shared the service games with India till 3-3, in the first set. India broke through in the seventh game on Fernando's service, and after dropping one more game won the set.

The Ceylonese jumped into a 3-0 lead in the second set mainly due to the faults of the Indian pair. Lall and Misra ended many a rally by driving into the net. This enabled the visitors to win the set at 6-3.

Ceylon's chances looked bright as they once again led by three games in the third set. But thereafter the Indian pair found their touch and won four games in a row to take a four-three lead. Conceding one more game they claimed the set. In the fourth set, India took a 5-2 lead and as the fatigued visitors ran around the court, they won the set and match at 6-3.

AFGHANISTAN

A. Trade Pact With Pakistan Extended: Pakistan and Afghanistan signed a joint communique on March 9 embodying the agreement reached for a transit trade pact between the two countries.

The following is the text of the Press Note issued on March 9:

"The negotiations for the new Transit Trade Agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan which commenced in Rawalpindi on February 26, 1964, ended in Karachi today. A joint communique embodying the agreement reached between the two delegations was signed at Karachi at 10 p.m. today and will be released simultaneously in the two countries on the evening of March 11, 1964."

Mr. Wahiduzzaman, Pakistan's Commerce Minister, signed the joint communique on behalf of Pakistan, while Mr. Mohammad Sarwar Omer, the Afghan Commerce Minister, signed for Afghanistan at a ceremony at the State Guest House.

It was announced in Rawalpindi on March 11 that in the absence of agreement on certain new facilities asked for by the Afghan delegation for transit trade, Kabul and Rawalpindi had decided to extend the life of the current arrangements for another year.

The joint communique issued on conclusion of the talks between the Commerce Ministers of Pakistan and Afghanistan said "both delegations felt the proposals and suggestions for inclusion in a fresh agreement needed further careful study."

The present Transit Trade Agreement expires on April 20.

The week-long talks between Pakistan's Commerce Minister, Mr. Wahiduzzaman and his Afghan counterpart, Mr. Mohammad Sarwar Omer failed to bring about an agreement on additional facilities demanded by Afghanistan. Kabul suggested only Afghan trucks should handle the goods from Torkham to Kabul and also demanded certain exclusive facilities at Karachi Port for Afghan nationals for loading and unloading the export goods.

According to informed sources, Pakistan is willing to grant additional facilities, but on the basis of reciprocity benefiting both nations.

BURMA

A. Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit: The Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, paid a visit to Burma from February 14 to 18.

[The visit came after his tour of Africa lasting 55 days. Later, he visited Pakistan and Ceylon.]

A joint communique issued at the end of the visit said China and Burma were glad to note that the situation along the Sino-Indian border had eased.

The communique expressed the hope that both China and India would find it possible to enter into direct negotiations on the basis of the Colombo proposals "so as to remove progressively differences between them and finally achieve a friendly settlement of the Sino-Indian boundary question."

It said China and Burma hailed the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and France as "another important event favourable to the achievement of peaceful co-existence among nations with different social systems and to the cause of peace."

It pledged support to the peoples of Asia and Africa in their struggle for independence.

It noted with satisfaction the strengthening of relations between China and Burma.

It re-iterated Burma's belief that the admission of China to UN would not only enhance the effectiveness of the world Organization but would also facilitate settlement of international problems by peaceful means.

Mr. Chou pledged to respect and support Burma's policy of peace and neutrality.

The communique also said the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, General Ne Win, had accepted an invitation to visit China at a date convenient to both sides.

Indian Reaction:

Commenting on the reference to the Sino-Indian border dispute in the communique, a spokesman of the Indian External Affairs Ministry said in New Delhi on February 19: "We are prepared to enter into talks with China only when China accepted the Colombo proposals in toto and without any reservations".

He said that Burma had always been consistently supporting the Colombo proposals.

Asked whether the communique, as had been reported in the Press, could be interpreted to mean that India and China should meet and discuss the differences between them in regard to the Colombo proposals, the spokesman re-iterated that talks could take place only after China accepted the Colombo proposals in full.

As for the comment in the communique that the situation in regard to cease-fire had eased, the spokesman said: "Consolidation of the cease-fire line can be discussed and finalised only after the negotiations start on the basis of China accepting in toto the Colombo proposals."

He pointed out that it was China who attacked first and unilaterally declared cease-fire and withdrew. "They could attack us at any time."

B. Peace Talks With Karens: Rangoon Radio reported on March 12 that peace talks between the Revolutionary Government and the insurgent Karen Revolutionary Council had ended successfully.

The agreement, the first to be reached with a rebel group since the Government's peace offer of June, 1963, will free Burmese armed forces for the fight against other insurgents. Negotiations with Communist, Kachin, Arakanese, Shan and Left-wing Karen rebel groups broke down in November, 1963.

About 1,500,000 Karens live in Burma and their rebellion at first reduced the Government's authority to an area around Rangoon. Later, the Burmese Army forced them into the hills of what is now the Kawthulay (Karen) State in the south-east.

The Karen negotiators were led by the President of the State, Saw Hunter Tha Hmwe, who had not emerged from the jungle for 14 years.

CEYLON

A. Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit: The Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, paid an official visit to Ceylon from February 26 to 29.

Both he and the Ceylon Premier, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, at receptions arranged in his honour, stressed that the visit would strengthen the relations between Ceylon and China.

A joint communique issued on February 29 at the conclusion of three rounds of talks between them was viewed with much significance by observers for its reference to China's dispute with India.

The communique said that the two Prime Ministers noticed with satisfaction that the situation on the Sino-Indian border had eased.

It added that Mr. Chou En-lai expressed his thanks to Ceylon and other Colombo Conference nations for the efforts they had taken to mediate and expressed his readiness to seek direct negotiations with India on the basis of Colombo proposals for a peaceful settlement of the border dispute.

Mrs. Bandaranaike indicated that together with other Colombo Conference nations Ceylon would continue her efforts to promote reconciliation between India and China.

The communique said: "The talks were held in that atmosphere of cordiality and friendship which characterises the relationship between the two countries.

"The two Prime Ministers expressed their firm opposition to colonialism in all its forms and manifestations and hoped that its last vestiges would soon be eradicated.

"The two leaders agreed that the national Governments of countries that have newly won national independence should be helped in their endeavours to attain full economic independence as rapidly as possible.

"The Prime Ministers expressed their determination to strive, in co-operation with other nations, for general disarmament and for complete prohibition and destruction of nuclear weapons.

"The Prime Minister of Ceylon declared her Government's continued support for the restoration to the People's Republic of China of her legitimate rights in United Nations. She also re-affirmed Ceylon's view that Taiwan is an integral part of China.

"The two leaders supported the establishment of nuclear-free zones in various parts of the world. In this connexion, the Chinese Prime Minister commended the initiative taken by the Ceylon Prime Minister to refuse entry into Ceylon's territorial waters, ports and airfields of ships and aircraft carrying nuclear weapons or equipped for nuclear warfare.

"The Ceylon Prime Minister explained to the Chinese Prime Minister Ceylon's active interest in the holding of a second non-aligned conference. Both Prime Ministers hoped that a second non-aligned conference would contribute to the cause of opposing imperialism and colonialism, of supporting the national independence movement and safeguarding world peace.

"The Chinese Prime Minister was of the opinion that the time was right for convening a second Afro-Asian conference and that active preparations should be made for that purpose. The Ceylon Prime Minister agreed that such a conference would serve a useful purpose and indicated that Ceylon would participate in such a conference.

"The Prime Ministers agreed that the second non-aligned conference and the second Afro-Asian conference were not mutually exclusive."

Details Of Aid Programme:

The Finance Ministry issued on March 2 a communique giving details of the aid offered by Mr. Chou En-lai to Mrs. Bandaranaike during their talks.

China has offered Rs. 20 million worth of textiles to be imported in the course of this year to Ceylon, which is now experiencing shortage of textiles.

China will also provide an international conference hall to be built in memory of the late Prime Minister, Mr. S.W.R.D. Bandaranaike.

A group of Chinese experts will come to Ceylon to help Ceylonese architects and engineers to design and construct this building.

Under the existing Economic Aid Agreement, China had offered aid to the value of Rs. 125 million. In the course of his talks with Mrs. Bandaranaike, Mr. Chou En-lai expressed the readiness of China to increase this amount—"provided it was not very large"—if this amount was exceeded.

The communique did not specify the increase agreed to, but Press reports said that China had agreed to increase it by about Rs. 80 million.

China has also agreed to lower the rate of interest of loans granted under the Loan Agreement from the existing 2½ per cent. "If Ceylon has any difficulty in repayment of the loan within the stipulated period China would be glad to consider extending the period of repayment."

Under the Loan Agreement, China will also provide a further supply of rice. At present China has agreed to supply 2,00,000 tons of rice to Ceylon.

CHINA

A. Sino-Soviet Border Demarcation: The leader of a Soviet Parliamentary delegation that visited India in March, Mr. I. V. Spiridonov, told correspondents in New Delhi on March 7 that a Sino-Soviet joint commission had been formed to demarcate the border between Russia and China in "certain sectors."

Mr. Spiridonov, who was replying to a question on reported violations of the Soviet border by the Chinese, declined to specify the sectors to be demarcated by the joint commission.

He said that in the past there had been several violations and many letters were written about it to the Chinese authorities. Recently, the two countries decided to establish a joint commission for "a careful delimitation of the border in certain sectors".

Asked to explain the basis on which the commission would demarcate the border, he said it was possible that some of the border posts had got lost or some other similar developments had taken place.

Replying to a question on the movement of people from Sinkiang in China into Kirghizia and Kazhakistan in Russsia, Mr. Bolot Mambetov, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Kirghizia, said that "large numbers of people" had crossed the border. Several requests were made to the Chinese to prevent this "mass flow" of people. Those who had thus migrated into Russian territory were given new jobs and "economically placed exactly as the Soviet people." The migration had now stopped.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Expansion Of Armed Forces; British Loans; Trade With East European Countries; Central Revenue Receipts; Progress Of Atomic Power Stations.

A. Expansion Of Armed Forces —Defence Ministry's Annual Report: The Defence Ministry's annual report for 1963-64 released in New Delhi on March 13 gave details of the steps being taken to expand the Army, the Air Force and the Navy and develop defence production.

India is going ahead with the expansion and modernization of her armed forces to meet the country's long-term defence requirements.

She is also striving hard to establish an adequate defence production base to make the armed forces self-sufficient in basic weapons and equipment.

For the first time the Defence Ministry made available to Members of Parliament adequate information on the country's defence effort, hitherto withheld on grounds of security.

The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, had asked the three Services this time to release as much general information as possible about their expansion plans so that Parliament could debate the subject with reasonable knowledge of what was being done to prepare the country against the threat of another Chinese attack.

The report disclosed that defence planning was being done on the assumption that India was faced with a long-term threat from the north. While she was anxious to settle her differences with her neighbours peacefully, she must at the same time "take measures for the defence of our territorial integrity against any aggressive threat."

The following are the main points of the report:

Expansion of the Army has called for quick adjustment in the policy of recruitment and in methods of selection. New training facilities have been created and training programmes modified, bearing in mind the short-comings revealed by the inquiry into the N-EFA reverses in 1962.

To achieve qualitative improvement in weapons and other equipment, action had to be taken during the year to replace weapons of World War II vintage with weapons of improved fire-power and to develop and produce light and semi-automatic weapons. Simultaneously with the programme of modernization, steps have also been taken to standardize weapons and other equipment and to work out a rational provisioning policy.

Certain organizational changes have been carried out at all levels to make the Army more mobile and effective.

A new Directorate of Combat Development has been set up "to formulate tactical concepts in the light of our own and possible enemy weapons development," to indicate how organizations and material should be developed to meet the changing tactical concepts and to arrange trials and experiments to test the approved combat development concepts.

The Directorate of Military Intelligence has been strengthened and a new Recruitment Directorate set up. A new organization has been formed for the procurement of equipment and stores from abroad.

In addition to the three Army commands which formerly existed, a fourth—the Central Command with headquarters at Lucknow—has been set up by splitting the former Eastern Command, moving the latter to Barrackpore.

Soon after the commencement of the Emergency, six new divisions were sanctioned—four of them are being raised as mountain divisions, the other two as standard infantry divisions. One existing infantry division is also being raised as a mountain division, bringing the total number of mountain divisions to five. The mountain divisions are being made as self-contained as possible and emphasis is being laid on increased fire-power and mobility.

Two scout battalions are being raised —one for the Punjab and Himachal border with Tibet and the other for the UP-Tibet border. The battalions will be drawn from local people of these border areas.

To meet the requirements of the additional divisions and make up past deficiencies, recruitment was made on an intensive basis. By the end of 1963 the targets had generally been achieved and the recruitment drive was slowed down.

Nearly 8,600 officers had been commissioned up to February, 1964. Another 3,200 officers are likely to be commissioned by the middle of this year.

Having regard to the special needs of the mountainous terrain and extreme cold conditions etc., several steps have been taken to modernize weapons and equipment. The infantry will be equipped with self-loading rifles. Small arms will be standardized on a single calibre (7.72 mm.) to facilitate ammunition supply problems. The Army will be provided with lighter and long-range mortars. There will be a mountain gun with better range. It will be more easily transportable. The armour will be a balanced force of medium and light tanks. Manufacture of medium tanks is in progress.

Production of the Ishapore semi-automatic rifles has commenced on a large scale and the production rate is expected to be doubled during the next 12 months. Production of 7.62 mm. bolt-action rifles and light machine-guns has also begun. Production of 7.62 mm. ammunition has started and a plant for the production of this ammunition is being obtained from USA under the military assistance programme. Other types of ammunition are also being produced in the country.

To replace the fleet of old vehicles large orders have been placed with automobile manufacturers in the country, in addition to the Shaktiman and Nissan vehicles manufactured in ordnance factories. A long-term provisioning programme for vehicles has been drawn up and its implementation has commenced. This will ensure that the defence forces will be equipped with reliable and operationally dependable vehicles at any point of time. According to this, vehicles will be discarded after specified service and replaced by new vehicles.

Modernization of the Air Force is being phased over a number of years and assistance has been sought from a number of friendly countries.

Sets of powerful static radar installations and connected communications equipment, which the US Government has agreed to provide, will be ready for use in a few months. Facilities have been given for training of Air Force personnel in USA and the UK. The UK Government has provided electronic and communications equipment, while the Canadian Government has supplied a number of transport aircraft. The USSR Government has supplied a number of aircraft, helicopters and other air defence equipment and has also provided training facilities for IAF personnel.

To ensure better control and supervision of air defences, a third Operational Air Command has been set up with headquarters at Shillong.

A series of steps have been taken to improve the airlift capacity of the IAF by acquiring suitable types of aircraft.

Recruitment and training facilities have been expanded. A number of Air Force personnel have been sent abroad for various specialized courses under different aid programmes. Without prejudice to the requirements of the IAF, Air Force training institutions in India have continued to impart training to a limited number of Air Force personnel from friendly Asian and African countries.

The IAF fleet of transport aircraft has been substantially increased. A number of heavy transport AN-12 planes have been purchased from USSR on deferred payment terms. From Canada 16 Caribou medium transport planes have been contracted for purchase under a loan and some of these have already arrived. Canada has also given eight Dakota aircraft. The USA has supplied under its military assistance programme a certain number of Packet aircraft in addition to two Caribous supplied earlier.

A number of helicopters have been acquired from France and USSR. French Alouette helicopters are to be manufactured in the country.

The IAF fighter fleet is proposed to be augmented by addition of Gnats, HF-24 and MIG aircraft. The first is already in service, while HF-24 is proposed to be manufactured at HAL. The MIG-21 aircraft will be manufactured in new factories in the process of being set up.

A number of Harvard trainer aircraft have been secured from Canada and a few more are being obtained from Canada. A jet transport aircraft is under development at HAL. An order has been placed with HAL to manufacture a number of "Krishak" aircraft to be used in the air observation post role.

Increase In Allocations:

It was officially stated on March 18 that the Government would spend on the Army a sum of Rs. 583 crores during the coming financial year.

This is approximately Rs. 33 crores more than the estimated expenditure on the Army during the current financial year.

A large part of the amount will be spent on various schemes for strengthening and modernizing it.

The Indian Air Force will claim nearly Rs. 125 crores next year, which is the same as provided for in the current financial year. A sizable portion of the Air Force spending will be devoted to modernizing the air fleet and equipment.

The Navy's allocation exceeds Rs. 23 crores, part of which will be devoted to replacing old ships.

Capital works for the Army, Navy and the Air Force and steps to expand the production base for defence purposes are expected to cost the Central Government a further sum of Rs. 141 crores in the coming year.

This is about Rs. 26 crores more than the actual expenditure during the current financial year.

B. Resumption Of Kashmir Debate—Pakistan's Letter To Security Council: Pakistan asked the UN Security Council on March 4 to meet "as soon as possible" to resume the debate on Kashmir.

A letter from the Permanent Representative of Pakistan, Mr. Amjad Ali, to the Council President noted that the 11-member body had adjourned the debate on February 17 for a few days to enable the Foreign Minister, Mr. Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, to consult his Government.

A spokesman for the Pakistan delegation said Pakistan would like to have the Council meeting by March 10. He said Mr. Bhutto would return to New York for it.

The Council took no action before adjourning on February 17. Pakistan requested a series of Council sessions on the ground that the Government in New Delhi had taken further steps to integrate the disputed Kashmir territory into India.

The letter from Mr. Amjad Ali to Mr. Liu Chieh, the Council President said: "It will be recalled that at the 1,093rd meeting of the Security Council held on February 17, 1964, the Foreign Minister of Pakistan requested the Council to grant a few days of postponement of the discussion on Kashmir to enable him to have consultations with the Government.

"My Government is grateful that an adjournment for limited time was granted by the Council.

"Under instructions from my Government, I have the honour to request you to convene a meeting of the Security Council as soon as possible to resume its consideration of the Indo-Pakistan question."

Mr. Dean Rusk's View:

The US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, told a news conference in Washington on March 6 that he "hoped India and Pakistan would find a way to improve their relations by settling their differences on the Kashmir problem."

The settlement of the Kashmir problem in accordance with the wishes of its population should be the first pre-occupation of India and Pakistan.

The recent visit of the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai to Pakistan, he said, had not affected the US attitude on the Kashmir problem.

The USA had a special interest in the settlement of this problem because the Asian sub-continent could be invulnerable and prosperous only if India and Pakistan were in close co-operation. If they were not, he said, US aid to them could be of no avail.

Indian Stand:

The Indian Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, told the Executive Committee of the Congress Parliamentary Party in New Delhi on March 4 that the Government stood firm on its policy regarding Kashmir.

He made this affirmation when several members of the Executive stressed the need for "finally and speedily" resolving the remaining outstanding matters regarding fuller integration of Kashmir with India and said that the matter "should not be allowed to remain in abeyance any more."

They voiced a general feeling that this was necessary to tell the world that "no third person needs be interested in the Kashmir question."

Members felt that the Kashmir State Legislature would have to take the initiative for complete integration of Kashmir with India before the Central Government could step in. They referred to the movements inside Kashmir and welcomed the general desire to effect changes in the Constitution to bring Kashmir at par with other States of the Indian Union.

Mr. Phillips Talbot's Visit To New Delhi:

It was made clear to the US Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Phillips Talbot, during his three-day visit to New Delhi that it would be very wrong if USA were to help Pakistan, directly or indirectly, to have another meeting of the Security Council on Kashmir.

The Indian Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, told Parliament's Informal Consultative Committee on External Affairs on March 10 that Mr. Talbot did bring up Kashmir in the course of his talks in New Delhi and wanted to know how the "stalemate" could be broken.

He was told that first things must come first. Pakistan must prevent migration of minorities from East Pakistan. No worthwhile discussion on Kashmir could take place in the existing conditions of tension and the present temper of the people.

In response to searching inquiries by several MPs, Mr. Shastri said Mr. Talbot had not referred to any specific proposal on Kashmir and never mentioned its division, not even indirectly. The Government made its position very clear more than once and USA and other Powers knew how India felt.

When a member suggested that the reported plan for the division of Kashmir might have been put before some officials of the External Affairs Ministry, the Secretary-General, Mr. M. J. Desai, who was present, said no such plan was communicated to anybody at any stage. There was no question of any US plan on Kashmir.

Mr. Shastri said Mr. Talbot's visit was for general exchange of views. Asked why everybody should have met Mr. Talbot who, after all, was not high in the US hierarchy, Mr. Shastri was reported to have said: "He did not believe in protocol and was willing to meet any one."

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's Stand Explained To Security Council:

In New Delhi, New York and the capitals of the 11 countries represented on the UN Security Council, India was on March 6 engaged in explaining its stand on the Pakistani attempt to resume a debate on Kashmir in the Council.

In New York, the Indian position was outlined by the Permanent Representative at UN, and in the capitals of the member-countries by the heads of Indian missions.

But in New Delhi, the task fell on the Commonwealth Secretary, Mr. C. S. Jha, who held separate discussions with the Ambassadors of France and Morocco, the British High Commissioner, and the Minister-Counsellor of USA.

According to authoritative sources, India's position basically is that a resumed debate on Kashmir is neither permitted by the rules under which the February debate was adjourned sine die, nor warranted by circumstances.

Not only Pakistan and India but also all members of the Security Council have had a full say on Kashmir during the debate in February, and since then nothing whatever has happened to call for a fresh consideration.

The primary objective of diplomatic discussions in New Delhi and elsewhere, therefore, is to convince the members of the UN Council of the futility of a fresh debate.

Should the President and members of the Security Council desire, however, a fresh discussion, India does not want to stand in the way. But in that event India expects the Council to keep in mind that the debate's timing must suit the convenience of both India and Pakistan and not that of Pakistan only.

It was made clear in the exchange of views that Mr. M. C. Chagla, who led the Indian delegation to the Security Council in February, would not be able to leave New Delhi until the Parliament's Budget session was over.

British Labour Party's View:

Addressing a meeting of Indian journalists in London on March 2, the Deputy Leader of the British Labour Party, Mr. George Brown, dissociated his Party from the speech made in the Security Council by the British representative, Sir Patrick Dean in February, supporting Pakistan on the Kashmir issue.

He said the "Labour Party will never attempt to even adjudicate in the India-Pakistan dispute over Kashmir."

As a member of the Commonwealth the Labour Government would not want to take any step at United Nations on issues like Kashmir which might destroy the Commonwealth, he said, adding that it would instead give priority for developing the Commonwealth concept and making it a genuine, sane bridge between the East and West.

A future Labour Government, he said, would give highest priority to expanding inter-Commonwealth trade.

Security Council To Meet:

It was announced at United Nations on March 11 that the Security Council would resume the debate on Kashmir on March 17.

Mr. Liu Chieh (Kuomintang), Chairman of the Council for March, fixed the date for the meeting after consulting other members of the Council.

The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia were reported to have opposed the Pakistani move for a meeting. Britain and USA were among those who supported Pakistan's request.

C. Three British Loans: Agreements for three British loans totalling £12.5 million (Rs. 16.7 crores) were signed in New Delhi on March 17. This completed the British pledge of £30 million (Rs. 40 crores) for the current year of the Third Plan.

The British High Commissioner, Sir Paul Gore-Booth, signed for Britain and Mr. Govindan Nair, Additional Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs for India.

Under the first Agreement, a sum of £5 million has been made available for purchase from the UK of capital goods and components for projects and industries.

It would cover such projects as a coastal ship, a bucket dredger and two hoppers, the Nahorkatiya fertilizer plant, the Singareni collieries, the special alloy steel plant at Durgapur, the Indian Copper Corporation and Oil India.

The second loan of £5 million will provide balance of payment support in respect of a series of British imports.

The third Agreement is for a loan of £2.5 million for the purchase of equipment and components for the Bhopal Heavy Electricals.

D. Shipping Agreement With Poland: A new Agreement between the Polish Ocean Lines, the State Shipping Company of Poland and Indian shipping interests was signed in New Delhi on March 11.

The Polish delegation, headed by Mr. H. Barau, Managing Director of the Lines, held discussions on March 9 and 10 with the Indian lines, headed by Dr. Nagendra Singh, Additional Secretary and Director-General of Shipping, Ministry of Transport, Government of India.

In 1960, the Indo-Polish shipping service accounted for the carriage of 76,000 tons of cargoes and in 1963, the carriage increased to over 3,00,000 tons.

The Agreement signed on March 11 in New Delhi provides that both the countries would endeavour to maintain the integrity and the distinct identity of the Indo-Polish shipping service.

F. Trade Agreement With Rumania: According to an Agreement signed in New Delhi on March 12, trade between Rumania and India is expected to rise to Rs. 70 million this year from the previous year's figure of Rs. 48 million.

The Agreement provides that Rumania will import from India, during 1964, cotton textiles, jute manufactures, chemical products and pharmaceuticals, rolled steel products, tinned fish, various engineering goods, rubber products, salted fish, paints, pigments, varnishes, etc., apart from traditional goods like coffee, pepper, vegetable oils, shellac and iron-ore.

Rumania will continue to supply India oil prospecting and drilling equipment, capital goods, earth moving and constructing equipment and petroleum products.

The two Governments also agreed to extend the validity of the list of commodities enclosed with the long-term Trade and Payments Agreement, signed at Bucharest on November 30, 1962.

The Agreement was signed on behalf of Rumania by Mr. Gheorghe Leonte, General Director in the Ministry of Foreign Trade, and Mr. S. Ramachandran, Deputy Secretary in the Ministry of International Trade.

F. US Wheat Gift To Rajasthan: The US Ambassador, Mr. Chester Bowles, announced in Jodhpur on March 12 a US Government gift of 20,000 tons of wheat to the Indian Government to relieve the distress of people affected by drought in Rajasthan.

In a simple ceremony, Mr. Bowles handed over a symbolic bag of wheat to a representative of the Rajasthan Government.

The Centre, in consultation with the Rajasthan Government, has decided to distribute the wheat in part payment to 100,000 workers engaged in building roads and water supply projects in Jodhpur, Bikaner, Barmer and Jaisalmer districts.

The workers will receive 60 per cent of their wages in wheat. It was expected that heads of families will receive about two kg of wheat per day.

The US wheat is sufficient to cover distribution at this rate for 20 weeks. A total population of 500,000, including dependents of workers, is expected to benefit from this programme.

The four affected districts will be benefited eventually by the Rajasthan Canal, which is under construction. The US Government has indicated that it will extend a credit of $33 million (Rs. 16 crores) to meet a part of the foreign exchange costs of the Beas Dam, which will ensure perennial supply of water to the Canal.

The wheat, valued at approximately Rs. 1.5 crores, is a donation under Title II of PL 480, which provides for gifts to relieve the sufferings of populations affected by natural calamities.

G. Trade With East European Countries: The Minister for International Trade, Mr. Manubhai Shah, said in New Delhi on March 13 that India would be providing a technical credit of Rs. 16 crores to East European countries and the UAR during 1964-65, to ensure that their purchasing programmes in India were not affected for want of funds.

He told a meeting of the Informal Consultative Committee of Parliament that these countries were experiencing shortage of rupee funds not on account of their fault but because of some delay in India's payments for imports.

Trade with East European countries, he said, was on a bilateral basis against payment in non-convertible rupees. They maintained their central rupee accounts with the Reserve Bank. The amounts were utilized by them to purchase Indian commodities in a balanced way according to the Trade and Payments Agreements.

Payments for Indian imports were sometimes delayed because of the defered payment system or delayed deliveries. These countries were, therefore, short of funds for financing their purchases in the country. In order to replenish their rupee accounts and re-instate their purchasing capacity, short-term loans by way of technical credits were to be made available, so that their purchasing programmes were not inhibited.

India's total trade with East European countries in 1964 would be of the order of Rs. 325 crores. Since trade with them was on a balanced basis, India's exports would be valued at over Rs. 167 crores.

He added that for 1964-65, the following technical credits had been approved (in lakhs of rupees):

	Ceiling limit of technical credit under the current trade and payments agreements without interest	With interest
Poland	40	260
East Germany	50	100
Czechoslovakia	65	135
Yugoslavia	75	105
Rumania	35	50
Hungary, 1964	E50	150
Bulgaria	10	40
USSR	100	Unlimited

These technical credits were based on the fact that India was going to have a total trade of Rs. 325 crores, both ways, during 1964. A provision of Rs. 12.5 crores had, therefore, been incorporated in the Budget of 1964-65 for these countries.

Similarly, the Ministry of International Trade was committed to provide technical credit to the UAR. Total trade with that country, both ways, was about Rs. 23.5 crores. The Budget provision by way of technical credit for 1964-65 was fixed at Rs. 3.5 crores.

H. Increased Trade With France —Agreement Signed: An Indo-French joint communique providing for increased trade and economic co-operation between the two countries was signed in New Delhi on March 15.

It envisages "appreciably increased opportunities" for the entry of Indian goods into France and greater French technical assistance in India's development.

Though the immediate impact of the agreement may not be much, its long-term value can be considerable.

Explaining the significance of their talks, Mr. Jean Wahl, leader of the French delegation, told correspondents that hitherto India had been traditionally associated with the Anglo-Saxon group of countries in economic matters. It was but right in the new shape of things that France should take greater interest in India. He pointed out that in Africa—where France had a dominating influence over trade—"other people" were now taking interest.

Asked whether this was part of a global French strategy to expand its trade, he said that there was no "strategy" in it, but it was "certain" that France wanted closer relations with developing countries. The Latin American tour of President de Gaulle was an example of French interest in these countries.

The approach of the two countries towards world trade problems, in the light of the forthcoming UN Conference at Geneva, was also discussed. They found three important points of agreement.

First, they felt that prices of primary products and raw materials should be stabilized at a "sufficiently remunerative level".

Secondly, the "invisible" element in the balance of payments in developing countries should be improved.

Lastly, steps should be taken to expand the import into developed countries of manufactured products from the developing countries.

The communique was signed by Mr. Wahl on behalf of France and Mr. D. S. Joshi, Secretary of the Ministry of International Trade, on behalf of India. Mr. Manubhai Shah, Minister for International Trade, was present at the signing ceremony.

I. Central Revenue Receipts During 1962-63: The audit report on the Centre's revenue receipts in 1962-63 recorded that there were 909,000 cases outstanding with income-tax officers for assessment at the end of the year. Of these, over 64,000 were business cases involving incomes of over Rs. 25,000.

During the year, over 3,750 cases were detected in which tax payers had "deliberately concealed their incomes" totalling about Rs. 6 crores. Only in two cases were the parties concerned prosecuted and the nature of punishment in each case was either a fine of Rs. 250 or simple imprisonment for two months.

A test audit reviewed about six per cent of the total number of 1,331,000 income-tax assessees. This revealed under-assessment of tax to the extent of Rs. 2.29 crores in 5,195 cases and over-assessment of Rs. 3,93,000 in 258 cases. Of the under-assessed cases 296 alone accounted for Rs. 1.2 crores.

This report together with the Audit Report (Civil), 1964, which related to matters arising from the Appropriation Accounts for the year, was placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on March 11 by the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari.

The Audit Report (Civil) recorded a loss of Rs. 23,65,000 on account of State trading in grain in 1962-63; Rs. 5,00,000 in 1961-62 and Rs. 4,83,000 the next year on journals published by the Publications Division of the Information Ministry; and Rs. 35,25,000 by way of rent for quarters in Ramakrishnapuram Colony in Delhi because of the Central PWD's delay in handing over the houses to the Estate Office.

The report included an item relating to the Ministers' Residence Rules. One of these rules provides for recovery of rent if the cost of furniture and electrical appliances supplied to Ministers and Deputy Ministers exceeds the specified monetary limits. Under this rule Rs. 16,594 was to have been recovered from 13 Ministers and seven Deputy Ministers.

When the Government's attention was drawn to this position, the Law Ministry pointed out that no rent could be recovered from the persons concerned, who had not been given prior notice about such excess supply.

Income-tax Figures:

The number of people who paid income-tax in 1962-63 in all States and Union territories totalled 13,03,354 and those who were assessed for wealth tax were 31,779.

The corresponding figures for the previous year were 1,200,000 and 30,928 respectively.

The total amount of effective arrears of income-tax and wealth tax due on September 30, 1963 was over Rs. 181 crores.

Estate duty was levied in 17,644 cases in 1962-63 as against 15,495 in 1961-62.

According to a statement laid on the table of the Rajya Sabha on March 11, the number of income-tax and wealth tax assessees was the largest in Maharashtra with 2,85,857 and 10,415, respectively. West Bengal came next with 1,93,750 and 5,804, Gujerat 1,37,642 and 3,581 and Madras 1,03,524 and 2,853. Among the States, barring Jammu and Kashmir, Orissa had the lowest number of assessees, 9,975 for income-tax and 152 for wealth tax.

J. Measures To Tighten Credit Control: The Reserve Bank tightened credit control on March 11 by reducing the quota for borrowings by scheduled banks from the Bank from 150 per cent of the statutory reserves as at present to 100 per cent, and by introducing a penal rate of interest of 6.5 per cent per annum for special accommodation at the third tier.

The Bank took a series of measures in the context of the difficult supply situation of agricultural commodities and the need for caution in further credit extension by banks. The new measures replaced the two-tier system brought into operation at the beginning of the busy season by a three-tier system.

The Reserve Bank also raised the margin on advances by scheduled banks against the security of groundnuts from 45 per cent to 50 per cent and also re-imposed the ceiling on such advances in a bid to combat speculative withholding of stocks with the help of bank credit.

Scheduled banks have been asked to reduce clean advances other than to industrial borrowers.

The Reserve Bank has also asked scheduled banks to re-examine the rates of interest offered by them on deposits to mobilize such resources.

A Reserve Bank Press Note said that with effect from the close of business on March 11 the Bank's system of quotas and lending rates for both bills and Government securities would be as follows: first slab 4.5 per cent per annum, quota for borrowing, 50 per cent of the statutory reserves; second slab six per cent per annum, quota for borrowing, another 50 per cent of the statutory reserves.

Any borrowing beyond this limit (that is, more than 100 per cent of the Bank's statutory reserves) will be in the nature of special accommodation calling for a careful assessment of a bank's over-all position and will bear interest at a rate of 6½ per cent per annum.

The credit control measures followed the statement of the Finance Minister in the Lok Sabha on March 10 that the weapon of monetary policy would be used as and when necessary to deal with the rise in prices.

The Reserve Bank said that in the context of the difficult supply situation of agricultural commodities, together with recent economic and credit trends—the expansion of banks credit is fast approaching Rs. 300 crores and bank borrowings from the Reserve Bank reached nearly Rs. 197 crores on March 6, 1964—there was now need for caution in further credit extension by banks.

It said that the present economic situation in the country required that the banks extend all financial assistance for augmenting the output of goods for defence, exports and for genuine productive purposes, and avoid utilization of bank credit for hoarding of commodities expected to be in short supply.

The banks have, therefore, been advised to re-examine their advances portfolio. In particular, they have been asked to review their portfolio of clean advances, other than to industrial borrowers, and bring down the level of such advances.

The banks have also been advised to step up their efforts to mobilize deposits by all possible measures, including a re-examination of the rates of interest offered by them on deposits, so as to be in a position to meet the increased tempo of financing economic expansion out of their own resources and at the same time to conform to the higher liquidity requirements which come into effect from September 16, 1964.

This was the eighth change made in the Reserve Bank's slab rate system of lending to scheduled banks since the introduction of the system on October 1, 1960.

At the beginning of the current busy season the credit policy was liberalized and the first slab was at 4.5 per cent rate with the quota for borrowings at 75 per cent of statutory reserves. The second slab was at six per cent with a quota of another 75 per cent of statutory reserves.

Borrowings beyond this limit of 150 per cent of a bank's statutory reserves were subject to discussion between the Reserve Bank and the bank concerned. The additional drawals were charged at six per cent.

K. Progress Of Atomic Power Stations: The atomic power station at Tarapur will be completed in 1967. The station will go into full operation by the middle of 1968.

The report of the Department of Atomic Energy for 1963-64 disclosed that the work on India's second atomic power station near Rana Pratap Sagar, Kotah, in Rajasthan had also started. A meteorological station has been set up near the plant site. Detailed designs and lay-outs relating to the setting up of various construction facilities at the site are under preparation. The construction of the plant is expected to take about five to six years.

For the Tarapur atomic power station, two Agreements were signed during the year with USA. The first one related to co-operation in the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Under the second Agreement, the US AID will make available a loan of about Rs 38 crores for financing the foreign exchange cost of the project, including the fabrication of the initial load of fuel elements.

For the Rana Pratap atomic power station also two Agreements have been signed, one with Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and the other with the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada has agreed to provide credit facilities to the extent of Rs. 16 crores for purchase of services, materials and equipment from Canada.

N. Inquiry Into Customs Tariff Structure—Committee Appointed: The Government has decided to appoint a committee to conduct a comprehensive enquiry into the customs tariff structure and to report, within a year, the revisions and improvements required.

An official announcement in New Delhi on March 16 said that the need for such a panel had been stressed by various committees and commissions appointed by the Government, including the Ramaswami Mudaliar Committee.

The present structure of customs tariff followed the League of Nations Draft Customs Nomenclature. In the post-War period, new classifications and nomenclature of productions had been evolved to suit the changed pattern of international trade.

One of them was the "Brussels Tariff Nomenclature" prepared by the European Customs Union Study Group, 1955, which claimed to have taken into account the common features of the tariff nomenclatures of the 17 European countries which formed the Group and also the latest technological and commercial developments.

With the implementation of the successive Five-Year Plans, considerable progress had been made in industrial and economic development in India, leading to a substantial change in the composition and pattern of its external trade.

Both the Government and the business community had, therefore, felt the need for a detailed study of the present tariff.

The terms of reference of the proposed 15-member committee are:

(1) To examine the present structure of the Indian Customs Tariff (Import and Export) Schedule with reference to the composition of products and pattern of import and export trade;

(2) In the light of the examination made under this and having regard to the developments and the changed pattern of trade, to recommend whether the import tariff schedule should be based on the Brussels Tariff Nomenclature or other international nomenclature or whether India may continue to have its separate import tariff schedule after necessary improvement;

(3) To advise the Government regarding the lines on which the customs and tariff schedule should be revised, with particular reference to the need for (a) the creation of additional tariff items for articles of recent development and commercial importance, (b) revision of the classification of machinery, iron and steel and textiles in the context of the changed pattern of trade and (c) provision for the assessment of parts of articles;

(4) To recommend suitable amendments to the classification and nomenclature of the export tariff schedule;

(5) To review the substantive provisions of the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, and the Tariff (Amendment) Act, 1949, as well as other relevant legislations and to recommend modifications or amendments required in respect of them; and

(6) To make such other recommendations as may seem germaine to the objective of the enquiry.

The committee is not required to go into the question of the rates of duty applicable in respect of individual products or different classes of products, and it will not be concerned with the level of duty applicable under customs tariff. It will be allowed to co-opt members as may be necessary from time to time.

With a Joint Secretary of the Ministry of International Trade as chairman, the committee will consist of representatives of the Central Departments of Revenue, Technical Development, Iron and Steel, Industry, Mines and Metals and Petroleum and Chemicals, officers from the Tariff Commission and CCI's office, representatives from FICCI, A-IMO, the India Importers Association and the All-India Exporters Chamber and a joint director of export promotion, with a senior officer of the Department of Revenue as Secretary.

O. State Trading Corporation's Report For 1962-63: The report of the State Trading Corporation for 1962-63 was presented to Parliament on March 13.

It said that the Corporation had made arrangements to import marine diesel engines from Japan under the yen credit to enable the State Governments to expand their fisheries development programmes.

The Corporation's total foreign trade for the year under review was Rs. 83.91 crores, an increase of 12 per cent over the previous year. Exports and imports accounted for Rs. 32.59 crores and Rs. 51.32 crores respectively.

The Corporation made a net profit of Rs. 1.41 crores, of which Rs. 20,00,000 has been set apart for payment as dividend to the shareholders, and the balance would be utilized for further development of business.

One of the major achievements of the Corporation was the conclusion of several link and barter deals, as a result of which a large volume of exports—especially non-traditional items—was generated.

The report said that export of Indian iron-ore, which constituted one of the principal items of the Corporation's activities, was meeting with stiff competition from other exporting countries. Furthermore, there was a worldwide fall in demand because of a recession in the steel industry.

The report warned that exports of iron-ore would result in "big losses," unless ways and means were found to bring down production costs, movement and other expenses connected with export. It said it had become necessary to reduce the cost of iron-ore, if India was to successfully compete with other exporting countries.

The report further noted that the export of manganese ore was beset with several adverse factors. These included the high cost of the Indian manganese ore, emergence of the Soviet Union as one of the largest sources of supply and the development of new mines in close proximity to the consuming countries.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The report said that for the first time about 15,00,000 metres of cotton textiles were exported to the Soviet Union. Also, 15,00,000 metres of cotton textiles were exported to a number of East and West European countries. Woollen textiles were exported for the first time to Hungary.

P. Industrial Relations During 1963: The number of man-days lost owing to industrial disputes, which is one of the indicators of the general climate of industrial relations, declined in 1963.

As compared to a loss of 61,00,000 man-days in 1962, the provisional figure for 1963 was about 29,00,000. This was just about half the average number of man-days lost owing to industrial disputes in the last five years from 1958 to 1962.

This information was disclosed in the report for 1963-64 of the Ministry of Labour and Employment.

There was also evidence of greater willingness amongst the parties concerned to refer disputes to voluntary arbitration in pursuance of the recommendations made in the Truce Resolution.

The improvement in industrial relations was noticeable both in the Central and State spheres. Against the total of 29,00,000 man-days lost in 1963, 3,00,000 were accounted for by Railways, mines, ports and harbours, etc., which fall within the Central sphere.

Q. Working Of Companies During 1962-63—Company Law Department's Annual Report: A net increase in the number of companies formed during 1962-63 and a net increase in the total paid-up capital by Rs. 211.3 crores have been disclosed by the annual report of the Company Law Department for the year ending March 31, 1963.

The report, which was placed before Parliament on March 12, revealed that the total number of companies at work in the country at the end of 1963 was 2,524, with a total paid-up capital of Rs. 2,185.2 crores.

Another feature of the working of the Companies Act was that 51.3 per cent of the capital had been issued to the public. Subscription of foreign collaborators amounted to 23 per cent, and the amount subscribed by promoters, directors, etc., worked out to 25.7 per cent.

An analysis of the trends in the capital market relating to the method of promotion of public companies, project costs, cost of raising capital, etc., conducted by the Company Law Administration on the basis of the study of the prospectuses of 55 companies (excluding debenture prospectuses), showed that out of a total issued capital of Rs. 21.7 crores, 92 per cent, that is Rs. 19.9 crores, was in equity capital and the remaining eight per cent, amounting to Rs. 1.8 crores, was in preference shares.

The report also revealed that the total expenditure incurred by the companies covered by the survey for raising funds from the capital market amounted to Rs. 86,63,000. This worked out to four per cent of the capital issued and 1.9 per cent of the project cost.

A substantial amount of Rs. 38,17,000 was paid in the form of expenses of issue (excluding underwriting commission and brokerage). Underwriting commission and brokerage payable by the companies was estimated at Rs. 28,00,000, which was 32 per cent of the total expenses.

The total number of new companies limited by guarantee and associations not for profit, registered during the period, was 30. Of them, six were companies limited by guarantee and two associations not for profit.

During the period under review, 22 public companies were reported to have been converted into private companies and 49 private companies into public companies. The corresponding numbers in 1961-62 were 16 and 17 respectively.

The report of NCDC for 1962-63 was laid on the table of the Rajya Sabha on March 12 by Mr. C. Subramaniam, Minister for Steel, Mines and Heavy Engineering.

S. Measures To Restore Law And Order In Nagaland: The Chief Minister of Nagaland, Mr. P. Shilu Ao, introduced a resolution in the Assembly on March 13 suggesting measures to restore law and order in the State.

The resolution was adopted by the House. It said:

(1) That efforts be made to explore all avenues to hold peace talks and to mobilize public opinion to make the talks a success;

(2) That the leaders of the Naga Baptist Convention be urged to sound supporters of the hostiles regarding peace talks; and

(3) That the supporters of the hostiles should create a proper atmosphere for the success of the talks.

Earlier, in a statement on the law and order situation in Nagaland, Mr. Ao said 32 persons were killed and 19 injured by Naga hostiles during the past three months.

He regretted that the hostiles, who were trained fighters, had now taken to cowardly tactics like laying booby-traps which endangered the lives of peaceful citizens.

He added that the Government had tightened security measures to check the activities of the hostiles.

T. Goa Budget For 1964-65: New taxation measures which would yield Rs. 1.23 crores were announced in Goa's first Budget for 1964-65 presented to its Legislative Assembly by the Chief Minister, Mr. Dayanand Bandodkar, on March 17.

The Budget revealed a revenue gap of Rs. 4.63 crores and a gap of Rs. 3.45 crores on the capital side.

Excise duty on liquor forms nearly 43 per cent of the Rs. 1.23 crores expected from the new taxation measures for Goa, Daman and Diu.

Three other sources of revenue proposed to be tapped by Mr. Bandodkar are sales-tax, motor vehicles tax and entertainment tax.

The presentation of the Budget was marked by an Opposition walk-out on the language issue.

Mr. Bandodkar, who is also Finance Minister, said that his Budget represented a "crystallization of our genuine desire to achieve an improvement of the living standards of the Goan people and to build up gradually the agricultural, industrial and social economy of our people."

As he rose to make his speech—he read out a Marathi version of the English speech—a United Goans opposition member questioned the propriety of his reading the Marathi version when the original was in English.

Mr. Bandodkar explained that several members of his party did not follow English.

INDONESIA

A. Text Of Sukarno-Macapagal Statement: The following is the text of the Joint Statement issued by the Philippine President, Mr. Diosdado Macapagal, and President Sukarno on February 28 at the conclusion of the former's visit to Indonesia:

[A brief account of the Statement was given on page 5719 under Malaysia].

"During the visit further substantial progress was made towards assuring the effective implementation of the trade and cultural Agreements between the two countries. The State visit afforded President Macapagal the opportunity to observe at close range Indonesia's endeavours and achievements in building a strong nation based on its own national identity, a task which the Philippines itself, in its own way, is vigorously undertaking.

"During the visit, extensive discussions were held, during which the two Presidents, assisted by their respective Ministers and other high officials, reviewed the problems arising from the establishment of Malaysia, especially developments since the first Maphilindo mushawarah (friendly consultations) in Manila from 7th to 11th of January, 1964 and the recent tripartite ministerial meeting in Bangkok from the 5th to 10th of February, 1964. This is in accordance with the established practice of the two Presidents of keeping each other informed about all important developments in the region within the frame-work of Maphilindo.

"The two Presidents re-iterated their faith in the wisdom of solving Asian problems in an Asian fashion by Asians themselves and stressed that constructive and brotherly mushawarah is inherent in the Asian way of finding a solution to common problems.

"The two Presidents, therefore, expressed determination to co-ordinate their efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the problems of their region. Accordingly, they agreed that a tripartite summit mushawarah should be held as soon as possible, without preconditions, at a place and date still to be determined.

"They further agreed on the resumption of the tripartite meeting at ministerial level in Bangkok within the shortest possible time, so as to carry forward the tasks it has begun and to prepare the necessary groundwork for the summit mushawarah.

"The two Presidents continued to view the cease-fire in North Kalimantan (Borneo) as an important factor in creating the favourable atmosphere for a comprehensive and integrated solution of the Malaysia problem and its aspects. In this connexion, President Sukarno reassured President Macapagal that the Indonesian Government would observe the cease-fire, and expects the other parties concerned to do likewise. The two Presidents were most gratified to note the similarity of approach and singleness of purpose shared by Indonesia and the Philippines in forging Maphilindo into a living reality based on the spirit and principles of the Manila Agreements. They expressed the hope that Maphilindo will continue to develop and constitute a positive contribution to the solidarity of Asian and African nations in accordance with the principle adopted by the Bandung Conference of 1955.

"In this connexion, they agreed on the necessity of holding a second Afro-Asian conference as soon as possible. President Macapagal, on behalf of his Government and people, expressed deep appreciation for the exceptional warmth and cordiality of the hospitality extended to him and his party by President Sukarno and the Indonesian Government and people."

ISRAEL

A. Palestine Organization Of Liberation—Draft Constitution: Mr. Ahmed Al-Shukairy, the Arab League's Palestine representative, told a news conference in Jerusalem (Jordan) on February 25 that all Palestinians would be "natural members" of the Organization for the Liberation of Palestine under the draft Constitution of the Organization.

The 24-article draft Constitution says: "The Palestine people will be the proved-base of this Organization which, once set up, will establish permanent contact with the Palestine people and mobilize them so that they may be able to assume their national responsibility of liberating their homeland."

It reviewed the measures which will be taken to convene a General Palestinian Conference representing all Palestinian categories, including refugees and residents, and will be called the National Assembly for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

It provided for the formulation of a preparatory committee in each Arab State with a Palestinian community of at least 10,000, to draw up lists nominating candidates for membership of the General Conference.

The National Assembly is to meet once every two years, alternately in Jerusalem and Gaza, and will hold its first meeting on May 14 this year in Jerusalem.

The draft Constitution calls on Arab States to give Palestinians the opportunity to join their regular armies and to form special Palestinian units.

A "Palestinian National Fund" will be set up to finance the work of the Organization. It will draw its resources from a fixed tax on Palestinians, from aid from Arab Governments and peoples, from a "Liberation" postage stamp, and by contributions and loans from Arab or friendly peoples.

After a mass rally in Jerusalem at which Mr. Shukairy spoke on Palestine, about 10,000 students and youths marched through the city. The rally demanded arms for "the liberation of Palestine."

B. New Desalinization Method: It was reported from Jerusalem on February 28 that an Israeli engineer, Mr. Ariel Osder, had invented a new method for sweetening sea water.

It is based on distillation at a pressure of more than 200 atmospheres and a temperature of over 400 degrees Centigrade. Mr. Osder recently explained this new process to the Press. He also gave a demonstration of a new type of direct heat exchanger, which is an important part of the apparatus.

The establishment of the first experimental installation using the process, costing $50,000 to $75,000, will take from eight to 10 months. Part of it will be built in Israel.

He claimed to have overcome the problems of corrosion and the creation of deposits in the heat exchangers by the use of intermediate liquids, which do not mix with the water, and transfer the heat without making use of pipes.

He said that his method would produce fresh water at a cost of 20 agorot (about 7 cents) per cubic meter. The only energy invested in the process, he added, comes from 5½ lbs. of fuel oil for every cubic meter of sweet water.

JAPAN

A. Relations With KMT In Formosa: The Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, told the Budget Committee of the Diet on March 1 that the legal title to Taiwan (Formosa) by the KMT Administration was yet to be established.

He added that KMT Chinese were now in actual possession of the Island and the "majority of nations recognized this fact."

He made the statement after persistent questioning by the opposition Socialist leader, Mr. Okada, on the subject of the international status of Taiwan, in the context of the current agitation among Taiwan natives now living in Japan for independence for their homeland from both Mainland China and the KMT.

Mr. Okada recalled a statement by Mr. Ikeda in 1961 in which he had said that "Taiwan is China" and asked whether the Government still considered Taiwan a territory belonging to the KMT. Mr. Ikeda said the ownership of Taiwan had "not been established." He said he was prepared to modify his 1961 statement in this respect.

He said he was willing to withdraw his 1961 statement if it was being construed to mean Japan's recognition of KMT's right to possession of Taiwan.

According to him, the legal position was that the Allied Powers at the signing of the San Francisco Peace Treaty had not arrived at any final agreement on the title to Taiwan and the Pescadores which Japan, defeated in World War II, had renounced in the Treaty.

He said Japan had acquired Taiwan through a treaty with the former Chinese imperial government and through the San Francisco Treaty Japan had made territorial surrender of the Island.

He added: "The Nationalist Chinese are there and are governing the Island, which does not belong to any nation."

He was, however, reported to have promised a group of pro-Western political and business leaders that he would send his Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, to Taipeh in May to retrieve friendship between Japan and KMT China.

The group had urged immediate steps in this direction so as to balance Japan's developing economic swing towards Communist China, which, it said, was turning to Japan to strengthen Chinese economic foundation in some measures weakened by the withdrawal of Soviet industrial contracts.

Mr. Ikeda's statement on Taiwan came in the wake of reports that Japan was seeking to maintain "realistic relations with Peking and Taipeh."

The former Prime Minister, Mr. Shigeru Yoshida, visited Formosa recently in his private capacity, in an effort to bring about a thaw in the relations between Tokyo and Taipeh. In spite of the general belief that he has been able to dispel the misunderstanding in KMT China that Japan was intent on establishing closer relations with Peking, the fundamental disagreement on the attitude towards mainland China itself has remained as acute as it was before Mr. Yoshida's visit.

While there was agreement on the view that mainland China was a "threat" and on less basic issues like the dispatch of the Foreign Minister, Mr. Ohira to Taipeh to normalise the virtually suspended relations and the holding of an economic conference soon of leaders of Kuomintang China and Japan, Mr. Yoshida firmly refused to have anything to do with moves for the "liberation" of the mainland on which Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was insisting.

The purpose of Mr. Yoshida's visit to Formosa was not clear unless it was intended to obscure the attitude of Japan towards Peking.

While attempts to assuage the feelings of Taipeh were in progress, there were the following developments in favour of promoting closer relations between Tokyo and Peking:

(1) Mr. Ikeda said that it would be to the advantage of Japan to trade with mainland China where there are more than 700 million potential customers.

(2) The Foreign Minister, Mr. Ohira, said that mainland China was neither an economic nor a military threat to Japan.

(3) Mr. Hsiao An-pe, Secretary-General of the China-Japan Friendship Society of China, said in Tokyo that the situation was extremely favourable for establishing diplomatic relations between Peking and Tokyo. He said that China would not have to depend on war reparations from Japan for building a socialist State on the mainland. The statement was made apparently in answer to the general apprehension in Japan that China would demand huge war reparations from Japan when the two countries restored normal relations.

(4) Mr. Ryuji Takeuchi, Japanese Ambassador in USA, said in San Francisco that while Japan would refrain from taking hasty action on the China problem, the people of Japan felt greatly relieved when France had recognized Peking because the French action opened the possibility of Japan moving towards normalization of its relations with China.

(5) Mr. Chou En-lai said in Colombo on February 29 that the climate was favourable for the establishment of friendly relations with Japan. Talking to a group of Japanese correspondents, he said the recent establishment of diplomatic ties between France and China had shown that USA's policies towards China were "bankrupt" and continuing American adherence to them was "shameful."

No Unscheduled Air Link With China: However, on March 13, the Transport Minister, Mr. Kentaro Ayabe said the Government had decided against an "unscheduled air link" between Japan and China.

He said in a statement, after a Cabinet meeting, that granting of landing and overflight privileges to aircraft of a country with which Japan had no diplomatic relations would invite serious trouble.

The Government, he added, had originally favoured an unofficial unscheduled air link from a sea port to another which would not necessitate a country-to-country air agreement.

[An air service had been planned between the southern Japanese port of Sukuoka and Shanghai by All-Japan Airways and a Chinese airline. The first Chinese plane had been scheduled to bring a large group of trade officials to inaugurate a Chinese trade fair in Tokyo in April].

A. Reported Estrangement With USSR: Western news agencies quoting reliable sources stated in the first week of March that the North Korean Government had taken several measures indicating its further estrangement from Russia.

According to the sources, the rebroadcasting by Pyongyang Radio of Moscow news in Korean language had been stopped.

Under official instructions, local branches of the USSR-North Korean Friendship Society had been closed.

Large numbers of Korean students had been recalled home from Soviet universities and on their return they underwent a special "re-education course", apparently intended to cure them of any "revisionist" tendency.

The accord was the outcome of 10-day talks between the two Ministers in Kuwait.

The terms of the Agreement were not announced, but the communique said it provided for the partitioning of the neutral zone, giving the two Governments equal administrative and sovereignty rights.

LAOS

A. Mutual Recriminations By Factional Leaders: The three factional leaders of Laos have agreed to meet and discuss adjustments for stabilizing the "Government of National Union."

The idea of such a meeting was brought up at a conference between Prince Souphanouvong and Prince Souvanna Phouma at Sam Neua, and Right-wing General Phoumi Nosavan has accepted the suggestion.

In November, 1963 Prince Souphanouvong complained in a letter to the Premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma about Gen. Phoumi and said it was "obvious that he will not agree to solve the Laotian crisis peacefully. He will continue to sabotage the coalition Government and national reconciliation."

Prince Souvanna's reply implied that a tripartite meeting might help and could be arranged if Pathet Lao agreed, but added that up to then negotiations between representatives of the Neutralist and Neo Lao Haksat (the Pathet Lao's political arm) parties in Vientiane had made no progress "because of the stubborn attitude of the Neo Lao Haksat representatives who have persistently clung to their old worn-out proposals."

Gen. Phoumi for his part recently accused Pathet Lao of being actively aided on Laotian territory by the armed forces of North Viet-Nam, a charge which was corroborated by Prince Souvanna Phouma and which neither of the two has withdrawn. But Gen. Phoumi Nosavan has welcomed the suggestion for a tripartite meeting and said he was "happy to hear of Pathet Lao assurances that they will re-integrate the Government of National Union. I have expressed my willingness for a three-party meeting and feel that the best site for this would be the Plain of Jars."

The agreement came in the midst of resumed warfare.

The renewed fighting which broke out on January 29 led to the rout of neutralist and Right-wing troops from the rice-growing plain of Nakay in Central Laos. It was believed by diplomatic observers in Vientiane that Pathet Lao was endeavouring to establish bases in the hill region west of Nakay in order that they could raid traffic on the main north-south highway above the Mekong river town of Thakhek. Prince Souvanna Phouma claimed that the Pathet Lao attack on Nakay was supported by North Viet-Namese troops, but the Pathet Lao denied this and contended that their forces attacked in response to encroachments on their territory by the troops of General Phoumi Nosavan. As a result of the military activity near Thakhek, Thailand closed a long stretch of her frontier with southern Laos.

On February 10 Prince Souvanna Phouma asked the Soviet Union and Britain to use their influence to prevent a resurgence of serious fighting in the country. He asked the Polish, Indian and Canadian members of the International Truce Supervisory Commission to appeal to the factions to cease fighting.

Pathet Lao said on March 6 that it considered all the decisions of the International Commission "null and void" unless Pathet Lao approved them in advance.

General Phoumi Vongvichit, a Pathet Lao leader, said this in a statement to the Commission.

He reminded the Commission that all requests for investigations must be unanimously approved by the national committee charged with the execution of the Geneva Agreement guaranteeing Laos' neutrality before being submitted to the Commission.

He specifically referred to the request made by the coalition neutralist Premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma, to the ITSC to conduct an investigation into alleged Pathet Lao cease-fire violations in Central Laos.

LEBANON

A. Government Resigns: The Prime Minister, Mr. Rashid Karame, submitted his Government's resignation to President Fuad Chehab on February 19. He was asked to stay in office until a new Government had been formed.

Later, President Chehab issued a decree dissolving Parliament and calling for new elections in April.

The normal constitutional term of the 99-member one-chamber Parliament would have elapsed early in June. Parliament was elected in the Spring of 1960 over four stages for a term of four years.

The outgoing Minister of Economy, Mr. Rafiq Naja, said that elections would be held also in four stages between April 5 and May 3. The first stage will be held on April 5 in the province of North Lebanon, the second on April 12 in the Bekaa, the third on April 26 in Beirut and Mount Lebanon Provinces and the last on May 3 in the South Lebanon Province.

The resignation of the Government was announced after its routine weekly meeting under the chairmanship of President Chehab.

The outgoing Government of Mr. Karame was formed on October 31, 1961, thus staying in office for the longest time on record in Lebanon's history.

The next Parliament is particularly important because it will have to elect a new President of the Republic for a term of six years.

The term of President Chehab expires in September and the present Lebanese Constitution does not permit the election of a President for two consecutive terms.

If it is desired, as some political circles demand, to allow President Chehab to stand for re-election then the new Parliament would have to amend the Constitution.

Sources close to the Government said the President was unwilling to run for another term, though he publicly had said nothing on the matter.

"Care-taker" Government Formed:

A Beirut message on February 21 said that a "care-taker" Government of 10 members under Mr. Hussein Oweini, a 63-year-old veteran politician, had been formed to supervise the General Election.

Only the Foreign Minister, Mr. Philip Takla, was retained from the Government of Mr. Rashid Karame.

Three of the new Ministers were in office for the first time. The Government is considered neutral towards the political parties and groupings and none of its members will stand in the election.

The full Cabinet is:

Prime Minister, Interior and Defence—Mr. Hussein Oweini;

Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Justice—Mr. Jubran Nahhas;

Foreign Affairs—Mr. Philip Takla;

Education—Mr. Charles Helou;

Agriculture—Mr. Fuad Najjar;

Finance—Mr. Amin Baihum;

Public Works and Guidance and Information—Mr. George Naccache;

Labour and Social Affairs—Dr. Rida Wahid;

Economy and Planning—Dr. Fuad Ammoun; and

MALAYSIA

A. Collapse Of Tripartite Talks: Representatives of Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines met in Bangkok in the first week of March on the initiative of the Philippines in a search for measures which would relieve the tension on the Malaysia-Indonesia border where a shaky cease-fire was in force (see page 5669).

The talks first broke down on March 4, but were resumed the following day to collapse again on March 5.

The difficulty remained the same as before—Malaysian demands for unconditional withdrawal of guerrillas. (Indonesia wants to be linked with a political settlement.)

After the failure of the talks the Malaysian delegation issued a statement saying it was "clear that there is now no meeting of minds on the issue of the (Borneo) cease-fire. The Malaysian delegation regrets that the Indonesian Government has adopted a position which is threatening the peace and well-being of South-East Asia."

Mr. Salvador Lopez, the Philippines Foreign Minister, acting as go-between, twice had separate talks with Dr. R. Subandrio, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, and Tun Abdul Razak, the Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia, but said afterwards: "We have done our best to explore the possibilities of agreement and now regret to announce that no agreement has been possible."

An Indonesian Embassy spokesman said that Indonesia felt there should be a direct link of the key issues—a 20 per cent guerrilla withdrawal for a 20 per cent political settlement.

Tun Abdul Razak said: "They have to start withdrawal first." There was no softening in the Malaysian position.

Filipino Proposal:

The Philippine Foreign Secretary, Mr. Salvador P. Lopez, who returned to Manila on March 6 said he hoped that the tripartite Malaysia reconciliation efforts would be revived by an across-the-board package deal.

He told a news conference that Tun Abdul Razak had accepted his package in principle and Indonesia's leadership was now considering it.

Describing the package plan as "containing something for each country," he itemised the package proposals as:

(a) Disengagement of the troops in Borneo and confining these troops within their respective territories.

(b) Immediate commencement of discussions towards a political settlement.

(c) A summit meeting among Indonesia's President Sukarno, Tengku Abdul Rehman and President Macapagal.

"Malaysia is interested in troop withdrawal, Indonesia wants a political settlement and we want a Summit," he pointed out, illustrating his contention that each country would get something out of the package.

Asked to explain the mechanics of the package deal, he said: "You can't have a choice. You accept all three or nothing."

He emphasized under questioning, however, that if Djakarta rejected his proposals, this should not "mean scrapping of the cease-fire agreement already forged in Bangkok."

He explained that the package deal, if accepted, would comprise one more vital point of the cease-fire pact. They had been bogged down in Bangkok over Malaysia's demand for withdrawal of Indonesia's troops from Malaysian Borneo.

B. Military Conscription: The Government ordered military conscription on March 10 following the collapse of the Bangkok talks (see page 5707).

The decision—which could put as many as 100,000 men under arms—was reached during an emergency Cabinet session.

It coincided with reports of fresh fighting in Sabah where two Indonesian guerrillas and a Malaysian trooper were killed and two Indonesians captured.

The incidents were the latest in a series of clashes that had virtually spelled the end of a six-week-old cease-fire.

The Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, who is also Defence Minister, announced the conscription order after the Cabinet meeting.

He said the Cabinet considered the situation "serious enough to warrant the call-up of persons between the ages of 21 and 29."

The call-up was expected to start within days in Malaya, the core of Malaysia, where eligible males had already been registered for possible military duty. Registration in Singapore, Sabah and Sarawak was expected to take two weeks.

Earlier on March 8, the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman told a political rally that he favoured an immediate call-up of the nation's young men for military service to meet the danger of Indonesian aggression, after the break-down of the talks with Indonesia and the Philippines.

He described Indonesian policy as barbaric and savage, and said Malaysia would not flinch from the consequences of maintaining its national and territorial integrity.

On March 11 he turned down a suggestion by President Sukarno for further "peace talks" with Indonesia to solve the Malaysia crisis.

He re-iterated Malaysia's stand that there was no question of any further talks until and unless Indonesia withdrew her guerrillas from the Malaysian States of Sabah and Sarawak.

Asked to comment on the reported statement of President Sukarno on March 10 that Indonesia was still prepared to resume talks on the Malaysia issue, provided there were no pre-conditions, the Tengku said it was futile to talk to Indonesian leaders so long as they continued their armed aggression against Malaysia.

PAKISTAN

A. Restoration Of Democracy—Awami League's Pledge: A pledge to fight for the restoration of democracy in Pakistan was taken at the concluding session of the revived Pakistan Awami League Council's meeting in Dacca on March 9.

The session was attended by 944 delegates and Council members.

It was resolved to observe a franchise day jointly with all democratic forces.

It demanded full autonomy for East Pakistan, equal opportunities for the development of both the Wings, and an end to discrimination against East Pakistan. It also said defence should be handed over to the Province under a federal Government.

The meeting demanded the release of political prisoners, adult franchise, direct elections and freedom of Press and association. It condemned communal riots and called upon the people to protect the minorities.

The provincial convention of the National Democratic Front (NDF) also echoed these demands. It did not declare itself a political party, but issued a manifesto and elected a working committee with 25 members.

There appears to be some differences of opinion between the Awami League and the NDF. Sheikh Mujibur Rahman of the Awami League said that NDF had been formed in conditions of non-revival of political parties. Now that the parties have been revived, NDF had lost its representative character.

NDF spokesmen, on the other hand, are reluctant to recognize the revival of the parties—both the Awami League and the National Awami Party (of Maulana Bhashani).

Meanwhile, Mr. Mohammad Ibrahim, a former Judge of the Dacca High Court, told the East Pakistan Journalists' Conference that he would prefer to be a "mule of history" rather than a member of the ruling Muslim League.

He was referring to a statement by President Ayub Khan in which he had called members of parties other than the Muslim League "hired mules."

The journalists demanded full freedom of the Press.

B. Lt-Col. G. L. Bhattacharya's Appeal Rejected By Supreme Court: The Supreme Court sitting in Dacca dismissed on March 12 the appeal of the Indian Army officer, Lt-Col. G. L. Bhattacharya, now serving a four-year prison term in Dacca jail.

The Court announced its summary decision on the conclusion of the two-day hearing of the appeal in which the Calcutta barrister, Mr. S. S. Ray, appeared for the imprisoned officer. The Supreme Court thus upheld the four-year prison term of the Indian Army officer due to be completed by the end of 1964.

Mr. S. S. Ray was on March 11 politely told by the Supreme Court of Pakistan that in order to avoid "embarrassment", he should refrain from raising any points contesting the validity of orders passed by the President of Pakistan.

Raising a constitutional point, Mr. Ray had submitted that two orders confirming validations of all proceedings before the military courts passed by the President, prior to the coming into force of the present Constitution, were null and void (Col. Bhattacharya was tried by a special military court).

As Mr. Ray was about to elaborate his points, Chief Justice Cornelius observed that such a point should not be taken up by the counsel as it would be embarrassing.

Mr. Ray: "My Lord, in India, I have taken up points in a number of cases challenging the validity of Government actions and in a number of cases Government's actions were declared null and void."

Mr. Justice Rahaman: "That was in your own forum. Here you cannot take these points."

Mr. Ray: "I am deeply grateful to Your Lordship for having allowed me to appear before you and I certainly will not abuse that privilege."

When Mr. Ray recalled that he did appear before the same court in 1956, as a junior to Mr. P. R. Das, Mr. Justice Kaikus remarked: "That was regarding the Zamindari Abolition Act, and the points raised in the present case are of a different nature and it would cause embarrassment."

Mr. Ray: "I would abide by the desire of the Court."

Col. Bhattacharya had originally been sentenced by a special military court to eight years' imprisonment on charges of illegal entry into Pakistan and unlawful possession of firearms and secret documents. The President of Pakistan later reduced the sentence to four years.

C. Work On Nuclear Power Plant Begun: It was stated on March 11 that work had begun on the construction of a nuclear power plant 14 miles from Karachi.

About 300 acres of land have been acquired by the Pakistan Atomic Energy Commission for the plant, which will have a capacity of 132 mw, to be based on a natural uranium heavy water moderated reactor.

The nuclear plant, according to Atomic Energy Commission sources, will produce electricity at less than 3½ paisa per unit, which competes with the cost of power generated by gas.

The decision to establish this plant to generate cheap electricity for the continuously increasing power demands of the sprawling city, was taken by the Pakistan Government. This would also help conserve the gas supplies.

The plant is estimated to cost Rs. 27.3 crores including Rs. 21.2 crores in foreign exchange. It is likely to be completed towards the end of 1968.

At present, preliminary work including test operations are being conducted by a foreign firm.

According to Karachi Electric Supply Corporation estimates, the need for electricity in Karachi will go up to 534 mw by 1975 due to rapid growth of population and continuous expansion of industrial and commercial activities. The existing installed capacity in Karachi is 134 mw.

While in 1941, Karachi had a total installed capacity of five mw only, it rose to 23 mw in 1953 and in 1961, it further rose to 67 mw.

According to experts, the installed capacity is expected to reach 400 mw (including the nuclear plant to be set up by the Atomic Energy Commission). In 1975, it is likely to touch 524 mw.

was presented to Congress on January 21.

The national income from the Federal sector was estimated at $118.8 billion.

President Lyndon B. Johnson proposed, for regular Government programmes financed out of treasury revenues, $97,900,000,000 to pay bills, contracts, and other obligations as they come due. This figure ($500,000,000 less than the previous fiscal year) is called "administrative Budget expenditure."

From trust fund transactions and other special programmes having their own sources of revenue, his programme would result in projected fiscal year 1965 outlays of $29,400,000,000.

His proposals for all Federal Government programmes total $122,700,000,000.

Of the $122,700 million, 44 per cent would be for national defence, 2 per cent for conduct of international relations, 24 per cent for Social Security payments and other Trust Fund transactions, 7 per cent for interest charges on Federal Government debt, 4 per cent for space research, 4 per cent for agricultural programmes, 4 per cent for veterans benefits, and 11 per cent for other programmes, including natural resources, commerce, transportation, housing, community development, health, labour, Federal aid for education, and general government.

Of the money needed to finance these payments, 40 per cent would come from individual income-taxes, 21 per cent from corporation income-taxes, 14 per cent would be employment taxes paid into Trust Funds that finance workers' benefits, 23 per cent would come from other taxes and 2 per cent would be borrowed from the public.

B. Long-range Jet Interceptor Developed In USA: The United States has successfully developed, in secrecy, a 2,000 mph jet aircraft, whose revolutionary design may give USA pre-eminence in manned aircraft for some years to come.

The correspondent of The Times, London said that apart from the military implications of a long-range interceptor capable of more than three times the speed of sound, the advanced metallurgy involved in building it will be immensely useful in the construction of commercial supersonic aircraft.

President Lyndon Johnson made the announcement on March 1 at his first televised news conference.

The A-11, as the new aircraft is known, is a slim pencil-shaped machine with a conventional cockpit and short stubby wings near the tail. A picture of it issued by the White House did not show how many engines it has or give any of the dimensions.

Mr. Johnson said, however, that it was hoped to arm it with air-to-air missiles, that it had flown at over 2,000 mph at altitudes of more than 70,000 feet, and that its range was in the thousands of miles. Several A-11s were now being tested at Edwards Air Force station, California.

The aeroplane, which has been under development since 1959, was described by Mr. Johnson as having a performance far exceeding that of any other aircraft in the world today. He made it clear that the mastery of the use of titanium, a metal with good heat-resistance properties, in the A-11 would be exploited in the supersonic transport which USA plans to build in competition with the Anglo-French Concord.

Appropriate members of the House and Senate had been kept informed of the A-11's progress since the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation began work on it. The J-58 engine was built by Pratt and Whitney, and the experimental fire-control and air-to-air missile system by the Hughes Aircraft Company.

Mr. Johnson said he had ordered everyone associated with the programme to remain silent about it, but he had authorized the release of certain other information. From this it emerged that the A-11 had great potential as a reconnaissance aircraft but that it was unlikely to be used as a bomber. It was also made clear that it could not itself be adapted to carry passengers, but that the Lockheed Corporation, which had also submitted a design in the competition for a commercial aircraft, would not gain an advantage over its competitors, as the technology had been distributed to other manufacturers.

While it is impossible to make an exact assessment of the importance of the A-11 without more information about its performance and design, its existence puts some recent controversies and statements in a new light.

The development of an air-to-air missile sufficiently advanced to be used in an aircraft as fast as the A-11 may conceivably have weighed significantly in the decision to abandon the Skybolt programme, although the ill-fated missile was an air-to-ground weapon. Presumably, too, the existence of so fast an interceptor would have made the Skybolt system more vulnerable than was generally thought.

Mr. Najeeb Halaby, the administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, was understood to be one of the officials who were informed on the development of the A-11. His criticism of the use of aluminium in the Concord programme thus takes on new significance, as does his conviction that USA can make a faster aircraft for delivery very soon after the Concord is ready. Perhaps, too, the decision not to build the B-70 bomber was influenced by the A-11's potentiality.

The Air Force has recently been calling for the development of an improved manned interceptor with specifications similar to those attributed to the A-11. It has been suggested that this was a cover to help conceal the secret programme.

C. Increase In British Bank Rate: Britain's Bank Rate, barometer of the country's economy, was raised by 1 per cent to 5 per cent on February 27.

A Bank of England spokesman said the main purpose of the increase—first for 13 months and seventh since 1961 when the rate rose to 7 per cent—was "to steady the pace of expansion in the economy".

He said: "It is not designed or intended to produce any substantial inflow of short-term funds."

The official Bank Rate is technically the minimum rate at which the Bank of England, the Government's banker, will discount approved bills of exchange.

In practice it is the key to the general rate of interest charged on loans in Britain.

E. Race To Discover Atomic Particle: A London despatch on February 22 said that behind the new sub-nuclear particle whose discovery had been reported from New York (see page 5734) lies a race between the Brookhaven Laboratory in USA and the 14-nation European laboratory at Geneva to complete a critical experiment, and a story of theoretical ideas developed in three countries—Japan, Britain and USA.

In respect of one or two categories of sub-nuclear particles, theoretical physicists now, as a result of it all, feel in a position of one-upness. If a new particle in this category—known as "strongly interacting" particles—should be discovered, they will be able to say at once what further particles may exist and should be looked for. They have found a mathematical pattern but, as yet, lack a physical theory to account for it.

Scientists of the Geneva laboratory (Cern) have been unlucky. They, like those at Brookhaven, have completed their experiment; but, unlike Brookhaven, which has clear priority, they have yet to complete analysis of their pictures.

On the theoretical side, the first important step was taken in 1959 by three Japanese physicists, Y. Ohnuki, Ikada, and Ogawa. This was followed up by Professor A. Salam and J. C. Ward at the Imperial College of Science, London. At this stage the mathematical pattern—based on what is known as group theory—pointed to multiplets of eight particles which, in fact, is the most common situation.

The next development has an almost fairy-tale quality. The then military attache at the Israel Embassy in London, Y. Ne'eman, now in the United States, was commended as a student to Professor Salam, though without training in physics. Professor Salam accepted him, and suggested that he take a new look at the problem. Ne'eman came back with a further generalization pointing to multiplets of 10 particles as well as eight, and was told to publish. The authorities of London University, to whom his work had been submitted as a thesis for a doctorate in physics, were at first doubtful about accepting it, because his primary degree was not in that subject. At almost the same time, Professor Murray Gell-Mann of the California Institute of Technology, arrived at the same idea.

One implication of 10-particle multiplets was the newly discovered particle. It was unusual enough in its properties, and had been predicted definitely enough to make a good test. Hence the search for it by two laboratories—with the race won by Brookhaven.

A chapter in research has been completed and the question arises, what next? There remain two problems; first, to relate satisfactorily the existence of two distinct categories of sub-nuclear particles—strongly and weakly interacting; and, second, to arrive at a physical theory. They may be solved separately or together, and theoretical physicists are not inclined at present to guess further.

BURMA

A. Nationalization Of All Business: The Revolutionary Government announced on March 19 immediate nationalization of all businesses, together with goods of wholesalers, brokers, departmental stores and shops within the Rangoon city limits. Nationalization extended also to co-operative stores.

Unarmed soldiers carried out the Government's order.

The order affected wholesalers in machines and parts, hardware, watches, spectacles, fountain pens and stationery, electrical goods, imported drugs and medicines, sports and photographic goods, porcelain and glassware.

Hotel keepers, tea shop owners, retailers in fruit, vegetables, meat, fish, eggs and tobacco and dealers in leather goods, umbrellas, headwear and footwear, were exempted. Owners of enterprises nationalized will be allowed to keep their cash and bank accounts, and will also be given compensation.

The authorities gave the reasons for nationalization as profiteering, black-marketing and smuggling. Recently the price of imported commodities had risen steeply, despite the daily arrival of goods from abroad and distribution through "people's stores".

Private trade and co-operatives had been allowed until March 19 to deal in goods acquired under earlier import licences. But under the new order all assets of nationalized enterprises became Government property forthwith.

The announcement said there had been shortage of some goods such as razor blades, toilet goods, foreign medicines and textiles which were unobtainable at State-owned shops, but were available at inflated prices in private shops. It said "stooges" of foreign and native capitalists had been queueing at State-owned shops and had bought up every essential commodity.

The nationalization order also involved the take-over of factories producing tinned biscuits, cloth and clothing and hardware.

Shipping Corporation Law:

Earlier, on February 15, the Government promulgated a law under which a State organization to be known as the Burma Five Star Shipping Corporation would be constituted shortly.

It empowers the Government to appoint a Corporation, consisting of a Chairman and a maximum of ten members, to manage the coastal and sea transport business of the Union of Burma. The appointment is to be made through an official notification.

The functions of the Corporation, as provided for in the law, include purchase of vessels, machinery and equipment, vehicles, land and buildings, and also construction, hire, sale, disposal and acceptance of vessels, machinery, equipment etc. transferred to it by the Government.

The Corporation is also to undertake any other work which will be of assistance to its main function of managing the sea and coastal transport business of the country.

Among other functions of the Corporation are fixation and modification from time to time of fares and freight rates, settlement of marine insurance claims, and other tasks generally provided for in the law.

The Corporation is to carry on its work according to commercial principles, subject to the policy laid down for it by the Government from time to time.

Warning To Saboteurs:

The Government on March 13 threatened with severe punishment those who would obstruct or aid or abet obstruction of its work for the establishment of socialist economy.

The new law, which came into force with immediate effect, would provide for the offenders a minimum sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment. The maximum penalty would be death in addition to confiscation of all properties.

The specific acts of crime of importance covered by the law are sabotage, destruction of public properties, obstruction of the working of productive industries, transport, communications and smuggling of goods or currency out of Burma.

B. Agreement With Karens—Details: Two important points that should assist in shaping the future Burmese Constitution emerged out of the agreement reached between the Government and the central authority of the Karen Revolutionary Council, led by Saw Hunter Tha Hmwa on March 12.

The two sides had been engaged in peace talks since October 28, 1963.

The Revolutionary Council now stands committed, very willingly, to calling a national convention of the indigenous races of Burma "at an appropriate time in the future" to adopt a Constitution "on the basis of the Burmese Way to Socialism and the pattern of socialist democracy."

As the Karen Revolutionary Council has shown good sense in its attitude, the Burma Revolutionary Council has not hesitated to agree to the idea of a national convention, which it has cherished covertly.

The second point to emerge from the agreement is that the future of the Karen State, to be named Kawthoolei in the interim period, will have to be determined afresh at the convention as regards its territory (which the Karen Revolutionary Council would like to see extended to parts of the Irrawaddy and Tanassarim divisions that are peopled by a Karen majority) and its rights and duties. But in that respect the Karen delegation has accepted the definitions of rights and duties of states within the Union on the lines of General Ne Win's declaration of policy and faith regarding indigenous races made on Union Day, February 12, in Mandalay. Its essence lies in the fraternity and solidarity of all nationalities resolving to live "in unity through weal and woe" after eliminating such false notions as "majority" or "minority", which have been the results of suspicions and strained relations of the past.

Other provisions in the agreement relate to the formation of a joint committee to superintend effectively a cessation of hostilities and the right of representation by the Karen National Council in security and administrative councils in the Tanassarim, Pegu, and Irrawaddy divisions with a view to consultation over Karen affairs in those places.

So far there is no serious fighting along the Sittang river, normally held to be the abode of the Karen rebels.

C. Text Of Ne Win-Chou Communique: The following is the text of the joint communique issued in Rangoon on February 18 by the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, and the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai on their talks during the latter's visit to Burma from February 14 to 18. (A summary of the communique appeared on page 5747).

"The two sides reviewed the development of the international situation in general which is favourable to the peoples of the world who are struggling for their freedom and independence and for world peace, and discussed some current problems which today engender tension in many parts of the world. They firmly believe that such problems arising from time to time between nations can be settled by peaceful means if the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence are truly adhered to by the parties concerned, and that even if the problems existing between them may not be solved for the time being, the maintenance of contact between them and a willingness on their part to seek a peaceful, fair and mutually acceptable solution may promote such settlement.

"The two sides agreed that the preservation of world peace and prevention of war is an important task with which the world is faced today. In this connexion, they expressed their determination to strive for the ultimate realisation of general disarmament, including the total prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons, together with all the peace-loving peoples and countries of the world.

"Both sides were of the opinion that it would considerably contribute to the expansion of the area of peace, to the settlement of international problems by peaceful means, to the reduction of world tension and to the promotion of friendly relations and co-operation among nations, if peace-loving nations would pursue the policy of ever expanding and strengthening their international contact by means of consolidating old friendships and cultivating new ones. In this context, the Burmese side congratulated Premier Chou En-lai and Marshal Chen Yi on the successful conclusion of their friendship visit to Africa, and affirmed that the Union of Burma has consistently worked for the restoration to the People's Republic of China of her rightful place in United Nations, believing that it would not only enhance the effectiveness of the world Organization but also facilitate the settlement of international problems by peaceful means. The Chinese side expressed its gratitude for this, and re-affirmed its full respect for and support to the policy of peace and neutrality pursued by the Government of the Union of Burma in international affairs, which greatly contributes to the promotion of Asian-African solidarity and the maintenance of peace in Asia and the world. The Chinese side also expressed its appreciation of and gratitude for the contributions made by the Burmese Government and people towards the strengthening of Sino-Burmese friendship.

"The two sides re-affirmed that the peoples of all nations should have the right to choose and develop their own political and social systems and their own ways of life in keeping with their national circumstances, requirements and aspirations, free from any outside interference or pressure. They are convinced that States with differing political and social systems can co-exist in peace if the relations between them are guided by the principles of respect for each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit and settlement of disputes between nations by peaceful means, and by the Ten Principles of the Bandung Conference.

"Both sides expressed the desire of their two countries to establish and maintain friendly relations with all countries on the basis of the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence. In this connexion, the recent establishment of diplomatic relations between the People's Republic of China and France was considered yet another important event favourable to the achievement of peaceful co-existence among nations with different social systems and to the cause of world peace.

"The two sides were glad to note that ever since the Bandung Conference there have been unprecedented developments in the national independence movements in Asia and Africa. Both sides re-affirmed their resolute support to all peoples who are struggling to fight colonialism in all its forms, and to win and safeguard national independence.

"The two sides considered that one of the most urgent problems facing the newly independent countries of Asia and Africa is one of consolidating their newly won independence and building up their independent national economy. They are convinced that these countries will be able to achieve these goals mainly by depending on the efforts of their peoples and on their own material resources and by carrying on economic relations with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. They considered that there is need to beware of attempts by colonialists and neo-colonialists to dominate newly independent countries by taking advantage of the financial and economic difficulties with which they are faced.

"The two sides were glad to note that the situation along the Sino-Indian border has eased. They expressed the hope that China and India would find it possible to enter into direct negotiations on the basis of the Colombo proposals so as to remove progressively the differences between them and finally achieve a friendly settlement of the Sino-Indian boundary question.

"The two sides also reviewed the relations between their two countries and noted with satisfaction the steady, all-round development of these relations, which are increasingly characterised by the spirit of friendship, mutual understanding and co-operation. The economic and technical co-operation between the two countries has also made significant progress since the conclusion of the Agreement between the Government of the Union of Burma and the Government of the People's Republic of China on Economic and Technical Co-operation in January, 1961. The implementation of some of the projects envisaged in the Agreement is now well underway, while preparations are in hand for the implementation of others. The two sides were gratified that the economic and technical co-operation between their two countries has thus been successful, encountering no obstacle or difficulty, thanks to the good understanding between their two peoples and their regard for each other.

"General Ne Win and Premier Chou En-lai expressed their satisfaction at the opportunity afforded by the visit of meeting together and renewing personal contacts, convinced that such personal contacts and exchanges of views between responsible leaders of nations contribute to the promotion of international understanding and trust.

"On behalf of Chairman Liu Shao-chi and in his own name, Premier Chou En-lai renewed the invitation to General Ne Win to visit China at a time convenient to him. General Ne Win re-affirmed his acceptance of the invitation and expressed thanks for it."

CAMBODIA

A. Invitation To USA For Talks Withdrawn: The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, on March 9 declared that he had failed in his plans for an international conference in Geneva and a four-nation conference in Pnom Penh.

He said USA and "our neighbours, including Laos, refuse to recognize our frontiers and consider us as a non-existent State," adding that the United States had sent him a counter-proposal which was "an immense hoax."

He also disclosed that Prince Souvanna Phouma's recent visit to Cambodia had given him "decisive proof" of the existence of a concerted anti-Cambodian movement which included even Laos.

He said this had forced him to tell the Laotian Premier that in case of a "four-nation plot" not only would Cambodia recognize North Viet-Nam as "Viet-Nam's sole representative" but would also grant similar recognition to the Pathet Lao in respect of Laos.

He said he had withdrawn his invitation to Washington for a four-nation conference (of USA, South Viet-Nam, Thailand and Cambodia) on Cambodian neutrality.

On March 12 he said that Cambodia's misunderstanding with USA had become such that he saw no point in receiving the US Ambassador to discuss the proposal for a four-nation conference.

He made the statement while referring to the view that the convening of the four-nation conference he had once proposed for guaranteeing Cambodia's borders would have been made easier if he had received the Ambassador.

Earlier on March 7, he had declared in a speech at Battambang in north-west Cambodia that he welcomed "the more or less clear" agreement of the United States, South Viet-Nam and Thailand to accept his call for a four-nation conference, and that "hope had been born" with the new positions of the three Governments even though "chances were slim" that the conference would succeed.

Parliament's Support:

On March 12, Parliament unanimously adopted a resolution expressing unreserved support for the attitude of the Prince towards USA and its allies.

The resolution asked the Government to negotiate with the Government of North Viet-Nam and with the Pathet Lao forces in Laos for an agreement on the neutral status and territorial integrity of Cambodia.

On the occasion of the re-opening of Parliament on March 17, the Prince said: ".... I wish to emphasize once more to the world which is now listening to Cambodia that even if we come to establish diplomatic relations with the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and to sign with it a Friendship Treaty consisting among other things of mutual respect and support of the territorial integrity of the two countries in their present frontiers, this will not in any way mean that we will become allies of the socialist camp. This will not mean in any way that we will join, even in the least, in the struggle that the National Liberation Front of Viet-cong or any others carry out or support in South Viet-Nam against some forces or some Westerners or pro-Westerners.

"We are and we will be strictly neutral and non-aligned in the struggle in South Viet-Nam and in Laos, though we prepare ourselves to have more formal bonds of friendship with the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and eventually with Neo Lao Haksat (Pathet Lao).

"It is the free world itself which has woven these bonds by refusing to us our right, even our neutrality and our territorial integrity recognized, guaranteed and controlled internationally, by showering on us sweet words while sabotaging all the prospects of the Geneva or Pnom Penh conferences on Cambodia.

"There is absolutely no question for us to allow the presence or the transit on our territory of foreign armed elements or the organizers of propaganda or subversion neither of Viet-cong nor of Pathet Lao nor of the partisans of the Saigon regime or Khmers Serei.

"I affirm solemnly that we will not participate at all in this war and that we will not take sides ideologically, as we remain out of the Marxist camp and the Western camp. We will not favour in our territory either of these camps. Our agreements with the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and eventually with other friends and socialist neighbours have only this objective.

"It is now evident that by stating that they are ready to recognize our neutrality, but in refusing to control it, the Anglo-Saxons and our neighbours were prepared, even if the Geneva Conference was held and solemnly recognized our neutrality, to accuse us ultimately of being not really neutral, allies of communism, accomplices of the Viet-cong etc. If the Anglo-Saxons and our neighbours had really wanted to neutralise us, they would have accepted with joy, gratitude and earnestness our offer to sacrifice our internal sovereignty in favour of a general control of our territory."

The same day (March 17) he told a news conference that his Government would refuse to attend the proposed Geneva Conference on Cambodian neutrality unless it was held within a week.

He said: "If the Socialist and Western Powers want to neutralise us, they have only to go to Geneva immediately."

He said, because of North Viet-Nam's failure to give a clear answer to Cambodia's request for recognition of her present frontiers, he had agreed to "resume the dialogue with Saigon."

FORMOSA

A. KMT Policy On International Issues: In an interview to the correspondent of The Hindu, Madras, published on March 20, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek explained his Administration's attitude to various international issues.

He condemned the Peking regime for its attack on India and said that when his Government returned to the mainland it would undo the wrongs.

He pointed out that because his Government followed a good-neighbour policy "there was no conflict between our Government and yours when our Government was on the mainland". He conceded that problems might come up from time to time between the two peoples, "but they can be amicably settled."

He cited the aggression on India by Chinese Communists as merely "another proof of the truth that freedom and communism cannot live side by side in peace."

He also answered questions on other world problems. About the possible effects of France's recognition of Peking on seating in UN he stated: "We are not unduly concerned over the outcome at the General Assembly this year or the next. We are quite confident about this."

The question did not originate with the French recognition, he pointed out, but had been there for years, coming up year after year before the General Assembly. "However, if—and this is a big if—the Chinese Communists do get in, then UN will no longer be true to the principles on which it was founded." He did not indicate what action his Government would take in that eventuality.

Asked about the possible effects on the non-Communist world of the Sino-Soviet rift, he drew attention to the fact that while there might be differences between the two countries, "this has not caused any change in their common objective to bury capitalism, conquer the world and enslave mankind."

About plans for recovering control over the mainland, he stated: "Our preparations for recovery of the mainland have been ready and could be put into action at any time. Further preparations are progressing."

B. Legal Status Of Taiwan: A spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Patrick Pichi Sun, declared in Taipeh on March 6 that "insofar as the Republic of China is concerned, there is no question whatsoever concerning the legal status of Taiwan since its restoration to China in 1945."

He made this comment when asked about a question of this nature raised in the Japanese Diet on March 1.

He said: "In order to make the matter unmistakably clear, we wish to re-iterate the following:

"When China declared war on Japan on December 9 1941, she nullified all the Treaties with Japan including the Treaty of Shimonoseki in which Taiwan and Penghu were ceded to Japan after the first Sino-Japanese War.

"Article 4 of the Sino-Japanese Peace Treaty of April 28, 1952 stipulated: 'It is recognized that all treaties, conventions and agreements concluded between China and Japan before December 9, 1941 have become null and void as a consequence of the war.'

"The return of Taiwan to China was clearly stipulated in the Cairo Declaration of December 1, 1943, and re-affirmed in the Potsdam Declaration of July 25, 1945, which Japan accepted in her instrument of surrender on September 2, 1945.

"In accordance with Article 2 of the Sino-Japanese Peace Treaty, Japan has renounced all right, title, and claim to Taiwan and Penghu.

"China re-established her sovereignty over Taiwan on October 25, 1945, and since then has administered Taiwan as a province of the Republic of China."

C. New Deputy National Defence Minister: General Chiang Ching-kuo was appointed Deputy Minister of National Defence by the Executive Yuan on March 12.

A Minister without Portfolio, General Chiang succeeded Admiral Liang Hsu-chao, who is to be Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

General Chiang is President Chiang's elder son, whose other posts in the Formosa Government include those of Deputy Secretary-General of the National Defence Council and head of the Vocational Assistance Commission for Retired Servicemen.

INDONESIA

A. Volunteers To "Crush" Malaysia: President Sukarno on March 16 ordered youths to register as volunteers to help the country crush Malaysia.

Addressing about 400 political, regional and military leaders, members of the Diplomatic Corps and foreign correspondents in Djakarta, he said: "Tengku Abdul Rehman (the Malaysian Prime Minister) has made it clear to me he does not want to talk to me to settle the Malaysian dispute.

"He even declared mobilization in Malaysia. Now in response to his action I am calling on all Indonesian youths to register themselves as volunteers and we shall train them not only in the military field but also as a means to increase production."

He was applauded when he said: "We must have a mass movement of volunteers to create a self-defence power. During the West Irian campaign (against the Dutch) I also ordered the youth of Indonesia to volunteer, and seven million volunteered to be dropped into West Irian. Now I am asking them to register themselves again to crush Malaysia."

He denied accusations that he was a trouble-maker or a warmonger and said: "I am just the mouthpiece of the Indonesian people and what I say is the voice of the people."

The House of Representatives unanimously adopted on March 17 President Sukarno's call for volunteers to crush Malaysia, and members said they would join the movement. Leaders of youth organizations also expressed their support.

British View On Sabah Cease-fire:

The newspaper, Indonesian Herald, reported on March 22 that Britain had told Indonesia that President Sukarno's decision to mobilize volunteers to crush Malaysia made the cease-fire in Sabah no longer effective.

The paper, which usually reflects the views of the Indonesian Foreign Office, said that the British reaction was conveyed to the Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, on March 20 in a message from the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler.

The message was delivered during a 15-minute meeting between Dr. Subandrio and the British Ambassador, Sir Andrew Gilchrist.

IRAN

A. ECAFE Annual Session: The annual session of the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) was opened in Tehran on March 2 by the Shah of Iran.

Mr. Ali Naqi Alikhani of Iran was elected Chairman, Mr. Abdul Hakim Tabibi of Afghanistan First Vice-Chairman, and Mr. J. R. Marshall of New Zealand Second Vice-Chairman.

Attending the opening ceremony were several delegates and observers from the 28 members and associate members of the Commission, other UN member-States, UN agencies and non-Governmental organizations.

Opening the session in the council chamber of the Senate of Iran, the Shah said that Asian nations were fighting against undue privileges and clamouring for rapid changes in their social and economic conditions and were yearning for social justice, equal opportunity and better living standards.

A message received from the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, was read to the meeting by U Nyun, Executive Secretary of the Commission.

U Thant observed that the Commission had become a forum for the discussion of Asian problems and added that he hoped to visit Iran and attend the Conference towards the end of its current session.

After expressing thanks to the Shah and to the Iranian Government, U Nyun stated that the session marked another year of successful international effort and significant progress in specific activities.

Emphasizing the importance of regional co-operation and organization, he said that a regional concept would allow more realistic and effective application of UN resources and procedures. He added that it was now recognized as one of the best means of assisting economic and social progress.

Asian development, he stated, was lagging behind targets set by the UN Development Decade.

After declaring that population growth might upset all economic development efforts, he stated that to achieve the desired 5 per cent growth in annual income by 1970, as stipulated by the Development Decade, countries would have to devote 15 per cent of their national resources to investment, but were in fact investing 6 to 9 per cent.

He said that the Commission was assisting countries in their planning efforts and helping economic growth mainly through trade expansion and industrialization. Excellent progress had been made in the Mekong development project and under the direction of the Mekong Co-ordination Committee the investment programme had moved ahead of schedule and construction was now beginning in all four riparian countries.

He added that resources had increased in 1963 by $14 million to $51 million and that construction plans had been worked out for further projects that would cost $73 million.

Review Of Regional Problems:

All the delegates attending the session emphasized the importance of regional co-operation among ECAFE members and wider and more efficient co-operation with the Secretariat.

Delegates from Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand, Burma, Japan, Ceylon, Nepal and India took the floor.

The Pakistani delegate, Mr. Tayyeb Husain said he hoped that the UN Trade and Development Conference in Geneva would pay particular attention to development programmes for the under-developed countries.

Mrs. Medina Lacson de Leon, head of the Philippines delegation, discussing the economic situation in Asia said Philippines' experience confirmed that economic progress was principally based on industrial production.

The Thai delegate, Mr. Bunchana Attakor, insisted on the importance of regional co-operation. He added that during the past year his country's economy had progressed satisfactorily.

Burma's delegate, U Ba Gale said his country had developed a local industry sufficient to cover its needs. As far as increasing the country's exports was concerned, collaboration with other ECAFE countries was an important factor.

The Japanese delegate, Mr. Hisanag Shimandzu, said Japan was in favour of the creation of a regional development bank, a suggestion already made at the Manila Conference. But, he added, the bank would have to give priority to financing regional development projects.

The Indian delegate, Mr. D. K. Srinivasan, emphasized the need for a study of import substitution and export diversification. He said these two factors should be regarded as an integral part of the development programme and not simply as a means of equalising the balance of payments.

At the afternoon session the heads of the delegations from Malaysia, South Korea, Brunei, Taiwan, Australia and Hong Kong took the floor.

Their general theme was the need for co-operation between ECAFE members, and the substitution of local production for imports.

The Malaysian delegate recalled that rubber accounted for 90 per cent of his country's exports and that the current development of plastics on the world markets was having considerable ill-effects on Malaysia.

It was for this reason, he added, that an investment of $2,900,000 had been allocated for the development of a private section of the plastics industry in the country's Second Five-Year Plan.

On March 4, delegates from New Zealand, Laos, Cambodia, Iran, Afghanistan and Western Samoa reported to the Conference on the economic progress made by their countries and the problems facing them. The New Zealand delegate, Mr. Foss Shanahan, called for the use of scientific methods to increase food production.

Joint Front Of Developing Countries—Indian Proposal:

On March 8, the Indian delegate, Mr. Manubhai Shah, proposed the formation of a joint front comprising all the developing countries during the UN Conference on International Trade and Development in Geneva.

The aim of the front would be to secure complete removal of tariff barriers imposed by the highly developed countries. Mr. Shah's view was supported by Indonesia, Pakistan and Hong Kong.

Mr. Shah said the high tariffs imposed by industrialized countries on the import of raw materials created difficulties for the developing countries. As a result, there was a slump in their exports, a steady rise in their deficit in the balance of payments and for want of industrial equipment, they were forced to import manufactured goods. He said the remedy was removal of tariff barriers.

He called for access to markets of developed countries for semi-manufactured goods of the developing countries and for machinery to stabilize prices of primary products. If there was a drop in the prices of primary products, it would offset the financial aid received by developing countries.

Discussion On Geneva Conference On Trade And Development:

Discussions began on March 11 on a resolution on the forthcoming UN Conference on Trade and Development in Geneva.

The resolution urged developing countries to consult and co-operate closely among themselves to reach solutions on trade and development problems. Most delegates urged that it be adopted unanimously.

One of the co-sponsors of the resolution, Mr. Manubhai Shah of India, said it achieved unanimity of approach for the ECAFE countries at the Geneva Conference.

Developed nations were urged to take the following steps:

(1) Progressive reduction and early elimination of all barriers impeding developing countries' exports, without reciprocal concessions on their part.

(2) No new barriers to these exports.

(3) Reduction and general elimination of tariff differences between raw materials and products, processed from these raw materials in developing countries.

(4) Help in increasing the exports of primary products by developing countries; stabilization of prices at reasonable levels; and free access to the exports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods from developing countries.

(5) Non-discriminatory preferential treatment to imports of products originating in developing countries.

(6) Improved financial resources at favourable terms to enable developing countries to increase their imports of the capital goods and industrial raw materials, essential for their economic development.

Mr. Shah said the resolution did not seek to zone or create trade blocs but sought solutions for existing problems through joint endeavour.

Petroleum Institute For Asia And Far East:

The Conference adopted on March 15 a motion sponsored by Pakistan, Iran, Afghanistan and Thailand for the creation of a petroleum institute for Asia and the Far East, and requesting the assistance of the UN Special Fund for the purpose.

The session also debated water resources' development and flood control in the ECAFE region and reclamation, utilization, and development of deltaic areas.

Session Ends:

The session ended on March 17 after unanimously adopting a resolution urging a universal campaign against illiteracy.

It then agreed to New Zealand's invitation to play host to the 21st ECAFE session, to be held in 1965 at a date to be fixed in accord with the ECAFE Secretariat.

The Assembly also adopted a 250-page report on the work of the 20th session and on forecast for 1965. The report is to be submitted to the UN Economic and Social Council.

The draft text of the report was approved page by page with only minor amendments.

Addressing the Conference at the closing ceremony, the Iranian Premier, Mr. Hassan Ali Mansour, commented at length on what is henceforth known as the "Tehran resolution".

The resolution, adopted by the Conference the previous week, urged the developing countries of the ECAFE region to take a common stand before the UN-sponsored World Trade and Development Conference opening at Geneva on March 23, and called on the industrialized countries to facilitate the growth of the exports of the less favoured nations.

Mr. Mansour said that "the Tehran resolution, born in the wake of the resolutions of Brasilia and Addis Ababa, constitutes the final link in the chain which unites the developing countries in their approach to the problems of accelerated growth and provides us with an invaluable tool for attending the UN Conference in a constructive and dynamic spirit."

The adoption of the Tehran resolution was the salient feature of the session.

The resolution, sponsored by nine Asian nations, amounted to a "charter" for the developing countries, and also contained an appeal to the industrialized countries to remove their tariff barriers so as to favour the economic growth of the less-developed countries by granting bigger outlets for their exports.

The industrialized countries belonging to ECAFE (which include USSR, Britain, the United States and France) expressed some reservations regarding the resolution, which was nevertheless adopted without any formal opposition.

The general problems of Asian economic development were discussed at length, but particular emphasis was placed on such points as the Mekong River development project and the building of the 1,200 kilometre-long Asian Highway which will link Europe with Saigon and Singapore. Resolutions adopted by the Commission urged the speeding up of these projects.

The general report noted that "deep concern" had been expressed by ECAFE countries with regard to what was described as the "policy of agricultural protectionism" of the European Common Market countries, as well as the tariffs, quantitative restrictions, internal taxation and their association with 18 African countries.

Economic Survey For 1963:

The economic Survey of Asia and the Far East for 1963, prepared by the ECAFE Secretariat for the Commission's annual session, was made public on March 2. The Survey served as a factual and analytical basis for the discussion of the Asian economic situation which occupied the first days of the session.

The Survey was published in two parts. A special study, contained in Part I, examined in detail the experience and problems of import substitution and export diversification of the ECAFE region as the developing countries of the region were seeking to alleviate their balance of payments difficulties through these means.

The Survey for 1963 noted that in spite of the continuous increase in the quantity of exports after 1953, the trade deficit of the developing ECAFE countries had increased three-fold by 1962 to $2,700 million. These large deficits had so far been financed primarily by official capital inflow in the form of grants and loans supplemented by private capital inflow and reduction of foreign assets.

However, the foreign assets of most countries were already very low and the inflow of foreign capital was reduced in 1961 and 1962.

Moreover, there were difficulties in the way of expanding the export of primary products, among them the increasing production of these products in the developed countries, technological progress which reduces the volume of primary products used in manufacturing, the introduction of subtitles, and tariff and other import restrictions. These were some of the problems encountered by the developing countries in implementing their programmes of import substitution and export diversification.

The Survey pointed out that import substitution and export diversification were designed not only to meet balance of payments difficulties but also to constitute an integral part of the process of industrialization and development. If well nourished and supported with adequate training facilities and infra-structures, these import substituting industries may carry the seeds of general economic growth. The increase in investment opportunities may also help to promote additional savings, investment and income.

Nevertheless, planning for import substitution should be exercised with extreme care in order not to waste scarce resources or lead to frustration and disappointment and reduce the initiative and momentum for future growth. These new productive activities should aim at gradually lowering the cost and improving the quality in order finally to achieve international standards.

The study also pointed out that especially for countries with smaller domestic markets, the possibility of export at an early stage in order to achieve internal and external economies should be considered and in this respect the problems of cost and quality were particularly important.

The Survey illustrated the different methods and points of emphasis in selecting industries for development, with Hong Kong and the Federation of Malaya on one extreme, depending primarily on choices of private entrepreneurs, emphasizing consumer goods industries, and with mainland China and India on the other, depending primarily on government planning, emphasizing heavy industries.

It pointed out the different background situations leading to the divergent policies. It also observed that policies for selecting industries and setting up priorities of development applicable to countries with large domestic markets and large and varied resources such as China and India may not always be suitable for smaller countries.

The study said that during the period from 1953-54 to 1961-62, import substitution, without reference to cost of production, was achieved through domestic production of food in Ceylon and the Philippines and of all final consumption goods in most developing countries except the Republic of Korea. Imports of materials and capital goods were replacing imports of consumption goods.

There had been a drop in the percentage of income originating from primary production and an increase in the percentage of income originating from manufacturing, and there had been some diversification of export from materials to manufactured products.

The most marked import substitution was in the field of manufacturing. Statistics showed that this covered a wide range of commodities, including basic consumption goods such as sugar, textiles and footwear; durable consumption goods such as electric fans, bicycles, refrigerators and air-conditioners; chemical products such as acids, alkalies, fertilizers, petroleum products, paints, paper, rubber tyres and tubes; basic metals such as steel and aluminium; other construction material such as cement, plate glass and plywood; and machinery such as sugar machinery, textile machinery, prime movers, diesel engines and machine tools.

Many of these commodities not only substituted imports but were also exported.

Available statistics showed that the rate of increase of export of newly introduced manufactured goods was faster than the rate of increase of traditional exports. It was therefore the export of these manufactured goods that held out brighter prospects for the developing countries in the future.

Export of newly developed agricultural products and handicrafts, though relatively small in amount, had been successful in several countries and should not be neglected.

Export statistics also showed that in a much larger portion of newly developed manufactured goods than traditional exports had been traded within the developing ECAFE region. Intra-regional trade, therefore, should increase with further industrialization.

For the established exports, however, the developing ECAFE countries had been taking a reduced share; they are giving way to Eastern Europe, Africa, Middle East and Japan. Increasing attention should therefore also be paid to these expanding markets.

The successful replacement of imports by domestic production and even the export of many articles did not necessarily mean that the cost and quality of the products were up to international standards. Many of these productive activities were protected by high tariffs and quantitative import and exchange controls, and exports were made possible by various incentive schemes.

The Survey also pointed out the differences in the effects of import tariffs and quantitative restrictions in promoting import substitute industries.

The problems encountered by import substitution and export diversification, and in fact, industrialization, as pointed out in the Survey, fell primarily into four categories: (a) the human factor, including administration, entrepreneurship and trained and disciplined labour; (b) technical know-how; (c) availability of markets; and (d) capital supply.

These problems had to be solved primarily by actions of individual countries, but regional co-operation may also help in certain aspects, for which various proposals were outlined in the Survey. Some of these proposals which had already been presented to the Ministerial Conference on Regional Economic Co-operation which met under ECAFE's auspices in Manila in December, 1963 were outlined.

Part II of the Survey, which dealt with the current situation, reported that food production in the developing ECAFE region, after rising by 3.6 per cent a year between 1955 and 1961, had risen during the past two years at an annual rate of less than 0.5 per cent, as against population increase around 2.4 per cent. Per capita food production, even now, barely equalled the 1934-38 level.

The present rate of increase was far from the goal of the UN Development Decade, which calls for an annual rate of increase of agricultural production of 4 per cent a year, and will seriously affect the attainment of the 5 per cent target rate of increase of national income set forth by the UN Development Decade.

Manufacturing production in the developing ECAFE region appeared to increase more rapidly between the first half of 1962 and the first half of 1963 (about 7.7 per cent), as compared with the average rate of increase between 1953 and 1962. Even then, it could not compensate for the slow rate of increase in agricultural production in order to achieve an annual increase of national income of 5 per cent. Governments may consider the short-fall of production and income targets in the early 1960's as a challenge to redouble efforts in order to accelerate growth rates and achieve the goals set by the UN for the Development Decade.

The Survey noted that 1963 was a relatively good year for trade. There were price or quantity gains for most primary exports and, in spite of restrictions on textile imports by some developed countries further gains for manufactured exports. Many countries thus enjoyed favourable or easy financial conditions but others, because of higher defence requirements, greater development needs, or balance of payments difficulties, had to tighten financial conditions.

In its concluding chapter on regional co-operation, the Survey noted that although full co-ordination of national developments plans of the countries of the region was an ideal to strive for, the realization of this ideal would take time.

Partial co-operative measures could be implemented in the interim which would materially assist the economic development of the participating countries.

To promote technical co-operation, it suggested the establishment of an Asian Institute of Management to train top management personnel and an Asian Institute of Technology.

These Institutes would adapt the proven production techniques of developed countries to the special circumstances of the region and study ways for utilizing indigenous materials now going to waste. Both institutes would be financed by the countries of the region.

To strengthen operative co-operation, the Survey proposed the establishment of regional industries that would serve the needs of several countries where production, especially of heavy industries and basic chemicals might exceed the capacity of domestic markets. Such a division of labour would lead to improvement in efficiency, quality and cost.

IRAQ

A. General Amnesty For Kurdish Supporters: On March 16, the Government announced a general amnesty for all those who had sided with the Kurds in Northern Iraq during the Kurdish revolt.

The announcement said this was in the spirit of its November 18, 1963 declaration and the Cease-fire Proclamation of February 10, 1964. The amnesty applied to any one who took part in the revolt in any way between September 19, 1961 and February 10, 1964. All legal proceedings against them were cancelled.

The Government also announced administrative decentralization within the next two months for all Northern Provinces, which were the scene of the Kurdish revolt.

B. New Rail Link: The Prime Minister, Lt-Gen. Taher Yahia inaugurated on March 10 the wide-guage railway line linking Baghdad to Basra.

Baghdad Radio said that the 542-kilometre-long line had cost 40,000,000 dinars, of which the Soviet Union had contributed 18,500,000 dinars. Three thousand, eight hundred employees and workers were engaged on the project, which took four years.

The line was built under a technical aid agreement concluded with the Soviet Union in 1959. The Russian Deputy Minister of Communications and Development attended the inauguration ceremony.

The new line reduces the railway distance between Basra and Baghdad from 570 to 542 kilometres. It also reduces the time of the journey to six hours, instead of 14 hours on the narrow-gauge line.

Passing through the desolate Ahwar area, which extends 40 kilometres south of Baghdad, the line was intended by the Iraqi Government to bring civilization to this still primitive land which had not seen any other mechanical means of transport.

Thirty locomotives imported from Czechoslovakia and 1,400 wagons imported from Poland will operate on the line.

Equipped with automatic signals, the line passes over more than 600 bridges; 1,200 houses equipped with electric power, water and sanitation have been built along the line.

C. Agricultural And Industrial Programmes: A Baghdad despatch on March 15 gave details of Iraq's agricultural and industrial programmes.

The new Five-Year Plan superseded the provisional four-year Economic Plan from 1961 to 1966. It earmarked 20.3 per cent of the total allocation of the Plan to agriculture and 30 per cent to industry. The annual allocations of the Plan are as follows:

Amount ID.	Year
108,056,000	1962-1963
117,624,000	1963-1964
119,605,000	1964-1965
113,916,000	1965-1966

An amount of 112,990,000 dinars has been earmarked for agriculture. There are 56 projects in this sector. Six projects are for the construction of dams on the Tigris and Euphrates and for water storage with an allotment of 14,900,000 dinars, 23 for the improvement of irrigation and drainage systems with a sum of 66,425,000 dinars, five for the increase for agricultural wealth with a sum of 6,583,000 dinars, six for agrarian reform costing 4,306,000 dinars, three for the construction of silos with 3,276,000 dinars and one project for the utilization of underground water with 5,750,000 dinars.

As for the supplementary projects, they include seven projects for the Ministry of Agriculture and one project for the Ministry of Agrarian Reform. An amount of 11,250,000 dinars was allotted for the first group and 500,000 dinars for the second.

The projects of water storage cover the completion of barrages at Dokan, Darbandikhan, and Habbaniyah and the carrying out of investigations on the sites of Al Tharthar, Al Fathah, Iski Mosul, and Upper Euphrates. They also cover the preparation of maps and the construction of either Al Tharthar or the dam of Upper Euphrates with Al Fathah dam or Iski Mosul upon the Tigris. A sum of 166,786,000 dinars has been allocated for this sector. The sum is equal to 30 per cent of the total funds of the Plan. This sector is provided with 55 principal projects and a number of supplementary ones.

They are as follows:

10 for chemical industries—ID36,450,000; one for medical materials—ID3,800,000; one for tobacco industry—ID1,650,000; three for food industries—ID4,810,000; two for constructional industries—ID6,000,000; two for electrical industries—ID4 946,000; three for mineral industries—ID17,564,000; six for textile industries—ID23,733,000; one for oil refining—ID10,600,000; three for metal industries —ID17,564,000; four for mining projects—ID8,850,000; three for generating and transportation of electric power—ID2,700,000; one supplementary project for the Ministry of Municipality—ID4,300,000; one for the Ministry of Commerce—ID260,000; and one for the Ministry of Social Affairs—ID200,000.

The detailed Economic Plan attaches much importance to the industrial sector in the light of the fact that economic development and the elevation of the living standards, both socially and economically, rests largely upon industrialization and the utilization of both mineral and natural resources and human energy as well. The Ministry of Planning has therefore adopted a new economic policy for the flourishing of industrial and productive projects side by side with the development of agriculture and the various utilities.

Most of the projects are in various stages of construction. Some of the projects have already been completed.

ISRAEL

A. ECM Offer Of Tariff Concessions: At a meeting in Brussels on March 10, the Ministers of the European Economic Community agreed to offer Israel tariff concessions on certain finished products and fruit and "special arrangements" with the countries of the Community on other commodities.

The new EEC proposals include a 20 per cent tariff suspension for three years on 23 finished products such as chemicals, clothing made of synthetic materials, asbestos, tyres and tubes and aluminium frames; a 33 per cent tariff suspension on avocado pears and a 40 per cent tariff suspension on grapefruit. Eggs and oranges are the subject of "special arrangements". As regards oranges, the subject of a tariff concession will be re-opened should the EEC enter into an agreement with Spain or a North African country, when it will offer Israel an equitable arrangement.

Concessions on 15 other products comprise the abolition of quotas on six industrial and two agricultural items and speedier reduction of tariffs on seven items of which six are agricultural, in countries where customs duties are now above the EEC's target level for a common external tariff. Semi-finished products are not mentioned in the new proposals. A permanent Israeli delegation to the EEC would be established to review relations at least once a year.

Under the EEC's constitution, Greece must be consulted before negotiations with Israel can begin, but the talks can only be delayed, not vetoed.

Mr. Paul-Henri Spaak, the Belgian Foreign Minister, said: "The agreement now in sight between the Market and Israel is an honourable one and there is no reason why it should not lead to a global agreement". In Israel, the proposals are regarded as a step in the right direction but it is certain that the Israeli negotiators will press for better terms when the talks open. Meanwhile, it remains to be seen what effect the outcome of the negotiations will have on Israel's Arab neighbours.

In February the Syrian Government lodged a strong protest with the EEC Ambassadors in Damascus against the extension of preferential trade status to Israel.

B. Foreign Trade In 1963: Statistics available on March 15 show that Israel's exports in 1963 rose by 25 per cent over the 1962 total of $280,000,000, reaching the record figure of $351,000,000.

Over the past four years Israel's exports have doubled the 1959 total of $179 million. Citrus, citrus products and diamonds accounted for 60 per cent of the 1963 exports and the feeling is that these commodities have now reached their exportable limit. Exports of citrus grew by $26 million over 1962 to stand at $75 million, a rise of 53 per cent; diamond exports grew by $28 million to stand at $119 million (32 per cent); other industrial products excluding diamonds rose by $20 million to $144 million (17 per cent) and agricultural produce excluding citrus dropped by $4.8 million to $14 million, a fall of 26 per cent. This decrease was due to a decline in the export of eggs from $6.5 million to $3.5 million, peanuts fell by $500,000 and the export of hard wheat which earned $500,000 in 1962 ceased altogether. On the other hand, exports of processed foods showed a marked increase of 22 per cent to total $23 million. Mineral exports rose by $3.3 million to $12.3 million; phosphates nearly doubled to $812,000 and bromine compounds also rose by some $150,000 despite higher tariffs on these commodities in the Common Market countries. Yarn exports rose by 14 per cent to $13.2 million, but clothing exports dropped by 12 per cent to $11.7 million due to a decline in demand for rainwear.

The leading customer in 1963 was Great Britain which took 13.5 per cent of Israel's exports valued at $47.3 million, followed by USA with 13.3 per cent worth $46.6 million and West Germany continued to hold third place with 11.4 per cent of exports valued at $40.1 million. In 1962 USA bought $42.4 million worth of Israeli goods, Great Britain $37 million and West Germany $28 million. The proportion of exports sent to Common Market countries continued to grow from 26.4 per cent in 1962 to 30.8 per cent in 1963 ($108 million).

The export target set for 1964 by the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr. Sapir, is $410 million, with an ultimate aim of $900 million by 1970. Speaking in the Knesset he expressed regret that Israel's 1962 trade deficit of $320 million had not been reduced in 1963; one measure designed to promote exports, he announced, would be the sale to private interests of the foreign trading companies set up by the Government. The Government's import liberalization policy would be continued in order to force local industry to become more competitive and he warned that inefficient companies would not be protected indefinitely.

B. Trade Pact With Cambodia: Japan and Cambodia extended on February 15 their trade pact for another year.

The Trade Agreement, signed in February, 1960, has been extended twice.

Japan exported $14,520,000 worth of goods to Cambodia in 1963. Its imports amounted to $3,950,000.

C. Restrictions On Remittances Lifted: The Finance Ministry said on March 11 that foreign investors in Japan would be free to remit home the profits accruing after April 1 on yen investments.

The repatriation of principal and of interest accrued before April may be made in five annual instalments after the sums are first transferred to exchange non-residents' yen accounts. Yen-basis investments amount to $140 million and interest accrued thus far totals $40 million.

The system of foreign investment on a yen basis was abolished on July 1, 1963.

KOREA (South)

A. Budget Estimates: South Korea has decided on a Budget for the new financial year totalling 69,853.35 million won—34.98 million won below the original estimate.

It was hoped to increase revenue "through more intensive administrative efforts" and to keep additional expenditure to a minimum, except for expenditure on compulsory education.

The Budget includes provision for increases in Government employees' wages.

The price of rice has been increased by 24.2 per cent, and railway charges have been raised by 15 per cent, but the proposal to increase the oil fuel tax has been abandoned, at a cost to the revenue of 1,200 million won.

The difference between the 15 per cent increase in railway charges and the originally planned increase of 20 per cent is estimated to lead to a revenue loss of 1,800 million won; against this, a five per cent increase in corporation taxes is expected to yield 800 million won and higher import duties are to provide another 1,000 million won.

B. Industrial Complex: The Ministry of Construction is planning a giant export industries complex aimed at boosting the nation's annual export earnings by more than $28 million.

This complex, to be built at Bupyon, Seoul, will be composed mostly of light industrial plants to produce such exportable consumer goods.

(Far East Trade, London)

C. Fishery Loan Agreements: Contracts following the fishery loan agreement with France and Italy have been signed by the Fishery Development Corporation in Seoul.

Under these contracts, South Korea will obtain 91 high-sea fishing vessels aggregating 22,724 tons from France and Italy and export each year $20 million worth of fish caught by these vessels to USA.

A. State Of Economy And Development Programme: An account of the state of Malaysia's economy, its pitfalls and prospects was contained in the Budget speech of the Finance Minister, Mr. Tan Siew Sin, on December 16, 1963.

[His Budget estimates and taxation proposals appeared on page 5635].

The following is the review of economic developments contained in his speech:

Despite the deterioration in the terms of trade, 1963 was a year of high economic activity domestically. In the first six months of the year, imports of machinery and transport equipment had risen by 5 per cent and 6 per cent respectively, whilst cement production had gone up by 11 per cent. Iron-ore exports were $M10 million higher in the first nine months of 1963 than in the corresponding period of 1962. Present indications were that in 1964 iron-ore exports to Japan, the importer of 99 per cent of Malaysia's iron-ore, would possibly exceed the 7 million tons expected to be shipped in 1963.

It was likely that private investment was now averaging $M580 million a year. Under these circumstances it was probable that the Malayan Five-Year Plan target figure of $M2,900 million of private investment might well be exceeded. Good progress was being made in Malaya in the pioneer industry sector. Fourteen pioneer certificates had been issued in the first nine months of 1963 compared with 16 in the whole of 1962. But the number of jobs created by pioneer firms (1,000) was less than the 2,200 for 1962. Industries which had begun production in 1963 included chemical, plastic, petroleum product, metalware and glassware manufactures.

The deterioration in the terms of trade, coupled with the 3 per cent annual increase in population, had caused the real per capita national product between 1955 and 1963 to decline slightly. The deterioration caused by the fall in the price of rubber was one of the central facts of life in Malaysia and its effects would be felt for some years, since it would be some time before replanting yield results in the form of increased productivity. Nevertheless, the country was producing a greater volume of goods for export to counterbalance the fall in export prices. The price of rising domestic activity in the face of sluggish export growth had, however, been a deterioration in Malaysian external accounts. In the first nine months of 1963 Malaysia's exports rose by less than 4 per cent whilst imports rose by 5 per cent, compared with the figures for the same period in 1962. The trade surplus for the period was then $M156 million, a drop of $M38 million in comparison with the 1962 figures. There had, therefore, been a swing in the balance of payments. In 1962 a deficit of $M203 million had been offset by a net inflow of funds, and the foreign exchange position was little affected. It was likely, however, that the reserves would be moderately affected in 1963. Singapore normally had a deficit on merchandise accounts financed largely by an inflow of private capital as in Malaya, Sarawak and Sabah normally had a slightly favourable merchandise account, but their invisible payments usually exceeded invisible receipts, resulting in small deficiencies on current accounts. No statistical data were available for their capital accounts. Rough estimates of the balance of payments therefore indicated that Malaysia as a whole had a deficiency with the rest of the world on current account of $M350 million in 1962. In 1963 it was estimated that this deficiency would be in the order of $M400 million, and that in 1964 it would be slightly larger.

Mr. Tan Siew Sin pointed out that, although Indonesia's economic confrontation had had adverse effects in Indonesia (their unprocessed and ungraded export commodities had piled up, their imports were disrupted and prices even of essentials had soared), there had also been adverse effects in Malaysia. It was estimated that stoppage of trade for a full year would lead to a direct reduction in Malaysian income of $M250 million. The Malaysian economies had in fact absorbed greater shocks in the past when commodity prices had fallen, and it was clear that Indonesian confrontation could not affect total Malaysian national income by more than a small percentage. Nevertheless the impact had been concentrated in a few places where its effects had been felt sharply. The places most affected were Singapore, which had processed and handled much of Indonesia's imports and exports, and Penang, which had played a similar role. Province Wellesley and South Johore normally re-milled some Indonesian rubber and were slightly affected. In Sarawak overland imports of rubber had ceased. Sabah was only marginally affected. For Malaysia as a whole it was easy to find alternative source for petroleum supplies. The fishing industry had, however, been affected by Indonesian piracy in the Straits of Malacca. The effect on the Malaysian cost of living had been small except for increases in some areas in vegetable and fruit prices. In the areas which were most affected there was, however, a reduced employment of about 10,000. In Singapore the Government had worked out a scheme to relieve those affected.

The episode had mainly illustrated the vulnerability of the entrepot trades of Singapore and Penang, and had shown that this must be taken into account in long-term economic planning. In this context, therefore, the proposal to establish a Malaysian Common Market was highly relevant.

Mr. Tan Siew Sin stated that, but for the decline in the rubber price, 1963 would have been a satisfactory year. The prospect for 1964 was likely to be similar to 1963. Output of main primary commodities—rubber, tin, palm oil, pineapple and timber—would possibly increase. The 1964 rice harvest might, however, be down because of a poorer rainfall pattern in 1963. Private sector investment should increase, but, depending on political developments, the effects of Indonesian confrontation might become more marked. The level of domestic activity would continue to be supported by increased public sector expenditure. The Malayan development plan would be pursued, and development expenditure accelerated in the Borneo states. The deficit in balance of payments would have to be met partly by drawing on reserves and partly by borrowing.

The expenditure estimates for 1964 for the whole of Malaysia totalled $M1,470 million. The largest increase in expenditure was on defence. The Ministry of Defences estimates had risen by $M64 million or 69 per cent over the 1963 budget. The provision for education had risen by $M26.5 million to $M256.5 million. The continued increase was mainly due to expenditure on primary schools to keep up with continually rising enrolment figures. The percentage increase in 1964 in education in Sabah would be 29.7 per cent and in Sarawak 17.6 per cent as compared with Malaya's 11.7 per cent increase. Expenditure on the police would also rise.

Malaya had not raised any foreign loan until July, 1963 when it floated a £5 million loan on the London market. This loan was immediately over-subscribed. It was possible that a $M30 to $M45 million loan would be raised in New York at a suitable time.

It was the ultimate object to set up a common Malaysian import tariff and to provide for free movement of goods in the country. It was proposed as a beginning to this end that Sarawak and Sabah should adopt the same trade classification and tariff code with effect from January 1, 1964. The harmonization of rates would not take place on that date, however, as it was the intention to proceed with harmonization in gradual stages. It was also the ultimate intention to replace the four separate income-tax ordinances by a single Malaysian Income-Tax Act. The budget for the present made only minor changes in taxation. The most important one was the raising of tax on dividends of non-residents from 30 per cent to 40 per cent—except with countries having double tax agreements with Malaysia. Certain alignments of customs duties were made as between Malaya and Singapore and these will be followed by further alignments by Sabah and Sarawak. The new revenue proposals were expected to bring in about $M8 million.

The development estimates for Malaysia totalled $M722 million. Of this $M629 million was for Malaya, including $M106 million for centrally incurred expenditure attributable to Malaysia; $M14 million for Singapore, $M57 million for Sarawak and $M21 million for Sabah. Receipts totalling $M93 million credited directly to the development fund included two gifts from Britain, of $M17.1 million for development in the Borneo states, and of $M60 million for defence. There was thus still a deficit of $M629 million. If to this sum was added the deficit of $M53 million already given as deficit on current account (after subtracting the $M8 million revenue expected as a result of the revenue proposals) the overall deficit was $M682 million, but this was expected to be reduced by a shortfall of 20 per cent on the development estimates caused by delays in implementing schemes. The over-all deficit would be met by borrowing and by drawing on reserves.

A World Bank Mission, led by Mr. Rueff, published its report on the economic aspects of the integration of the Malaysian territories on July 23, 1963. The three main findings were: that rapid industrialization and a more diversified agriculture must be encouraged; that a Malaysian Common Market for domestic products should be created, and that the Market should be protected by judicious use of tariffs.

As part of the Malaysia Agreement signed in London in July, 1963, arrangements were made for the establishment of a Common Market. These arrangements were:

(1) Current revenue duties in Singapore and Malaya should be harmonised as soon as possible.

(2) Protective duties should be introduced gradually into Singapore following the recommendations of an Advisory Tariff Board which should be established. In the first five years Singapore should be allowed to impose a delay of one year on the application of any protective duty.

(3) No new revenue should be imposed in Singapore for the first five years of Malaysia without the consent of the Singapore Government. For a further seven years Singapore might delay the application of revenue duties, but if it did so it would have to compensate the Central Government.

(4) Other special arrangements included provision for a special production tax to be imposed in low-tariff states in order to offset the lower cost of imported raw materials and provision that current Malayan export duties might continue to be applied at their present points to protect entrepot trade in rubber and other materials in Singapore.

In the progress of the Five-Year Plan launched by Malaya in 1961 there have been marked achievements. The emphasis of the plan, entailing expenditure of $M2,150 million, has been on rural development, roads, ports, utilities, industrial development and social services. There was an increase of 10 per cent in the volume of goods and services in the period 1960-62. Massive strides have been made in rural development. The Gross National Product rose by 4 per cent in 1962 from $M5,064 million to $M5,786 million.

There were increases in productivity in the two basic Malayan commodities, rubber and tin. The first increased from 736,000 tons in 1961 to 750,000 tons in 1962. Tin production in 1962 increased by 4 per cent to 56.0 thousand tons. Oil palm increased in productivity, but rice production, copra and iron-ore all declined slightly.

General domestic prices remained stable, but the price of rubber declined from 78.6 cents per lb in 1962 to 74.7 cents per lb in early 1963, since when it has fallen to 65 cents per lb. The average tin price in 1960 was £952.4 a ton, an increase of 7.2 per cent on the 1961 average.

A survey of employment completed at the end of 1962 showed that the labour force was 2,453,297—a third of the population. Of this figure 6 per cent were unemployed. Wages remained steady in most sectors, but in 1962 there was a 6 per cent increase in tin mining over 1961 levels. There was little labour unrest.

Malaya continued to receive Colombo Plan technical assistance in the form of 44 experts, 138 training awards and scholarships and 287 correspondence courses. Gifts and capital equipment under the Colombo Plan amounted to $M11.5 million. During 1962 $M7.2 million was drawn against the United Kingdom Export Credit Guarantee Department's credit of $M19 million for tele-communication projects and $M5.2 million from the United States development loan of $M30.6 million for the North Klang Straits Scheme.

In 1962-63 Singapore made excellent progress in housing and education. Despite the fall in the price of rubber, trade continued to increase. Judicious spending and increased revenue yielded a budgetary surplus and unemployment declined.

In rural areas schemes were pursued to reduce costs and increase production. Agricultural produce levels were maintained and in some cases increased. In the industrial sector output of re-milled rubber rose by 35.7 per cent to 130,561 tons and that of cigarettes by 9.7 per cent to 4.6 million lbs. The production of rubber footwear fell, however, from 2.2 million pairs to 1.9 million. The increase in house construction was reflected in the 53.3 per cent rise in the production of bricks to 71.3 million in 1962.

The budgetary position showed a surplus on Revenue Account in 1962 of $M97 million. Taxation yielded 70 per cent of the state's total revenue (including income-tax, 21 per cent, and customs duties, 26 per cent). The amount of capital formation in the private and public sectors in 1962 was $M36.5 million, mainly in industry and commerce, which accounted for 51.5 per cent of total investment. Housing accounted for 23.6 per cent, transport for 14.7 per cent and agriculture, communications and other sectors for 10.2 per cent.

Retail prices, except for a slight increase in rice prices, were constant. The number of employed workmen rose from 109,400 in 1961 to 111,300. The number of registered unemployed declined from 54,079 in 1961 to 44,673 in 1962. Average earnings increased from $M38.54 per week and 0.8 cent per hour to $M40.82 per week and 0.88 cents per hour in 1962.

Trade stood at a high level in 1962. Imports came to $M4,036 million and exports to $M3,419 million (compared with $M3,964 million and $M3,308 million in 1961). Physical volume of trade counteracted fall in commodity prices and the total value of external trade rose by 2.5 per cent. Singapore's chief trading partners continued to be Malaya, Indonesia (until September, 1963), Britain, Japan and the United States. Trade with Malaya in 1962 was 22.4 per cent of the total external trade, with Indonesia it was 14.7 per cent.

Despite the decline in the value of export commodity prices in Sarawak in 1962 there was little change in the total value of exports. The total value of exports in 1962 was $M178.3 million, slightly lower than the 1961 figure. A recession in the European market for bauxite led to a diversion of exports to Hong Kong. Although the tonnage exported was greater, its export value was less. Similarly, while the quantity of pepper exported increased, its export value declined.

Government revenue fell from $M82.6 million in 1961 to $M81.5 million in 1962. Customs and excise duties provided about half the revenues. Export duties fell but import duties increased, giving a slightly higher overall total. Expenditure increased from $M62.8 million in 1961 to $M67.1 million in 1962.

Government activities expanded most notably in education. Development expenditure increased from $M32.7 million in 1961 to $M41.9 million in 1962. External assistance, mainly from Colonial Development Corporation loans, amounted to $M10.5 million as compared with $M5.9 million in 1961.

Population had risen by 1963 to 816,000. It has been estimated that the gross domestic product at 1961 market prices is $M460 million, so that for that year gross domestic product per capita was about $M600. Gross capital formation was about $M75.0 million for the same year, which is 16.5 per cent of the gross domestic product. Imports of machinery rose from $M28.6 million to $M33.9 million in 1962, which probably represents a rise in gross capital formation.

Trade levels in Sabah in 1962 attained record levels. Exports at $M234.7 million exceeded the 1961 level by $M14.4 million. Timber, rubber and copra continued to be the main exports. Imports reached $M238.9 million, an increase of $M23.9 million. The adverse trade balance was $M4.2 million as against a favourable balance of $M5.3 million in 1961. Statistics for "invisible exports" are not available.

In 1961 the ordinary budget surplus was $M5.43 million, after a contribution of $M16.04 million to the development fund. In 1962 the contribution was $M20.04 million and the surplus $M3.19 million. There was an over-all deficit on ordinary and development expenditure of $M3.38 million; ordinary revenue was $M79.36 million (in 1961 it was $M68.1 million), but ordinary expenditure increased from $M62.67 million in 1961 to $M76.17 million in 1962. Expenditure under the development plan rose from $M19.50 million in 1961 to $M26.51 million in 1962.

The 1963 budget anticipated a revenue of $M83.21 million and expenditure of $M81.79 million (including a contribution to the Development Fund of $M13.04 million). Expenditure under the 1963 Development Budget was estimated at $M43.28 million, allowing $M6.8 million from Colonial Development and Welfare funds, $M0.66 million from Loan Funds and the bulk of the remainder from ordinary revenue surpluses. Expenditure from Colonial Development and Welfare Funds ceased on September 16, 1963 (Malaysia Day), and henceforth these funds were derived from the grant from Britain for development in the Borneo states.

The labour force on December 31, 1962 was 37,116 compared with 34,098 in 1961. Of these, 13,522 were employed in agriculture, 16,605 in industry and 6,989 by the Government. There was a shortage of labour especially in the technically skilled field. Skilled labourers have to be imported from several Asian countries, notably Hong Kong.

B. Australian Assistance: The Australian Defence Minister, Mr. Hasluck, told the House of Representatives in Canberra on March 17 that his country would send Malaysia substantial quantities of defence aid in the form of ammunition, engineering equipment, general stores and various small craft.

All were urgent requirements and were recommended by the mission which went to Kuala Lumpur a month before.

Some items would be supplied immediately from Australian Army stocks; others would be specially produced.

Many more Malaysian sailors, soldiers, and airmen would be trained in Australia this year and in 1965 and a small number of Australian officers and men would be seconded to the Malaysian armed forces until the training of their own men had been further advanced. Australia would bear part of the cost of sending these men and maintaining them in Malaysia.

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. Chinese Assistance: China has given 10,000 tons of maize fodder and 200,000 yuan (about £29,000) in cash to help the Mongolian People's Republic.

According to reports, blizzards with temperatures down to minus 58 degrees fahrenheit have caused serious losses to livestock and property in Mongolia.

At least 500,000 animals, mainly kids and lambs but also some cattle, are reported to have perished. Though winters are always bitterly cold in Mongolia, there is usually little or no snow on the pasturelands. The unusual snow this year came after the beginning of the lambing season. It will be at least early May before the full effects of the disaster can be estimated.

The Chinese gifts were made known in a message of sympathy sent by Mr. Chou En-lai to the Prime Minister, Mr. Y. Tsedenbal.

PAKISTAN

A. Demand For Direct Elections —Demonstrations In East Pakistan: Demonstrations were held in several towns in East Pakistan on March 15 to mark the beginning of a week-long campaign to press the demand for direct elections on the basis of adult franchise.

The demonstrations were sponsored by various Opposition parties, including the National Democratic Front, the Awami League and the Councillors faction of the Muslim League.

At public meetings identical resolutions were adopted calling for a relentless struggle for the introduction of democracy in the country.

In the streets of Dacca black flags and Opposition posters were displayed. Students observed a day's strike. The inaugural ceremony of the Dacca Central Students' Union, scheduled for March 15, was postponed to protest against the lack of democracy in the country. Students of Rajshahi University decided to boycott the convocation of the University on March 16, in support of the franchise movement.

General Strike:

The All-Party Action Committee on March 19 gave a call for a general strike in East Pakistan.

The Committee comprises representatives of the National Awami League, the Awami Party, and the Nizam-e-Islam.

On March 18, groups of people carrying posters and placards held street-corner meetings in Dacca and students continued to absent themselves from their classes.

A number of persons were injured when the police lathi-charged and teargassed the crowds which had assembled at various points in Dacca city in connexion with the "Franchise Day" demonstrations on March 19.

At some places the police fired shots in the air to scare away the student demonstrators. At least 30 persons, including four political leaders, were taken into custody.

The city also observed a day-long hartal in response to the Province-wide call given by the All-Party Action Committee demanding adult franchise and direct elections. All establishments were closed and buses, taxis and rickshaws went off the streets, Government offices, banks and other essential establishments, however, remained open but with reduced staff. Steel-helmeted police and men of the East Pakistan Rifles with fixed bayonets patrolled the city.

The whole of East Pakistan observed a hartal demanding the restoration of the right of franchise and direct elections.

The All-Party Action Committee's call for observing March 18 and 19 as adult franchise and direct election day was responded to by all sections of the people at Dacca, Chittagong, Pabna, Rajshahi, Kushtia, Khulna, Barisal, Faridpur, East Dinajpur, Jessore and many other places.

Students everywhere abstained from classes, hoisted black flags atop school buildings and went in processions through the cities. In Chittagong several thousand railway workers demonstrated in support of the demand for direct elections.

Disorder At Dacca University:

Disorder broke out on March 22 as the East Pakistan Governor was addressing the annual convocation of Dacca University.

The trouble started when a section of the students demonstrated with black flags against the Government's decision to retain the indirect system of elections. The police used tear gas and arrested a number of demonstrators.

The hall where the convocation was held was heavily guarded and troops stood by in the campus. The black flag demonstration was in response to a call by the Dacca University Students Union.

Dacca University was closed indefinitely following the disorders.

Opposition Not Islamic—President Ayub Khan's View:

According to President Ayub Khan, the concept of Opposition is not reconcilable to Muslim politics.

He said in Rawalpindi on March 14 that in Islam there is the party of the Musilmeen, while those opposed to it are either mushrisk or kafirs (non-believers).

Speaking to his party men after unfurling the party flag at the new office of his faction of the Muslim League, he said that their destiny lay in complete identification for which Pakistan was created.

He hoped that since opposition as understood in modern democratic parlance had been accepted, it would continue provided it was "constructive".

He charged the Opposition parties with following "divisive and destructive policies, exploiting baser emotions of the people and thriving on their fears and hatred". He asked the people to think of the consequences if such policies of the Opposition parties were to succeed.

He referred to the National Awami Party's demand for disintegrating one unit of West Pakistan and "other groups in East Pakistan which lured the people into believing that salvation lay in separation from Pakistan and living in isolation." There "is another unfortunate tendency among the people to question fundamentals".

This was the second time within a fortnight that President Ayub Khan had referred to the "separate Bengal movement." During his recent tour of the East Wing he had warned the people that if they broke away from Pakistan they would come under the Hindus.

Referring to the demands for the introduction of democracy in the country, he regretted that there was "too much politics" in the country. The system of government should be a secondary consideration. The primary consideration should be whether it suited the country.

He defended the Constitution he gave the country two years ago and said it had brought "an executive which gave the country stability". He claimed that it had evolved a pattern which ensured participation by the people in the Government at all levels.

President Ayub Khan rejected on March 19 the general demand for direct elections.

Referring to the widespread agitation for democratic elections, he said this was a hue and cry raised by irresponsible politicians.

He said a law would be enacted under which elections to the National and Provincial Legislatures would be held through Basic Democracies.

B. Levy Of Quranic Taxes—Ruling Party's Decision: A Rawalpindi message on March 18 said that the ruling faction of the Muslim League had announced its plans to make Pakistan "a welfare State in consonance with the principles of Islam as quickly as possible". It had also decided to introduce Quranic tax institutions of zakat and ushr.

The Quranic system of public finance envisages compulsory levy of zakat which is equivalent to one-fortieth of the total income after an exemption limit and ushr which is equivalent to one-tenth of the contribution from produce.

The ruling Party's programme was released at a news conference jointly addressed by the Finance Minister, Mr. Mohammad Shoaib, and the Secretary of the Party, Mr. Abdul Waheed Khan.

Asked whether these taxes would be introduced on the lines conceived in the Quran, Mr. Shoaib said that details had not yet been worked out. The decision had been taken only on general policy.

Replying to another question, Mr. Waheed Khan said that while working out details, it would have to be considered whether modern tax institutions like income-tax could be equated with zakat.

The programme was approved by the Working Committee of the Party which met for three days under the chairmanship of President Ayub Khan.

The programme, however, did not say anything about the demand to ban the institution of interest as required in the Quran. The matter was referred to a council of Islamic ideology which had submitted its report recently.

The programme also said that the party would encourage the development of private sector. But where private sector was unwilling to carry out the essential development, the public sector would step in. The Party would seek to prevent undue concentration of wealth and power over means of production and distribution.

Mr. Shoaib said the Government had already been carrying out the programme embodied in the plan for the last two years.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. National Mobilization Plan: The White House in Washington said on March 17 that the South Viet-Namese Prime Minister, Gen. Nguyen Khanh, had proposed a national mobilization plan for all able-bodied citizens.

This mobilization, the White House said, was part of a war plan which recognized "the crucial role of economic and social, as well as military, action to ensure that areas cleared of the Viet-cong survive and prosper in freedom."

The statement was rather equivocal about direct American participation. It said that the policy should continue of withdrawing Americans where their roles could be assumed by South Viet-Namese and of sending additional men if they were needed.

There was little equivocation elsewhere in the statement. Setbacks since October, 1963 were admitted. The Viet-cong had taken full advantage of two changes of government, and of more long-standing difficulties, including a serious weakness and over-extension of the strategic hamlet programme. The supply of arms and cadres from the north had continued; careful and sophisticated control of the Viet-cong operations had been apparent; and evidence that such control was centred in Hanoi was clear and unmistakable. The full enlistment of the people of South Viet-Nam was required, partly to augment the strength of the anti-guerrilla forces, but particularly to provide the administrators, health workers, teachers and others who must follow up in cleared areas. To met this need General Khanh had informed the United States that he proposed to put into effect a national mobilization plan providing conditions and terms of service for all able-bodied South Viet-Namese.

Where the Saigon Government now had the power to clear any part of its territory, the new programme was designed to clear and to hold, step by step and province by province.

The White House assessment was made after the US Defence Secretary, Mr. Robert McNamara, and General Maxwell Taylor, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had reported to President L. B. Johnson and the National Security Council in Washington on their trip to Viet-Nam a week before.

The McNamara-Taylor report said there had been setbacks in the South Viet-Nam situation since their last trip in October, 1963. The Viet-cong had taken maximum advantage of two changes of government and had continued to get arms and cadres from the north. "Careful and sophisticated control of Viet-cong operations has been apparent, and evidence that such control is centred in Hanoi is clear and unmistakable."

The statement added: "It will remain the policy of USA to furnish assistance and support to South Viet-Nam for as long as it is required to bring aggression under control."

Meanwhile, the Revolutionary Council on March 22 appointed General Nguyen Khanh as Chairman of a new six-man "executive committee".

Observers said the decision, a well-guarded secret, signified a vote of confidence in the Premier by the armed forces.

The members later took an oath to "defend the supreme interests of Viet-Nam and to respect democracy and liberty."

A. United Nations Year-book: The latest edition of the Year-book Of The United Nations, the 16th in a series of historical reference works about the Organization and its related agencies, went on sale on February 24.

Like its predecessors, the Year-book is intended as a handy, comprehensive reference tool for diplomats, other public officials, scholars, writers, teachers, librarians, journalists and others concerned with international affairs.

The new edition covers the calendar year 1962. It gives, in a single, fully indexed volume, a concise account, arranged by subject, of UN activities (except for the proceedings of the UN General Assembly in January and February, 1962, which were dealt with in the previous volume).

In a foreword to the current edition, the Secretary-General, U Thant, says: "History provides a compass which the present may use in charting its course towards the future. It is therefore hoped that the Year-books of the United Nations ....will serve as guides to informed understanding of the role which the United Nations system has played and can play, in the development of world peace and mankind's welfare."

The first part of the 1962 Year-book deals with: (1) political and security questions; (2) economic, humanitarian and social questions; (3) questions concerning Non-Self-Governing Territories and the International Trusteeship System; (4) legal questions; and (5) administrative and budgetary questions. Each chapter and sub-chapter contains a documentary bibliography which lists, by topic, the meetings of major organs at which discussions of the subject concerned took place, the relevant documents and decisions, as well as the texts of resolutions and voting details on decisions taken.

Described in the second part of the 1962 Year-book are the activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Specialized Agencies in 1962. For each agency are listed the members and budget contributions, as well as the composition of their respective governing bodies and major subsidiary organs.

The third part of the volume consists of six appendices.

Among the main subjects dealt within the period reviewed by the current Year-book are developments in Congo (Leopoldville); matters concerning the situation in the Caribbean area; various aspects of the disarmament problem; the uses of atomic energy; the legal, scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space; the proclamation of a United Nations Year for International Co-operation; the appointment of U Thant as Secretary-General; implementation of the 1960 Declaration on granting independence to colonial countries and peoples; the obligations of UN members in meeting the costs of peace-keeping operations; the situation in Angola; questions concerning territories under Portuguese administration; race relations in South Africa; the question of Southern Rhodesia; the question of South-West Africa, the representation of China in United Nations; the question of West New Guinea (West Irian); and the investigation into the deaths of Mr. Dag Hammarskjoeld and those accompanying him.

Included among the principal economic and social matters dealt with in the present volume are decisions to hold a United Nations Conference on Trade and Development; plans for action to carry out the aims of the UN Development Decade; the economic and social consequences of disarmament; the World Food Programme; the financing of economic development, the industrialization of developing countries; and activities carried out under the UN Special Fund and the UN programmes of technical co-operation.

The 1962 Year-book also reviews the work of the four regional economic commissions—for Europe, for Latin America, for Asia and the Far East, and for Africa; the activities of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); the various United Nations endeavours to aid refugees, to promote social development, and to encourage respect for and observance of human rights; UN efforts to speed the progress of Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories, including the emergence of the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi into independence with the birth of Ruanda and Burundi. Also described are various decisions and debates pertaining to the development of international law and to the composition of the UN Secretariat.

The trade figures for 1963 bear out the general impression current during the past year that France has been increasing her exports to the region; the actual increase was NF201,696,000 from NF997,939 000 in 1962 to NF1 199,635 to 1963. Imports from the area have also increased from NF2,483 091 in 1962 to NF2,881,158 in 1963. Despite the special efforts that have been made at all levels of official and business life, trade has not yet returned to its pre-Suez importance.

Factors which have favoured the development of French trade with the Middle East during the past year included the end of the boycott on French goods by Iraq in January, 1963, and the resumption of diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia later in the year; the French Parliamentary goodwill mission to Iraq in September, the French Prime Minister's visit to Turkey in August, General de Gaulle's State visit to Iran in October, the Iran-EEC Trade Agreement in September, King Hussein's visit to France in September and the French mission to Jordan in July and the French offer of technical and financial aid to Ethiopia during the Emperor's visit to Paris in November.

As far as individual countries are concerned, Israel remains easily the largest market for French goods, topping the previous record total in 1961. Lebanon, a traditional French market, bought a record NF220.5 million worth of goods, which include of course the two Caravelles bought in May and June by Middle East Airlines. Turkey continues to buy extensively from France, and despite Turkey's own currency difficulties, her total imports from France rose to NF174.8 million from NF153.1 million in 1962. French exports to Iran remain at a high level, although they have fluctuated considerably in recent years, and are still well below the 1960 figure of NF172.4 million. Exports to Pakistan have decreased since 1960, when they were NF111.3 million, mainly as a result of Pakistan's stringent check on imports to safeguard foreign currency.

French imports from the Middle East have increased slightly from around the NF2,500 million mark, and are made up mainly of oil. Oil imports from Iran, Iraq and more strikingly Libya have been rising in recent years but the decline in oil imports from Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Qatar continues owing to the growth of French oil imports from North Africa. While there were no French imports from Jordan in 1960 and 1961, there are signs that in future France will be developing this market.

C. World Rice Prospects: The Commonwealth Economic Committee in a report made public in London on March 8 said that world production of paddy in 1963-64 was expected to expand, but much depended on the recovery in output in India and Pakistan.

In its general review, the Committee said that some decline in production had occurred in Japan and Indonesia, and adverse weather conditions might also have affected crops in Burma and Thailand. Cambodia, however, anticipated an exceptionally good harvest, and both the United States and Egypt had harvested record crops.

Discussing production, the report said that the first Indian estimate for this season showed an acreage almost 1,700,000 acres greater than the previous year due to favourable weather conditions at the time of sowing. With indications of some improvement in yields, production might recover to the record 1961-62 level.

The report said exports so far recorded in 1963 had been 10 per cent above those a year earlier. Consignments from Burma were slightly less than in 1962, but Thailand's exports showed some expansion. Shipments from USA were running well above the previous year's level up to the end of November, and the final figure should well exceed the 1962 total.

Heavy exports were also made from Egypt, although shipments from the 1963 crop were delayed by the lateness of the harvest. Cambodia and South Viet-Nam both achieved a substantial recovery in exports, but those from Pakistan, Italy and South Korea had declined.

The report added that imports of rice recorded so far for 1963 appeared to be somewhat above the previous year's figures, reflecting larger purchases abroad by India, Pakistan, Malaya, Japan and Ceylon.

D. Gandhi School In Argentina: In Cordoba (Argentina), a new Government school dedicated to the memory of Mahatma Gandhi was opened on March 4.

The local Governor, Ministers, the University Rector, and prominent citizens were present at the opening ceremony.

Speaking on the occasion, a senior member of the Provincial Education Council said that the idea of a Mahatma Gandhi school originated from the spontaneous enthusiasm of the admirers of Gandhiji in Cordoba.

He added that Mahatma Gandhi belonged to entire humanity and symbolized the essential unity of people everywhere.

E. Asians Visited America Before Columbus—Revelation by Mexican Anthropologist: A message from Mexico City on February 24 said a noted Mexican authority, Miss Eulalia Guzman, was of the view that Asian peoples visited the American continent long before Christopher Columbus "discovered" it.

She said that the Asians did not come as conquerors, but to exchange goods with American Indians.

Miss Guzman, known for her discovery of the remains of Cuauhtemoc, last Emperor of the Aztec Indians, said: "There is a substantial similarity between the Asiatic and pre-Spanish cultures. There is a similarity in their physical features, their architecture, their ceramics and their habits."

To prove these similarities, she pointed to a number of examples. For one, she said, Peking's clay vessels are equal to their Indian counterparts found among the ruins of Pkoihdacaa near Mexico City. Also some embroidery designs made in the Orient resemble those worked out by Mexico's Huichol Indians in the Pacific state of Navarit.

This, however, was not as important as the fact that the Palace of Kublai Khan in Mongolia, built in the 13th century, shows lines similar to those of a palace found in the ruins of Atetelco, near the Teothihucan Pyramids.

In her opinion, there was a pre-Hispanic cultural zone in contact with Oriental peoples, with the Pacific Islands in the centre serving as stepping stones. Those islands were well known to the inhabitants of Asia and America. This meant that cultures in those zones were mutually influenced. In fact, she was assured by Hindu monks visiting Mexico that on the island of Bali there is a pyramid alleged to have been built by a Malayan architect some time between the sixth and seventh centuries.

Thus, according to Miss Guzman, "Americans and Orientals knew how to visit each other without running the risks faced by Spaniards in their early trips to Asia." Orientals, she said, knew better how to take advantage of favourable winds and how to avoid equatorial sea currents.

"The Asiatics, however, did not come to conquer, but to trade, and American Indians, likewise, crossed the ocean simply to become acquainted with Asian habits and to barter."

F. European Agreement On Fishery Limits: The British Government announced on March 4 in Parliament a new Agreement on fishery limits for 13 European countries.

The 15-Article Agreement provides for an inner six-mile belt where the State will have exclusive fishing rights and an outer six-mile zone where nations that have traditionally fished will continue to do so.

The convention has been adopted at a conference in London by Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, West Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Holland, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Britain.

Norway, Iceland and Switzerland—a landlocked State with no direct interest in the problem—have not agreed. Denmark's agreement to the convention excludes the Faroes and Greenland.

The last photo-telegrams bounced off the satellite Echo II depicted the planets of the solar system, and were received at Zimenski.

The Soviet scientists sent a telegram congratulating their British colleagues on the success of the experiment. An official at Jodrell Bank said in reply that the British team would be glad to join their Russian colleagues again in future experiments.

H. Balzan Peace Prize For UN: A UN spokesman said on February 20 that United Nations had been awarded the annual Balzan Prize for Peace, Fraternity and Humanity.

The award, worth $220,000 is made by the Balzan International Foundation which has headquarters in Milan and Zurich.

The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, was notified officially on February 20 that UN had won the Prize.

The announcement on the Peace Prize noted that the late President J. F. Kennedy had praised UN for its help to developing countries and for its role in the Cuban crisis, the Congo disorders, the nuclear test ban negotiations, the process of decolonization and the West Irian dispute.

In 1962, the Prize went to the late Pope John.

I. UN Conference On Trade And Development—Declaration By Developing Countries: Representatives of 76 developing countries, including many from Asia, have issued a joint declaration concerning the UN Conference on Trade and Development due to open in Geneva on March 24.

Declaring that the Conference should represent an outstanding event in international co-operation, the developing nations stated that the full attainment of even the modest targets of the UN Development Decade would depend on the concrete decisions taken at the Conference and on their effective implementation. While they were already making, and were determined to continue to make, great efforts for their economic and social advancement through full mobilization of domestic resources, agricultural development, industrialization and diversification of their production and trade, the task could be accomplished only if domestic efforts were supplemented and assisted by adequate international action.

International trade could become a more powerful instrument and vehicle of economic development, not only through the expansion of the traditional exports of the developing countries but also through the development of markets for their new products and a general increase in their share of world exports under improved terms of trade. Existing principles and patterns of world trade still mainly favoured the advanced parts of the world. Instead of helping the developing countries to promote the development and diversification of their economies, the present tendencies in world trade were frustrating their efforts to attain more rapid growth. These trends must be reversed. The developing countries desired that the volume of their trade should be increased and its composition diversified; the prices of their exports stabilized at fair and remunerative levels, and the international transfers of capital made more favourable to them so as to enable them to obtain, through trade, more of the means needed for their economic development. To achieve these objectives, a dynamic international trade policy was required.

The declaration stressed that the fundamental trade problems of developing countries were well identified. What the world was lacking today was, therefore, not the awareness of the problem but the readiness to act. All members of United Nations were requested to give earnest consideration to proposals already made and to explore, before the beginning of the Conference, all practical means for their implementation, so as to make it possible for the adoption by the Conference of concrete measures to achieve, inter alia, the following:

(a) Creation of conditions for the expansion of trade between countries at a similar level of development, at different stages of development or having different systems of social and economic organization;

(b) Progressive reduction and early elimination of all barriers and restrictions impeding the exports of the developing countries, without reciprocal concessions on their part;

(c) Increase in the volume of exports of the developing countries in primary products, both raw and processed, to the industrialized countries and the stabilization of prices at fair and remunerative levels;

(d) Expansion of the markets for exports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods from the developing countries;

(e) Provision of more adequate financial resources at favourable terms, so as to enable the developing countries to increase their imports of capital goods and industrial raw materials essential for their economic development, and better co-ordination of trade and aid policies;

(f) Improvement of the invisible trade of the developing countries, particularly by reducing their payments for freight and insurance and the burden of their debt charges;

(g) Improvement of institutional arrangements, including, if necessary, the establishment of new machinery and methods for implementing the decisions of the Conference.

BURMA

A. Yugoslav Assistance: The leader of a visiting Yugoslav economic delegation, Dr. Joze Brilej, told correspondents in Rangoon on March 5 that Yugoslavia had offered Burma $8 million to help finance agricultural and industrial projects including projects for geological research and development of mining.

The delegation visited Burma from February 28 to March 5.

Meeting newsmen shortly before his departure for Cambodia, Dr. Brilej expressed complete satisfaction with the frank and constructive discussions he had had with Burmese officials, including the Minister for Trade Development, Colonel Chit Myaing, the Minister for Industry, Mines and Labour, Colonel Than Sein and the Foreign Minister, U Thi Han.

Dr. Brilej outlined the development of Burmese-Yugoslav trade beginning with the first Trade Agreement in 1953 and said that there was great scope for economic co-operation between the two countries.

He said Yugoslavia and Burma believed that developing countries should intensify their mutual trade exchanges and economic co-operation. This did not mean that they should form any sort of economic bloc. Both nations believed in elimination of discriminatory practices in the economic field, particularly discrimination against import of raw materials and industrial goods produced by underdeveloped countries.

He said he was deeply impressed by the pace of mechanization of agriculture in Burma.

He said Yugoslavia and Burma had agreed in principle on economic co-operation and his country had offered $8 million in long-term (eight-year) credits.

He said these funds could be used for any development project and that the amount as well as the time of credit could be extended by mutual agreement.

CAMBODIA

A. Alleged Air And Ground Attack On Village By South Viet-Namese Forces: Cambodia alleged on March 20 that South Viet-Namese forces had made ground and air attacks on a Cambodian village.

The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, alleged that US personnel had accompanied 12 armoured cars attacking the village of Chantrea, four miles inside the Cambodian frontier.

The village was also bombed by South Viet-Namese aircraft. Diplomatists confirmed Cambodian reports that at least one helicopter had landed at Chantrea with three Americans on board.

An observer aircraft of the type flown by American pilots was shot down in the action which took place on March 19 just as a Viet-Namese delegation was flying to Pnom Penh for border negotiations.

The incident was the most serious in recent border tension between the two countries. Seventeen persons were reported killed and 13 injured. The aircraft was reported to have crashed in flames in South Viet-Nam territory.

Cambodia lodged a protest with the International Truce Supervisory Commission against the bombing of the village. It also protested against alleged intrusion of South Viet-Nam tank units into Cambodian territory.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk's Messages:

Prince Norodom Sihanouk also sent messages to President de Gaulle of France and the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev stating that the situation in Cambodia was deteriorating daily.

He said Cambodia was again "the victim of a new and very brutal aggression by the American-South Viet-Namese land and air forces."

He urged President de Gaulle and Mr. Khruschev to persuade Britain and USA to accept immediately the proposal of convening a conference to guarantee Cambodia's borders.

He also sent a letter to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant stating that Cambodia proposed to lodge a complaint with the UN Security Council against USA and South Viet-Nam regarded as "jointly responsible for acts of aggression on a defenceless civilian population."

It was stated that the Prince was seeking an immediate discussion by the UN Security Council of Cambodian complaints against USA and South Viet-Nam arising from the attack on the border village of Chantrea.

The Soviet Government urged Britain to act quickly on Cambodia's request for an international conference to guarantee its neutrality.

Soviet Support:

In a telegram to Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Mr. Khruschev said he would support any appeal which Cambodia might make to the Security Council.

He said he shared the Prince's anger about an attack on Cambodia.

"We have always rendered and are ready to render in the future our support to your peace-loving State."

Regarding Britain and USA he said: "The Soviet Government has again stated to the Government of Britain that it continues to regard the convening of an international conference on Cambodia to be imperative.

"We have also appealed to the Government of USA to expedite a positive reply to the question of convening the conference."

South Viet-Namese Apology:

However, signs of relaxation of tensions over the Chantrea incident appeared on March 21 when South Viet-Nam sent a formal apology to Cambodia.

South Viet-Nam said the incident was due "to an error in mapping and location."

The Viet-Namese Foreign Ministry, quoted by the official Viet-Nam Press News Agency, said the Government had sent Cambodia its "apologies and condolences" and offered to make good the damage.

Earlier, the Foreign Ministry said South Viet-Nam had protested "most strongly" to Cambodia over the shooting down of a South Viet-Namese reconnaissance plane in the Chantrea operation, in which a South Viet-Namese airman was killed and an American wounded.

According to reports, South Viet-Nam under Gen. Nguyen Khanh appears to have shown considerable interest in normalizing relations with Cambodia. Saigon was reported to have responded with alacrity to Prince Norodom's February 19 proposal for a four-Power conference to guarantee Cambodia's neutrality, independence and territorial integrity.

Negotiations between Saigon and Pnom Penh for normalized relations have in fact been going on in a seesaw fashion almost since the late President Diem's Government was overthrown in November, 1963.

On November 3, 1963, Prince Norodom laid down five pre-conditions for resumption of relations with South Viet-Nam: first, that Saigon should drop claims made by the Diem Government to Cambodia's coastal islands; secondly, South Viet-Nam should respect Cambodia's neutrality; thirdly, that Saigon should grant Viet-Namese citizens of Cambodian stock the special rights that they enjoyed under the French administration; fourthly, that the rebel "free Cambodian" bases be eliminated from South Viet-Nam; and lastly that Cambodia should be given the 1,000 million Cambodian riel currency which Pnom Penh says South Viet-Nam has owed it since the Indo-China countries became independent.

A few days later, Prince Norodom proposed in an article that South Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia should form a "zone of neutral States" in order to "restore the economy, raise the living standards of the peoples and safeguard national identities and independence which is threatened by all forms of imperialism."

He said the "socialist camp" would agree to recognize a "Neutralist National Union Government" in South Viet-Nam in exchange for American "disengagement" in that country.

Saigon ignored the proposal on the ground that the experience of Laos did not warrant Prince Norodom's easy optimism, and towards the end of December, 1963 was even questioning the need for an international conference to guarantee Cambodia's neutrality.

Since then another putsch had taken place and General Nguyen Khanh's policies seem more flexible and decisive than the previous Government's.

CEYLON

A. Non-Aligned Nations' Conference—Preparatory Meeting: Ambassadors from 24 non-aligned countries met in Colombo from March 23 to 26 to prepare for a full-scale conference of non-aligned nations.

The countries which were invited to send representatives to the meeting but could not send delegates were Burma, Bolivia, Brazil and Mali.

The Ambassadors discussed among other things the place and date of the proposed conference and also the names of the countries which were to be invited to it.

In her opening address, the Ceylon Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, said that if any justification was needed for the convening of a second summit Conference on the lines of the Belgrade Conference three years ago, they had only to remind themselves that since 1961 many countries had secured independence and become sovereign States. These countries, she said, were firm adherents of the policy of non-alignment.

In the years after the Belgrade Conference, she said, old tensions had given place to new understandings, but unhappily there were some new tensions. However, even where disputes had arisen there was now a desire for their settlement through negotiation, rather than by force. "The triumph of the policy of non-alignment will lie in the ultimate elimination of the need for its practice."

She said: "It has been remarked that since the 1961 Belgrade Conference the improvement in the relations between USA and the Soviet Union and other developments have necessitated a re-examination of the policy of non-alignment. We agree that no such policy can remain in a static condition. Like all policies, non-alignment too must be responsive to changing circumstances. But we must be careful that in the process the concept of non-alignment does not lose its essence or its identity. One way in which this can be achieved is to translate its objective, as much as possible, into more precise measures of policy."

She said that in the field of international trade and development and economic co-operation generally, much remained to be done. Measures must be devised to promote the well-being and prosperity of the developing countries and to remove economic inequalities which constituted a continuing danger to peace.

Decisions:

On March 25, after three days of discussions, the Ambassadors decided to hold the second non-aligned States' summit meeting in Cairo in the first week of October.

The meeting also appeared to agree on the need for a Foreign Ministers' meeting before the summit. Even Ceylon, which initially did not favour it, came round to the view that the intervening period was necessary to enable the new countries besides the Belgrade Powers, which are to be invited to the summit, to have a say in drawing up the agenda.

Besides the Belgrade participants, the meeting drew up the following tentative list of invitees to the proposed Conference:

(1) Africa: All signatories to the African Unity Charter, Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia.

(2) Arab countries: All Arab summit participants.

(3) Asia: Laos.

(4) Caribbean: Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago.

(5) Latin America: Brazil, Bolivia, Mexico, Uruguay, Chile, Venezuela and Argentina.

(6) Europe: Finland, Austria and Sweden.

The meeting also decided to invite the "Provisional" Government of Angola and British Guiana, if independence was proclaimed before the summit.

An official spokesman emphasized that the list of invitees was "tentative" as they had to be sounded out before invitations were extended.

The Ghana delegation advocated that representatives of the Belgrade States, which are participating in the Geneva Conference on Trade and Development, should endeavour to co-ordinate their approach to problems to be discussed in Cairo. It should emphasize the theme of economic and social development and neo-colonialism.

Other delegates urged that it should analyse the results of the Geneva Conference and consider how to bridge the gap between economically developed countries and under-developed countries.

The delegates assessed the achievements at Belgrade as helping East-West understanding and stressed the need for consolidating that understanding and for widening the area of peace.

"Our purpose is clean and clear," the Afghan delegate said. "It is logical in its nature and noble in its aims. We want peace amongst those that are free and freedom for those that are not free."

He added that since the 'cold war' continued and since colonialism was still prevalent, it was the duty of non-aligned nations to continue their efforts for a wide movement based on international fraternity.

Indonesia's Deputy Foreign Minister, Madame Soepani, the only woman delegate at the Ambassador's meeting, suggested that the Conference inscribe on its agenda for the summit the possibility of convening a conference of "new emerging forces."

Standing Committee Appointed:

Before it ended on March 26, the preparatory meeting appointed a standing committee of 10 countries, including India, with power to co-opt two members from new invitees to make arrangements for the Conference.

According to the decision taken by the meeting, nearly 70 countries are to be sounded by the standing committee to ascertain whether they will attend the Cairo Conference.

Delegations of various countries expressed their complete satisfaction at the happy ending of the deliberations without much dissensions.

The only two subjects on which there was some difference of opinion were the question of a Foreign Ministers' conference to precede the non-aligned summit and an Indonesian suggestion for convening a conference of "new emerging forces" proposed to be inscribed on the agenda of the main Conference.

According to conference sources, both these issues were settled in an amicable manner.

Though at the beginning there was some suspicion lurking in the minds of some delegations, as was evident from local Press reports, about India's possible role at the meeting, there appeared to be almost all-round appreciation of India's handling of the issues before the meeting without at the same time unduly throwing about her weight.

On the question of a ministerial conference before the actual summit, the consensus was that such a meeting should be held immediately preceding the non-aligned conference. It was, however, left to the standing committee to fix a date for such a conference in consultation with the new invitees.

A joint communique issued at the close of the conference said that the discussions were held in an "atmosphere of cordiality, mutual understanding and unanimity."

It said the delegates from Asia, Africa, Latin America and Europe re-affirmed their countries' adherence to the Belgrade Declaration and their faith in the efficacy of the policy of non-alignment.

B. Alleged Indian Violation Of Air-Space—Another Note: The Government of Ceylon has said that the circumstances in which a Ceylonese military aircraft landed at Madras on June 14, 1962 (see text of Indian Note on page 5723) without diplomatic clearance even when the aircraft was not in distress, "differed significantly from those relative to the landing of the disabled Indian military aircraft on Ceylon territory on March 7, 1964."

In a Note handed over to the Commonwealth Secretary by the Ceylon High Commissioner in New Delhi on March 18 (the text of which was released in Colombo on March 21) the Government of Ceylon pointed out that although no diplomatic clearance was obtained for the Ceylonese aircraft's flight over Indian territory (on June 14, 1962), information relating to the flight was furnished to the airport authorities in Madras well in advance of the aircraft's departure from Ceylon.

On representations made by the Government of India to the effect that the flight was "highly irregular", the Note said, an apology was tendered by the High Commissioner for Ceylon in New Delhi.

Dealing with the landing of the disabled Indian Navy aircraft from INS Vikrant at Ratmalana airport on February 24, the Note clarified that the Ceylon Government's protest was not against its landing, but "at the presence of the accompanying aircraft over Ceylon territory."

It said that no information was furnished to the Ceylonese authorities regarding the disabled aircraft, although INS Vikrant and at least one of its aircraft were in a position to do so. It pointed out that INS Vikrant should have taken the precaution of warning air traffic control at Ratmalana of the presence of the disabled aircraft to avoid any possible hazard to other aircraft in the area. "This would have been an act of friendly co-operation transcending purely legal obligations."

It regretted that the Government of India should have cause for complaint about treatment accorded to the crew of the disabled aircraft. "The circumstances surrounding the landing left the Ceylon authorities no alternative but to interrogate the crew of the aircraft."

INDIA

SUMMARY: Five-Year Plan For Defence Preparedness; Communal Disturbances; Aid Protocol With USSR; Border Roads Programme; Wheat Zones Formed.

A. Five-Year Plan For Defence Preparedness: The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, told the Lok Sabha on March 23 that the Government was working on a five-year plan for defence preparedness.

Speaking on the demands for grants for his Ministry, he assured the House that the Government was re-orientating defence strategy.

He said that the process of modernization of the armed forces was going along smoothly. They were developing standard weapons and the production of these weapons also formed part of the strategy.

As for the Air Force, he rejected the suggestion to scrap the MIG project. Good progress was being made in implementing the MIG project. In regard to the development of HF 24 from Mach I to Mach II speed, India was now considering the question of collaboration with the United Arab Republic. If this came through, UAR might make engines and India could make the frames.

Another important announcement made by him was the setting up of a Committee consisting of the Cabinet Secretary as Chairman to go into the working of the Air Force and recommend standards for safety.

The Committee, apart from the Chairman, would consist of the Director-General of Civil Aviation, Mr. R. N. Katju, and Air Vice-Marshal Arjan Singh, Vice-Chief of Air Staff. The Committee will examine: (1) the existing regulations and arrangements for (a) flying and flying safety, (b) clearing of the aircraft as fit for flying, (c) standards of training to be followed in relation to the tasks that are entrusted; (2) the adequacy of the regulations and arrangements and their implementation; (3) to recommend remedial measures if any to minimise accidents.

Mr. Chavan said that India in planning its defence was taking note not only of the military threat from China but that country's political and economic motivations. He said the Chinese attempt to humiliate India militarily followed China's realisation that India could not be made a satellite. China had followed up that attempt with efforts to disrupt India's economic progress.

Spelling out some of the features of the new defence plan, he said the Navy would have to be accorded a lower priority in the present situation. The development of the Navy as a balancing force was, however, being considered because of India's long coast line and "the development of other navies."

He said that it was proposed to secure a submarine for training purposes.

He said the decision to raise six mountain divisions for the Army should be viewed as part of the Defence Ministry's re-orientation of strategy. The raising of these divisions meant introduction of mobility and training of troops to fight more effectively in high altitudes.

He announced that 14,00,000 or 15,00,000 men had offered their services to the country's defence during the course of a year. The recruiting organization had done a good job of selecting 3,00,000 troops of "other ranks" from among the 14,00,000 who sought Army service, and of selecting 10,000 officers out of 40,000 to 50,000 young men who had applied.

He said that the search for new weapons often led to a realization that India had to manufacture them herself. "The production system itself, therefore, becomes a part of our defence strategy." He explained that this was because some of the new weapons India wanted were not available in other countries for various reasons. India was now in the process of "identifying, standardising, and if necessary, developing" the new weapons it needed.

About apprehensions voiced by some Members that the arms aid received from the West could not be used in case of trouble from Pakistan, he said that the Western aid programme decided at the Nassau Conference had certain conditions attached.

The conditions were that these weapons, ammunitions and supplies would be used only for the purpose of resisting Chinese aggression, that the Government of India would give the necessary facilities to representatives of the Governments concerned to observe and review the use of the equipment, and that India would offer to return the articles furnished when they were no longer required for the purposes for which they were originally made.

He said: "We have accepted these conditions and we want to honour these conditions." He asked the House to realise that the arms assistance received—for which "we are very grateful"—was small compared to the size of the equipment of the Indian Army.

B. Communal Violence: In a statement in the Lok Sabha on March 23, the Central Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda, re-iterated that the Government would take steps to protect the life and property of all citizens irrespective of caste or creed.

He reported to the House that about 200 persons had been killed in communal incidents in various places in West Bengal, Bihar, Orissa and Madhya Pradesh.

He said he had advised the State Governments to take stern action to put down disturbances and to take preventive measures at the least sign of trouble.

He said that the incidents had caused "us deep sorrow. It is a matter of shame that a small number of evil-doers should be able to cause so much suffering to innocent people and bring a bad name to our peace-loving people and damage our reputation."

He was making a statement in response to a call attention notice tabled by Mr. Hem Barua (P-SP) and 28 others belonging to all parties including the Congress.

He assured the House that "whatever may be the cost and whatever the effort involved, we will discharge our sacred duty to protect the lives, property and honour of all sections of the community." "Every act of communal violence is an attack on human decency and values of civilized life for which we stand."

He said that it was the desire of the Government of India that joint peace committees of citizens be formed at various places to mobilize public opinion and give active assistance in the maintenance of communal peace.

In this connexion he said he had met the leaders of the INTUC, A-ITUC and HMS and decided to form a central standing committee for assisting in the maintenance of communal harmony in industrial areas of the country.

He added that tripartite committees would be set up at State level and at various industrial centres.

Mr. J. Nehru's Broadcast Appeal:

The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, in a broadcast to the nation on March 26, appealed for communal harmony.

In his broadcast, the first after his recovery from illness, he asked the people not to allow their anger and bitterness to grow because of the recent happenings in East Pakistan.

The following is the text of his broadcast:

"We have many difficult problems to face. There is the menace of China and Pakistan. There is the tremendous influx of refugees from East Pakistan and our duty to look after them and rehabilitate them. There is the problem of rising prices which affects all our people.

"But I am speaking to you today about something which is more important than anything else. This is the communal disharmony which has resulted in many deaths in East Pakistan and in India and has created bitterness and fear amongst various communities. This feeling is fatal for all of us and, unless stopped completely, will lead to most dangerous consequences.

"This communal trouble is entirely opposed to our policy and to our future, and I do appeal to you to fight it and to put an end to it.

"India is a country of many communities and unless we can live in harmony with each other, respecting each other's beliefs and habits, we cannot build up a great and united nation.

"Ever since the distant past, it has been India's proud privilege to live in harmony with each other. That has been the basis of India's culture. Long ago, the Buddha taught us this lesson. From the days of Asoka, 2,300 years ago, this aspect of our thought has been repeatedly declared and practised.

"In our own day, Mahatma Gandhi laid great stress on it and indeed lost his life because he laid great stress on communal goodwill and harmony. We have, therefore, a precious heritage to keep up, and we cannot allow ourselves to act contrary to it.

"Pakistan came into existence on the basis of hatred and intolerance. We must not allow ourselves to react to this in the same way. That surely will be a defeat for us. We have to live up to our immemorial culture and try to win over those who are opposed to us. To compete with each other in hatred and barbarity is to sink below the human level and tarnish the name of our country and our people.

"One evil deed leads to another. Thus evil grows. That is not the way to stop these inhuman deeds. If we can behave with tolerance and friendship to each other, that surely will have its effect elsewhere. Otherwise, this vicious circle will go on bringing sorrow and disaster to all of us and others.

"It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that we should realize our duty to all our countrymen whoever they might be. We must always remember that every Indian, to whatever religion he might belong, is a brother and must be treated as such.

"A few days ago, I wrote to President Ayub Khan of Pakistan appealing to him against these inhumanities that were taking place and suggesting that our Home Ministers might meet soon to curb these. Today I received a reply from President Ayub Khan in which he has entirely agreed with my proposal. I hope that soon a meeting of the Home Ministers will take place, probably in Delhi.

to consider this vital problem and what steps to take to meet it. I hope that will have a salutary effect on our people.

"But it is not so much Home Ministers and others in authority who can put an end to this unhappy business. It is the people themselves who have to act rightly and speedily and thus promote an atmosphere of friendship and harmony between different religious groups and not allow their anger and bitterness to grow.

"I appeal, therefore, to all my countrymen to put an end to this inhuman behaviour. I would specially appeal to our friends and countrymen, the Adivasis in Bihar and Orissa, who have been agitated greatly by the stories they have heard. I hope that they will check themselves and try to create an atmosphere of goodwill and friendship for our countrymen who are Muslims.

"Our great public enterprises are suffering because of this communal trouble, and the whole of India's future is bound up with this.

"I earnestly trust that our efforts will be directed towards creating communal harmony and that all our people and especially our newspapers will appreciate the grave dangers that are caused by communal conflict and disharmony.

"Let us all be careful in what we say or write which might create fear and conflict. Let us pull ourselves together and create an atmosphere of co-operation and work for the advancement of India and of all who live here as her sons.

"Thus only can we serve our Motherland and help in making her great, united and strong. Jai Hind."

Nehru-Ayub Khan Correspondence:

The same day (March 26), the text of letters exchanged between Mr. Nehru and President Ayub Khan of Pakistan were released.

Mr. Nehru in his broadcast had said President Ayub Khan had "entirely agreed with his proposal" for a meeting of the Home Ministers of the two countries in an effort to "end the inhumanities and communal disharmony."

The following is the text of Mr. Nehru's letter of March 19 to President Ayub Khan:

"Dear Mr. President,

"For the last two months there has been an increasing influx of refugees from East Pakistan into India. This is causing us great concern not only because of the tremendous burden thrown on us in the reception and rehabilitation of the thousands who are coming to India, but because it presents a tragic human problem.

"I know that these movements of refugees across the border are causing concern both to the Government of East Pakistan and to your Government.

"There are many problems between our two countries. It is our wish to resolve them peacefully and in a spirit of co-operation and understanding. I feel, however, that the problem presented by the recent movements of the refugees is of the highest importance and priority, which, if not resolved, will further embitter our relations and add to the unhappiness of our peoples.

"We have asked our High Commissioner to present to you a memorandum containing certain proposals of the Government of India for a Minister-level meeting. I will be glad if you can receive him personally and give earnest consideration to the proposals contained in the memorandum which our High Commissioner has been asked to clarify and elaborate, if necessary."

The following is the text of the memorandum attached to the letter:

"The recent communal disturbances have resulted in a mass exodus of minorities from East Pakistan into India. Over 3,000 destitute refugees are coming into India every day. Already over 125,000 refugees belonging to the minority communities have come into India and many more thousands are expected to come in the near future.

"Already the resources of the Government of India are taxed to the utmost and the prospect of being swamped by such a large number of refugees from East Pakistan is one which, apart from the enormous burden of relief and rehabilitation of these vast numbers the Government of India must shoulder, is bound to have and is having serious repercussions on the already strained relations between India and Pakistan.

"Since the persons coming into India as refugees are Pakistan nationals, it is evident that whatever the causes, they are doing so because of fear and a sense of insecurity in East Pakistan. The problem has assumed a magnitude and character which deeply involves future relations between India and Pakistan and is making future settlement of outstanding differences between the two countries more difficult.

"There was, following the disturbances, some movement of members of the minority community from West Bengal into East Pakistan in January last. This movement ended within a few days due to prompt measures taken for restoration of law and order and establishment of a full sense of confidence for the security of the minorities in West Bengal.

"It is necessary that earnest efforts should be made to prevent the situation from assuming more dangerous proportions and to tackle urgently the political and economic problems created by this intensely human problem. It is in the interests of India and Pakistan to co-operate with each other in solving this serious problem.

"That there is a mutuality of interest between India and Pakistan in this matter is obvious. This has been recognized in the past when, in a similar though somewhat less serious situation, the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan met and concluded the Nehru-Liaquat Agreement on April 8, 1950. In that Agreement, the two Governments committed themselves to admirable principles in regard to the treatment of minorities in their respective countries. To quote from the Agreement:

"'The Governments of India and Pakistan solemnly agree that each shall ensure to the minorities throughout its territory complete equality of citizenship, irrespective of religion, a full sense of security in respect of life, culture, property and personal honour, freedom of movement within each country and freedom of occupation, speech and worship, subject to law and morality.

"'Members of the minorities shall have equal opportunity with members of the majority community to participate in the public life of their country, to hold political or other office, and to serve in their country's civil and armed forces. Both Governments declare these rights to be fundamental and undertake to enforce them effectively.'

"Then followed an agreement on a number of points relating to the treatment of, and facilities available to the migrants going from one country to the other. The agreement was subsequently ratified by both Governments.

"On January 16, 1964, the Government of India made a proposal to the Government of Pakistan for a meeting of the Home Ministers. This proposal was conveyed orally by the Indian High Commissioner in Karachi when delivering the President of India's message in reply to the President of Pakistan's message of January 13. In their oral reply dated January 24, 1964, the Government of Pakistan did not consider such a meeting necessary. They, however, said that once law and order had been fully restored, the Ministers of the two Governments may meet initially in Rawalpindi|Delhi to discuss measures necessary to ensure that refugees of recent disturbances as also those evicted from Assam, Tripura and West Bengal should be enable to return to their homes.

"In their reply dated January 30, 1964, the Government of India pointed out that they had already agreed to official-level talks between the two Governments to be followed by a Minister-level meeting on the question of the infiltrators into Assam and Tripura from East Pakistan. These official-level discussions did not take place as the atmosphere of tension created in the last few months was not conducive to a calm consideration of this issue. The Government of India re-iterated their willingness to begin talks on this problem as soon as the Minister-level meeting they had proposed for restoring communal harmony had been convened and had made progress. They further suggested that the Ministers themselves could discuss the timing and modalities of the talks between the two Governments on the question of movement of persons across the eastern borders.

"The Government of India are convinced that the present situation makes it imperative that representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan should confer together in the spirit of the declaration and agreement made by the two Prime Ministers on April 8, 1950, and devise ways and means for dealing with the most urgent and indeed the most vital question of restoring complete harmony amongst the different communities of their citizens and restoring full confidence as regards their security and welfare in their homelands.

"This is necessary not only in the interests of the human problems created by panicky migrations across the border but also in the interest of good relations between India and Pakistan. No time should, therefore, be lost in tackling this urgent and vital problem. They, therefore, propose again that the Home Ministers of the Governments of India and Pakistan, assisted by their advisers, meet immediately as did the Prime Ministers in 1950, to consider the question. Every aspect of the problem of minorities and movements of refugees both ways can be discussed with a view to reaching mutually satisfactory arrangements.

"Equal treatment and the fullest guarantee and protection of the rights of the minorities is the fundamental principle of India's Constitution. This principle is one which has governed and will continue to govern the policies and actions of the Government of India. The President of Pakistan in the course of his broadcast from Radio Pakistan on March 1, 1964, also said: 'We regard the minority communities as a sacred trust entitled to equal rights and privileges. Any one who has been disturbed is welcome to return where he belongs and in this he will have all the support and assistance from us. We expect the same from India.'

"In view of this common ground of intentions and objectives, the Government of India trust that the Pakistan Government will promptly respond to the proposal of the Government of India. The Home Minister of the Government of India is ready and willing to meet the Home Minister of Pakistan at any time and place of the latter's choosing, and as soon as possible."

The following is the text of President Ayub Khan's reply dated March 23:

"Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

"I thank you for your letter No. 185-PMI|64, dated March 19, 1964 which your High Commissioner handed over to me on March 20th.

"I have read your letter and the enclosed memorandum with care. I am glad that the Government of India have found it possible to accept the suggestion we made on January 24, namely, that once law and order have been fully restored, Ministers of the two Governments should meet to discuss measures necessary to ensure that refugees from the recent communal disturbances as also those evicted from Assam and Tripura prior to those disturbances return to their original homes.

"On the other hand, I regret to note that, while you express concern about the refugees from East Pakistan, you have expressed no concern or even a word of sympathy for the thousands of Indian Muslims who have suffered in the recent riots in India and have fled in panic to East Pakistan, and those who have been forcibly evicted from their homes in Assam and Tripura. Only a few days before you wrote, an entirely unprovoked and obviously pre-planned attack on Muslims in Calcutta resulted, according to official statements, in 21 deaths.

"Since then, again according to Indian Press reports, riots have taken place in places as far apart as Jamshedpur (55 persons killed), Rourkela (53 persons killed by March 21) where according to a PTI report the situation was described as 'critical,' Jharpada, Raigarh (9 persons killed), Kharsia, Jamgaon, Jharsuguda and Sambalpur. I doubt whether the figures of casualties published by the Indian Press portray anything like the actual loss of innocent lives or the suffering of the Muslim community in the affected areas. I cannot help feeling that if the suggestion of my Government of January 24 for a Ministerial meeting, which you have now accepted had been accepted earlier, perhaps this latest series of communal disturbances might have been averted.

"However, it is not my purpose to start controversy on this subject. The important thing is that the Government of India recognizes, as we do, the dangers inherent in the present situation and is aware of the urgent need to re-establish conditions which would enable the up-rooted members of the minority community to live in their original homes with a full sense of security.

"I therefore agree that Ministers of the two Governments meet at an early date to discuss the measures necessary for this purpose. We would be agreeable also to the meeting being held in Delhi. Further details in connexion with the proposed meeting will be settled in consultation with your High Commissioner in Karachi."

C. "Aid-India" Consortium's Meeting In Paris: The "Aid-India" Consortium ended a two-day review of India's economic progress in Paris on March 18 and adjourned until May 24 to meet in Washington when members will make specific pledges of aid for 1964-65.

No decisions were made at the talks, but authoritative sources said there appeared to be general acceptance of India's case for future aid.

In 1963-64 the 12 members of the Consortium—Austria, Belgium, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, USA, the World Bank and the International Development Agency—pledged aid totalling $1,052 million.

The sources said that India in presenting her case laid emphasis on two main points—the need for continuity in aid and the need for aid not tied to specific projects.

The Indian delegation said India did not want aid tied to specific requirements for the next 12 months. It urged a longer view.

Very special emphasis was laid on non-project aid because India was seeking a spectacular step-up in her growth rate during the next 12 months.

The sources said the Indian delegation pointed out steps already taken in this direction by the Indian Government itself and members of the Consortium considered this a good policy.

Non-project aid covered such questions as the balance of payments problem caused by debt repayments hanging over from the Second Plan and agriculture.

India considered that the aid required within the life of the Third Plan would be in the region of $3,800 million for planned projects, $1,000 million for debt repayments and $400 million for production of capital goods in India.

Mr. L. K. Jha, leader of the Indian delegation, followed up the two-day meeting in Paris with bilateral discussions with European member-Governments, beginning the talks with French Government officials.

D. Indian National Commission For Co-operation With UNESCO Meeting: The Indian National Commission for Co-operation with UNESCO, which ended its two-day session in New Delhi on March 22, has urged UNESCO to take up as a major project the abolition of illiteracy in areas of overwhelming illiteracy in the world.

It recommended the establishment of a cultural external publicity unit, which would prepare for the outside world audio-visual material about the life and culture of India.

Particular satisfaction was expressed at the progress in the field of education for international understanding. Allocation of larger funds for the purpose was urged.

The Commission emphasized the importance of teacher-training programmes, science and technical education, particularly at the secondary level, strengthening of higher education, including centres for advanced studies, and production of educational material.

It referred with approval to the project for mutual appreciation of Eastern and Western cultural values and suggested that it be continued.

The announcement about the establishment of a single Science Co-operation Office for Asia at Bangkok was welcomed. The Commission suggested that it should be situated near science institutions or laboratories. This would facilitate the use of science and technology for economic and social development.

E. Aid Protocol With USSR Signed: A Protocol stepping up Soviet economic aid to India with two more large industrial enterprises was signed in Moscow on March 28.

One of the two enterprises will produce rolled steel sheets for the construction of railway coaches.

The second enterprise will manufacture compressors and pumps, with an output capacity of 16,000 tons annually.

This plant will play a similar role in the development of India's independent industry which include other enterprises, such as heavy engineering, mining equipment, and heavy electrical equipment plants, being built with Soviet aid.

F. Shipping Agreement With UAR: A bilateral Agreement for the establishment of a shipping service between India and the United Arab Republic was signed in New Delhi on March 20 in the presence of Mr. Raj Bahadur, Minister of Transport, and Mr. Ahmed Hassan El-Feki, Ambassador of the UAR.

The Agreement provides for transportation of cargoes between India and UAR by the vessels of the two countries on the basis of parity.

The new shipping service is expected to be inaugurated as soon as the necessary preliminary arrangements have been completed.

The signatories to the Agreement were Mr. M. Mohamed Nadim on behalf of UAR and Dr. Nagendra Singh representing the Government of India.

G. Industrial Target Of Third Plan Not To Be Achieved—Mr. N. Kanungo's Forecast: The Central Minister for Industry, Mr. Nityanand Kanungo said in New Delhi on March 21 that the Third Plan targets in such major sectors as steel, alloy steels, aluminium, copper, pig-iron pipes, steel castings and forgings, nitrogenous and phosphatic fertilizers, sulphuric acid, newsprint, cement and cotton yarn were not likely to be achieved.

Stating this at the ninth meeting of the Standing Committee of the Central Advisory Council of Industries, he said that shortage of foreign exchange continued to be a major inhibiting factor on industrial growth, and there were no prospects of any immediate easing of the foreign exchange position.

But in many of these industries, the shortfalls were not substantial and in almost all of them, the entire capacity required to achieve the Plan targets had already been licensed. Every effort was now being made to remove impediments in the way of industrial growth.

He referred to the recent meeting of the "Aid-India" Consortium in Paris and expressed the hope that further external assistance would be pledged for India's developmental requirements in 1964-65. There was a growing appreciation of India's need to have external assistance in a more flexible form so that it could be utilized more effectively.

It was expected that more and more countries and institutions, like IBRD and IDA, would provide non-project assistance. Non-project assistance would enable India to make the maximum use of the existing industrial capacity and increase its exports of manufactured goods.

He said that although the trends in industrial production had been satisfactory, it had to be realised that the rate of growth of production was still below what was needed to achieve the targets envisaged in the Plan.

He said that the upward trend in industrial production had been maintained in the last year. The overall index of industrial production for the first 10 months of 1963 showed an increase of about nine per cent compared to the same period in 1962.

During the first half of 1963-64, cloth production increased, although it was lower than the level in the first half of 1962-63.

For the year as a whole, there were indications that the level of output in the cotton textile industry would be higher. The increase was expected to be particularly marked in the case of the decentralized sector. Output of jute and textiles had increased. Sugar production, which had declined by nearly 0.5 million tons to 2.2 million tons in 1962-63, was likely to recover to the earlier level attained in 1961-62.

Generally, it was expected that there would be an increase in industrial production based on agricultural raw materials, but the rate of growth was inevitably affected by the relatively slow rate of growth of output in agriculture.

H. Border Roads Programme: The border roads programme has been revised to include a road from Manali to Leh via Rohtang. It will be stretched back to Chandigarh from Manali through Bilaspur and Nangal.

When completed, the road will be able to take 3-ton trucks along its entire length. Stretches subject to rainfall or heavy traffic will be fully surfaced.

The new road represents only one of the further commitments accepted by the Border Roads Organization, whose overall programme has been stepped up from 2,500 miles of new roads and 1,500 miles of improvements in existing roads to 5,300 miles of new roads and 2,300 miles of improvements.

Disclosing this, the annual report for the Ministry of Transport pointed out that the Third Plan provision for roads in general had been stepped up from Rs. 324 crores to Rs. 416 crores. A substantial part of the addition was reserved for meeting the needs of heavy traffic in the north-eastern part of the country.

The Third Plan also included the construction of 300 miles of missing links in the national highway system, the building of 85 major bridges and the improvement of 3,000 miles of low-grade sections. Work completed so far comprises the completion of 120 miles of missing links, construction of 20 bridges and strengthening of 1,200 miles of existing sections.

I. Expansion Of Steel Plants: According to a Government review, the Bhilai Steel Plant which accounted for 82 per cent of the profit of Rs. 66.36 million made by Hindustan Steel in 1962-63, expects to complete its present expansion programme by the end of 1965.

Bhilai's fourth blast furnace will be commissioned in September, 1964.

The annual report of Hindustan Steel for 1962-63 and its review by the Government was placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on March 28.

The Government review said that the expansion of Rourkela and Durgapur steel plants was expected to be completed in 1966.

The profits made by the three steel plants and two coal washeries administered by Hindustan Steel did not provide for depreciation, and the company placed its net loss in 1962-63, after making provision for depreciation, at Rs. 239.08 million.

The cumulative loss of the company stood at Rs. 615.51 million on March 31, 1963.

The Government had to-date (March, 1964) invested Rs. 447 crores in the company's share capital and had advanced in addition loans totalling Rs. 357.1 crores.

The steel plants undertook production of special quality steels required for defence and also marketed new products during the year.

The gross sale of iron and steel materials during the year amounted to Rs. 130.5 crores as against Rs. 79.3 crores in 1961-62.

All the three steel plants increased the output, which during the year was 89 per cent in their rated capacity in iron, 83 per cent in ingot steel and 76 per cent in "saleable steel."

The Government review said that the general managers of all the three steel plants had now been invested with greater responsibility and authority. The responsibility for the proper and efficient functioning of these plants now rested with the general managers.

The production bonus scheme had helped increase production and had stabilized it at a high level.

J. Wheat Zones Formed: The Central Food Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, announced in the Lok Sabha on March 23 the formation of nine zones from which export and import of wheat and wheat products would be banned except by permits issued by the State Governments.

This step had been taken to "improve the price and supply position in important consuming States" and also enable the "Government to meet better the needs of other States for imported wheat".

Since permits for export and import of wheat would "not normally be granted on private trade account", the effect of this would be to allow inter-zone movement of wheat only through Governments or "State-sponsored accounts".

The wheat zones are as follows: (1) Punjab and the Union Territories of Delhi and Himachal Pradesh. Export of wheat and wheat products from this zone to Jammu and Kashmir will be permitted. (2) Uttar Pradesh. (3) Rajasthan. (4) Madhya Pradesh. (5) Bihar. (6) Maharashtra. Export of wheat and wheat products from this zone to Goa will be permitted. (7) Gujerat. (8) The southern States of Andhra Pradesh, Madras, Mysore, Kerala and Pondicherry. (9) The residual zone of the States of West Bengal, Orissa, Assam, Nagaland and the Union Territories of Tripura and Manipur.

K. Rocket Launching Site At Thumba—UN Sponsorship Recommended: It was stated in New York on March 19 that an international group of scientists had recommended that United Nations sponsor the rocket launching site at Thumba in Kerala which is to be used for research in the peaceful uses of outer space.

The "sponsorship" could take the form of financial, technical or other assistance. The recommendation has finally to be approved by the General Assembly, but this is considered a formality.

The rocket launching facility near Trivandrum became operational on November 21, 1963 when a Nike-Apache rocket carrying sodium vapour was fired. This was a joint India-France-USA research project and others are planned between India and the Soviet Union. India may invite other States to use the facilities.

The recommendation for sponsorship was made by the scientists appointed in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1963. Headed by Mr. Georgy Golyshev, Vice-President of the Soviet Geophysical Committee, the other members were from Sweden, Japan, Brazil, Argentina and USA. Its report was made public in a note from the Secretary-General to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (COSPAR).

Under UN sponsorship, information about the site's facilities and experiments will be available to all States, and India as the host State will report regularly to COSPAR on its work.

L. Increase In Procurement Price Of Rice: It was announced in New Delhi on March 24 that in order to build up a rice stock of one million tons, the Central Government had increased the procurement price of different varieties of rice in the main producing States.

This was in pursuance of the unanimous recommendation of the Food Ministers' Conference held in New Delhi in February that the farmer must receive a fair price for his produce. This price should bear some relation to the price paid by the consumer.

The price increase announced varies from Re. 1 to Rs. 2 a maund.

In 1963 nearly 7,00,000 tons of rice was procured, of which 4,46,000 tons was on the Central Government account. This year more than 4,00,000 tons of rice has been procured so far against a target of 7,50,000 tons set by the Centre. From the progress made in Punjab and Madhya Pradesh, where 1,65,000 tons and 1,00,000 tons of rice respectively has been procured, the target appears to be within reach.

The revised procurement prices are: Andhra Pradesh (Akkullu variety) Rs. 19.50; Madras (Kattai Samba) Rs. 19.25; Madhya Pradesh (Gurmatia) Rs. 17; Assam (coarse) Rs. 19.29 to Rs. 20.59; and UP (gadre, grade four) Rs. 17.

Corresponding changes have been made in the prices of other varieties of rice on the basis of the existing differentials.

The Centre has taken various steps to intensify purchases of rice. Paddy will be procured directly from cultivators in areas where prices have shown a tendency to decline to levels needing price support. In Assam, the system of monopoly procurement through co-operatives will continue.

In Punjab, UP, Madhya Pradesh and Orissa, procurement by a system of levy on rice millers and wholesalers will also continue. In UP and Madhya Pradesh the rate of levy has been increased, and in Madras a system of levy has been introduced by voluntary agreement with the trade.

Rice is being procured on the Central account in Andhra, Madhya Pradesh, Madras and Punjab, Assam, Orissa, UP and Tripura are procuring rice on their own accounts.

M. National Debt: The national debt of India was Rs. 7,621 crores on March 31, 1963, including market borrowings totalling Rs. 2,871 crores.

Comparatively, the Central Budget crossed the Rs. 2,000-crore mark for the first time this year.

Giving the debt figures in its latest report, the Lok Sabha's Public Accounts Committee has pleaded for the second year in succession that the Finance Ministry should make a study of the procedure followed in democratic countries to obtain parliamentary approval for Government borrowing.

The Committee favours an act of Parliament to fix a limit on Government borrowings. The two opportunities Parliament has of reviewing the Government

N. Causes Of Air Accidents—Inquiry Committee Appointed: The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan announced in New Delhi on March 23 the setting up of a committee to investigate the causes of recent air accidents in operational areas and suggest remedial measures.

The committee with Mr. S. S. Khera, Cabinet Secretary, as the Chairman, will have Mr. R. N. Katju, Director-General of Civil Aviation, and Air Vice-Marshal Arjan Singh, Vice-Chief of the Air Staff, as members.

Mr. Chavan turned down the suggestion for a parliamentary commission on the ground that it might have a demoralizing effect on members of the IAF and also because of the large amount of operational data that would have to be sifted.

While agreeing that accidents were bad, he pointed out that the ratio of flying hours to the number of air accidents was within reasonable limits.

The terms of reference of the committee are:

(1) To examine the existing regulations and arrangements for flying and flying-safety and for clearing an aircraft as fit for flying and the standards of training of a pilot in relation to the task entrusted to him;

(2) To examine past regulations and arrangements and their implementation; and,

(3) To recommend remedial measures, if any, to minimize air accidents in the Air Force.

O. Prospects Of Shipping Industry: An article in Indian Shipping, the journal of the Indian National Steamship Owners' Association, says that the prospects for the current year appear quite bright for shipping companies.

The conclusion was based on an analysis of the statements of accounts for 1962-63 of 17 shipping companies, which accounted for nearly 88 per cent of the Indian tonnage at the beginning of 1963, and the subsequent favourable developments.

Income by freight, passage money and charter hire of these companies increased by Rs. 4.27 crores, or by a little over nine per cent, to Rs. 49.85 crores. Operating, establishment and other expenses moved up by only Rs. 1.98 crores, or by five per cent, to Rs. 41.42 crores.

Provision for depreciation at Rs. 6.42 crores was at about the previous year's level, but the tax provision more than doubled from Rs. 40,12,000 to Rs. 92,19,000. In the result, the net profit at Rs. 2.78 crores, although small in relation to fleet-at-cost of Rs. 118.75 crores, showed a substantial improvement over the previous year's figure of Rs. 68,75,000.

Among the 17 companies, only four (India Steam, Bombay Steam, Kamal and one small company) suffered losses, but the rest were able to show modest profits. India Steam's loss was very much less than in the previous year.

Only four companies, however, were able to declare dividends, while one company decided to issue bonus shares instead of paying a dividend.

The total paid-up capital of the 17 companies remained stationary at Rs. 41.95 crores and the over-all increase in the fleet-at-cost was small—only Rs. 4.4 crores. Several of the companies, however, made substantial additions to their fleets subsequently and these will be reflected in the statements of accounts for the current year.

The article pointed out that the year, covered by the balance-sheets of the companies, was one of continued depression in world freight markets and increasing competition in securing cargoes. The directors of practically all the companies stated in their reports to the share-holders, that operating costs like wages, port dues, cargo handling charges etc. had kept on increasing.

In the face of these difficulties, the improvement in the results of working must be attributed first to the increase in freight rates on various routes such as the American and the UK-Continent routes and on the Indian coast by 10 to 12½ per cent effected at various points of time since 1961; secondly, to the slight improvement in the Hooghly drafts and to the absence of strikes of any serious nature directly affecting operation of ships on the coast; and also to the increase in the strength of fleet of some of the companies.

P. Progress Of Irrigation Schemes: Through the execution of major and medium irrigation schemes, 16.3 million acres of land in the country is now assured of water supply for agriculture as against 14.3 million acres in 1962-63.

This was revealed in the annual report of the Ministry of Irrigation and Power for 1963-64 released in New Delhi on March 22.

The installed power capacity in the country has risen to 7.5 million kw compared to 6.7 million kw in 1962-63 showing an increase of 800,000 kw during the year.

By the end of 1963-64, about Rs. 291 crores will have been utilized for irrigation against the Plan provision of Rs. 600 crores.

The utilization of the water resources by irrigation has risen to 80 per cent of the potential created.

Although "these are advances in the right direction, in the context of the leeway to be made up and the national emergency, the pace and magnitude of achievement have to be further stepped up to the maximum extent possible."

The total generating capacity in the country by the end of the Third Plan will be of the order of 12.5 million kw. The benefits in the Fourth Plan from schemes continuing from the Third are estimated at 5 million kw.

The estimated cost of the power programme in the public sector during the Third Plan is Rs. 1,039 crores. Investment in the private sector is expected to be about Rs. 50 crores.

Q. Record Production Of Iron-ore: Production of iron-ore in the country during 1963 touched a record figure of just over 20 million tonnes, according to official figures.

This means an increase of more than one million tonnes over the previous year's output.

Production in all the States, except Goa, totalled about 15 million tonnes, while Goa alone contributed over five million tonnes.

R. Industrial Production During 1963: According to the annual report of the Ministry of Industry, industrial production in India rose by 8.9 per cent during 1963.

The index of industrial production, with 1965 as base, touched an average of 161.4 during January-October, 1963.

With the exception of cotton cloth, where production recorded a "small decline", steady progress was maintained in other items.

In the case of aluminium and domestic refrigerators, the increase in output was remarkable. There was 30 to 40 per cent increase in the production of other items such as weighing machinery, machine tools, aluminium conductors, paper and paper board.

In steel castings, power-driven pumps, electric motors, electric lamps, radio receivers, paper, insulated cables, automobile tyres and tubes, bicycle tyres and leather footwear, the increase in production was between 10 and 30 per cent.

Substantial additions to capacity were made in a number of industries, such as sewing machines, electric fans and aluminium power transformers.

Production of jute manufactures and their exports touched record figures during the year.

Priority continued to be given to measures to increase the output of defence oriented industries. In commodities such as steel, engineering goods and chemical products, the report said it was possible to switch to defence production without much dislocation.

Referring to the licensing of industries, the report said that cumbersome and time-consuming procedures were being drastically simplified so as to accelerate the establishment of new units. Establishment of new industrial units with fixed assets up to Rs. 25,00,000 had been exempted from licensing.

The report noted that foreign financial participation in Indian industries had been gradually increasing, thus bringing in foreign exchange as well as technical 'know-how' in specialised fields.

As against 299 cases of foreign collaboration approved in 1962, 309 cases were approved in 1963, of which eight cases related to the establishment of consultancy engineering units in the country.

S. Progress Of Telephone Industry: According to the annual report of the Department of Posts and Telegraphs for 1963-64, the Indian Telephone Industries (ITI), Bangalore, has now taken up the manufacture of a number of new items of telephone equipment.

The report stated that for the first time co-axial line equipment was manufactured in the country without any foreign assistance. This equipment had been tested and had been passed for installation.

Another item taken up for manufacture for the first time at the ITI factory was the supervisory remote control machine for railways.

In a number of other cases, such as ampliphone and telephone with visual indicator, bulk production had been started for the first time in the factory.

On the side of electronic measuring instruments, the report observed that 700 different instruments had already been manufactured in the ITI factory. Another 1,000 instruments were expected to be completed by the end of 1963-64.

According to the report, the sales from ITI during 1962-63 was Rs. 7.73 crores as against Rs. 7 crores targeted. For 1963-64, the value of sales was anticipated to be of the order of Rs. 9 crores.

Exports of telephone equipment during 1963-64 had been estimated at about Rs. 9,00,000, the importing countries being Nepal, Ceylon, Sudan, Egypt, Uganda and Kuwait.

The report observed that continued efforts were being made towards securing more exports, particularly in countries of South-East Asia, Middle East and Africa.

The report said that the Hindustan Teleprinters factory in Madras had progressively increased the indigenous content in the teleprinters manufactured by them. Indigenous content was expected to be about 60 per cent by March, 1964. A target of 1,326 teleprinters for the period May, 1963 to April, 1964 had been fixed, which was expected to be achieved.

U. Goa Government's Token Defeat: The Government of Goa, Daman and Diu suffered its first defeat on March 19 when one of the amendments moved by the Opposition to the Entertainment Bill was accepted by the House. Some other consequential amendments were also accepted.

Another amendment was rejected and two others were accepted by the Government without a division.

The 30-member Assembly has 14 Maharashtrawadi Gomantak (ruling party) members, two P-SP members supporting the ruling party, 12 United Goans, one Independent (Diu) and one Congressman (Daman).

One Maharashtrawadi Gomantak member being absent and one occupying the Speaker's chair, the ruling party had only 14, including two P-SP members present in the House. The Congressman and the Independent voted with the Opposition. In the resulting tie the Speaker cast his vote with the Opposition.

Explaining his vote, the Speaker said his duty was to vote for the status quo or any proposal that was nearer the status quo. The amendment of the Opposition sought to revise the officially proposed rates of taxation and he felt that the amendment was nearer to the status quo.

During the voting on the Opposition amendment that was rejected the members from Daman and Diu abstained.

It was designed to provide irrigation facilities to an extent of 2,40,000 acres and to produce power with an installed capacity of 1,80,000 kw in five power stations. The Aliyar reservoir of the project had been completed and water had been let down to irrigate 17,500 acres.

He said that all the new irrigation schemes taken during the Second Plan period had been completed and full potential created except in the case of the Parambikulam-Aliyar project.

Z. K. M. Nanavati Released: K. M. Nanavati, formerly of the Indian Navy, who was undergoing a sentence of life imprisonment for the murder of a Bombay businessman, was released by a decree of the Governor of Maharashtra on March 18.

The Governor, Mrs. Vijayalakshmi Pandit, passed the decree ordering remission of the sentence under Article 161 of the Indian Constitution in view of Nanavati's "good behaviour" and "distinguished record of service to the Indian Navy."

Nanavati had been on parole since the middle of September, 1963 on medical grounds and it expired on March 16, 1964 after which the decree for the remission was passed.

Nanavati was convicted and sentenced by the Bombay High Court on March 11, 1960 for causing the death of Prem Bhagwandas Ahuja under a grave provocation in which Mrs. Nanavati was involved.

The trial of Nanavati had aroused countrywide interest. After a long-drawn sessions trial, the jury's verdict by eight to one went in favour of the accused. The Sessions Judge, holding the verdict as perverse, referred the case to the High Court.

A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court, composed of Mr. Justice J. M. Shelat and Mr. Justice V. A. Naik, held Nanavati guilty and gave him a life sentence.

The then Governor of Bombay, Mr. Sri Prakasa, suspended the sentence till the appeal filed by Commander Nanavati in the Supreme Court against his conviction and sentence was disposed of. Meanwhile, Nanavati was detained in Naval custody. The Governor had relied on Article 161 of the Constitution to pass the decree.

The Governor's decree, according to constitutional experts, was unprecedented in the legal history of the country.

In the subsequent hearing in the Supreme Court, Commander Nanavati was found guilty. The Supreme Court confirmed the sentence of life imprisonment

INDONESIA

A. Dr. A. Sukarno On Foreign Aid: President A. Sukarno said in Djakarta on February 20 that foreign countries which were giving aid to Indonesia, but did not approve of the Indonesian revolution, were welcome to withdraw their support.

"You may withdraw your economic aid. We will not withdraw one step because we are rich in natural wealth, man-power, while all groups and layers of people—workers, farmers, soldiers and private businessmen—fully support the revolution."

He said Indonesia was a country rich in resources and man-power and the people were united behind the common cause.

He was speaking to a gathering of private businessmen on the occasion of the inauguration of a Government-controlled "consultative body" which will advise them on ways to conduct their activities.

Antara news agency, in its official report of the speech, said he had addressed his remarks about aid withdrawal to foreign countries which were "enemies of the Indonesian Revolution."

During his speech, he said the friends of the Indonesian Revolution were well known because they held aloft the same ideals to create a new world of the "New Emerging Forces." "This ideal will certainly be achieved because the slogan of Indonesia and the other new emerging forces is 'onward, no retreat', to a new just world in which exploitation of man by man does not exist.

"The enemies of our revolution are also well known. They try with all their means to destroy us. They paint the Indonesians black, saying things like 'Indonesians eat stones', 'Sukarno will topple', and 'Disaster in Indonesia'. But we face these accusations unflinchingly."

JAPAN

A. US Ambassador Stabbed —Mr. T. Hayakawa Resigns: The American Ambassador, Mr. Edwin O. Reischauer, was stabbed in the leg by a Japanese youth in Tokyo on March 24.

The alleged assailant—19-year-old Kazua Shiya—was arrested immediately.

The stabbing incident was not linked with any organization or group in the country.

On March 25, Mr. Takashi Hayakawa, Home Affairs Minister, tendered his resignation, assuming "political responsibility" for the stabbing.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, accepted the resignation and appointed Mr. Mazamichi Akazawa, a member of the House of Representatives as the new Home Affairs Minister.

Mr. Ikeda called on Mrs. Reischauer at the US Embassy to apologize for the attempt on the life of Mr. Reischauer. Earlier he had sent a cable of apologies to President L. B. Johnson of USA.

President Johnson in reply to Mr. Ikeda's message assured the Japanese Premier that the incident would not affect the deep-rooted US-Japanese friendship.

The Tokyo Police announced that the alleged assailant was mentally deranged and no group, Right or Left, was involved in the incident.

The number of such mentally deranged people in Japan, according to the Health and Welfare Ministry, was 1,240,000 and two-thirds of them were at large.

B. Right To Renounce No-War Clause In Constitution—Study Council's Report: A Constitution Study Council, in its report made public in the first week of February, maintained that Japan as an independent country had a right to defend itself and that Article 9 of the Constitution should be revised.

The majority members of the Council, organized seven years ago by the Government, claimed that even under the existing war-renouncing Article, Japan could possess self-defence power and that the present self-defence forces were not unconstitutional.

[The post-War Constitution, which stripped the Emperor of political power, said in Article 9: "Aspiring sincerely to an international peace based on justice and order, the Japanese people forever renounce war as a sovereign right of the nation and the threat of force as means of settling international disputes. In order to accomplish the aim of the preceding paragraph, land, sea and air forces, as well as other war potential, will never be maintained. The right of belligerency of the State will not be recognized."]

The report held that Japan could cooperate with UN and participate in collective security alliances and that the existing US-Japan Security Treaty was not a violation of Japan's Constitution.

In one of its most controversial subjects, the majority opinion supported the present status of the Emperor as a symbol of the nation without political power.

The minority opinion, however, insisted that the Emperor should assume the authority of a ruler or a constitutional monarch.

Some members of the Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda's ruling Liberal Democratic Party have urged revision of the Constitution to restore the Emperor as Head of the State with appropriate political prestige. But Mr. Ikeda has refused to support the movement. He has steadfastly declared that the Constitution will not be revised until there is such a demand from the nation at large.

The Opposition Socialists have campaigned to protect the Constitution in its present form.

KOREA (South)

A. Anti-Japanese Demonstrations: About 3,300 students clashed with riot police, using tear-gas bombs and clubs, in street demonstrations in Seoul on March 24 against Government attempts to resume normal relations with Japan.

Radio reports said the police used about 20 tear-gas bombs against the students. About 30 policemen were injured in the clashes. About 300 students were arrested.

The demonstrations were the biggest since the student uprising four years ago which led to the collapse of President Syngman Rhee's Government.

The main opposition Civil Rule Party decided that its members in the National Assembly should resign in protest if the Government continued negotiations with Japan.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Too Sun Choi, called an emergency Cabinet meeting to discuss the demonstration.

Talks On Normalization Of Relations:

Meanwhile, according to Tokyo sources, the 12-year-long talks on the normalization of relations between Japan and South Korea will conclude in May.

Despite the insistence of a section of the ruling Japanese Liberal Democratic Party and business and industrial circles, the Japanese Government was lukewarm because the normalization of relations would not benefit it as much as South Korea.

For Japan, the conclusion of the prolonged talks would mean the execution not only of heavy economic but also political commitments which are in essence no more than reparations for the damage inflicted during World War II and the occupation of South Korea years before that.

The two countries have agreed that Japan should make available to South Korea a grant of $300 million and a credit of $200 million.

Talks on fishing rights are in progress. They are expected to end in the virtual abolition of the restrictive Peace (Rhee) Line (the post-Korean War designation of the MacArthur Line) and the establishment of two fishing zones—one under exclusive Korean control and the other to be jointly controlled by the two countries.

So far as the Korean fishing industry is concerned, the elimination of the Peace Line would mean a loss of precious sanctuary to a fishing population of 800,000.

Many Koreans are not only opposed to the fishing concessions which their Government is understood to be willing to make but also to the whole concept of establishing relations between the two countries on the pattern which they say "helps restore Japanese rule" over South Korea through "economic exploitation."

South Korea as a whole is nervous over Japan's economic advance into the country whose economy has depended largely on the $55,200 million military and economic aid USA has made available in the past 18 years.

Japanese capital and consumer goods industries are busy preparing themselves to make a substantial advance into South Korea once normal relations between the two countries are formally established. Several Japanese firms are engaged in economic activities largely catering for State projects of heavy and medium industries.

Negotiations between Japan and South Korea had been characterized by two factors. One was that the talks were held between a vanquished colonial Power and its former territory in which an embittered people had sought freedom from half-a-century of "oppressive" rule. Indeed, this emotional factor complicated and prolonged an issue which was otherwise a straight one.

The other factor was that USA is known to be a positive supporter of normalised relations between the two North-East Asian countries for military and political reasons.

Though the allegation that USA wanted to form a North-East Asian Treaty Organization (N-EATO) when Japan and South Korea normalized relations has lost much of its initial force, opposition to such normalization carries considerable weight mainly because of the argument that the establishment of normal relations with one half of Korea would help perpetuate the division of the peninsula between the north and the south.

MALAYSIA

A. Call-up Of Reservists: The Malaysian Government on March 21 issued a proclamation recalling to the colours Army and Air Force reservists.

Members of the Territorial Army, the Royal Malaysian Naval Volunteer Reserve and the Royal Malaysian Air Force Volunteer Reserve also become liable for full-time duty under the proclamation.

A Defence Ministry official, however, emphasized that the proclamation did not constitute general mobilization.

He said that reserve resources would be tapped as and when required. Notices recalling individuals would be sent within the next few days, and the first categories affected would be officers and technicians. Others would be called up later to relieve regular forces of duties of a static or administrative nature, but men recalled would be liable for service in Borneo if the need should arise.

The Government had earlier decided that all able-bodied male citizens aged from 21 to 28 should be called up for national service either in the armed forces or civil defence to bring the nation to a full state of preparedness to meet any situation that may arise from Indonesia's "confrontation" policy.

The call-up would apply to Singapore, Sabah, and Sarawak and it was expected that the measure would eventually affect about 500,000 men.

A Cabinet statement had described the present situation as serious and announced the appointment of a committee to implement the decision immediately.

NEPAL

A. Restrictions On Circulation Of Indian Currency: On April 1 the circulation of Indian currency in Nepal was restricted further and Indian Government establishments in Nepal switched over to the use of Nepalese currency.

The treasury at the Indian Embassy in Khatmandu, which was handling a few crores of Indian rupees every month, started dealing only in Nepalese currency for departmental purposes from that date.

In mid-August, 1963, the Nepalese Government made its currency the only legal tender in the country. At that time, the Government of India asked for a grace period to enable its establishments to fall in line with this change. The treasury had long been maintaining sufficient stock of Indian currency to pay not only the Embassy staff but also Indian military liaison group and Indian aid mission personnel, contractors and pensioners, mainly Gorkha ex-Servicemen living in the country.

Since August, 1963 the circulation of Indian currency stopped in about 24 districts. In some other districts, particularly in the terai area and the northern region, Indian currency continues to be circulated. While pensioners and businessmen in these places receiving payment from Indian official sources may experience some initial difficulty after the changeover, it is likely to help in preventing the export of Indian currency to other countries.

B. India To Build Five Airports: The Indian Minister of State for External Affairs, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon announced in the Lok Sabha on March 23 that India had agreed to build five airports in Nepal and also construct a hangar at the Gauchar airport in Nepal.

She said that the proposal to construct these airports had been finalised between India and Nepal. The terms of an agreement for the purpose were under negotiation.

The facilities which India would be given in regard to usage of the airports would be determined by the terms of the agreement.

She said that the construction of the hangar at Gauchar might cost about Rs. 4,64,000 while the cost of construction of other airports over Rs. 6,00,000. The offer made by India was a part of the aid to be given to Nepal.

C. Loan Talks With Japan Fail: It was officially announced in Khatmandu on March 19 that talks between Nepal and Japan on the latter's offer of a $1 million loan for Nepal's industrial development had broken down.

The negotiations came to a deadlock on the rate of interest and grace period offered by Japan.

PAKISTAN

A. President A. S. Arif's Visit: The President of Iraq, Field-Marshal Abdul Salam Arif, arrived in Karachi on March 20 on a State visit.

He was received at the airport by President Ayub Khan who referred to the "everlasting ties of Islam" between the peoples of Pakistan and Iraq.

The first round of formal talks between President Arif and President Ayub Khan were held in Karachi on March 21. They were understood to have covered a wide range of subjects, closely surveying the international situation.

Civic Reception:

Addressing a gathering at a civic reception in his honour in Karachi on March 21, President Arif said that Pakistan and Iraq were in agreement on the question of implementation of the Bandung Conference resolutions.

He said the people of Iraq and Pakistan, having "common faith and historical and cultural ties," would continue co-operating with each other like brothers for the protection of world peace "which is so vital to us."

The welcome address pointed out to President Arif that "tyrannic domination by the Indian Government of 40,00,000 unarmed Muslims of Jammu and Kashmir was a big challenge not only for Pakistan but also for United Nations and the entire civilized world."

It assured him that Pakistan considered all problems faced by the Arab world as her own, and stressed that their common ideals demanded that the entire Muslim "Millat" should also treat Pakistan's problems as its own.

Drawing his attention to "this important problem" of Kashmir, it expressed the hope that the love for Islam of Iraq and other Arab countries would help truth and justice emerge victorious.

State Banquet:

President Ayub Khan gave a State banquet in honour of President Arif in Karachi on March 21.

In his speech President Ayub Khan said: "We are honoured by your presence among us this evening, and let me say once again that it gives me great pleasure to welcome you and your distinguished companions to Pakistan.

"Your country, Mr. President, has been the cradle of ancient history, the home of many a venerable prophet and the scene of some of the biggest events of the Middle Ages. Your land lay in the way of travellers, conquerors, traders and scholars in search of knowledge and truth. It was the natural meeting place between East and West when the land route was the common link between the two.

"Mr. President, I am happy to note that our two peoples cherish the most friendly feelings towards each other, and that relations between Iraq and Pakistan have always been based on goodwill and understanding. I hope and pray that our relations grow friendlier as time passes. I can assure you Mr. President, and through you the people of Iraq, that we wish nothing but the best to you and your people."

President Arif said: "It is a pleasure to me to stand here thanking my brother Ayub Khan, the President of the Republic of Pakistan. I can truly say that this meeting is an expression of the meeting of the two brotherly peoples who have the strongest ties. These ties, which have never been ruptured and which grow every day, are based on culture, faith and history.

"We have a unity of purpose: both of us seek peace, both of us combat colonialism and both of us aim at international brotherhood.

"We regard Pakistan with deep affection and we try our best to strengthen our mutual political, cultural and commercial relations. The strong ties between us which go a long way back in history may be a help in this. If our faith has united our common endeavour and cemented our relations, it has helped us to understand each other; we are united, still more, in trying to act according to the principles of Islam and the UN Charter and in agreement as to the need to bring into force the resolution of the Bandung Conference.

"We are confident that we are brothers trying to co-operate in preserving world peace and in making a contribution to civilization."

In Dacca:

President Arif was honoured at a civic reception in Dacca on March 25.

He assured the people of Pakistan that Iraq would always stand by Pakistan in her trials and tribulations.

He extended an invitation to the East Pakistan Governor, Mr. Abdul Moneim Khan, to visit Iraq.

He left Dacca for New Delhi on March 26.

Joint Communique:

The following is the joint communique signed by President Arif and President Ayub Khan in Rawalpindi on March 23:

"The President of Iraq and the President of Pakistan held talks in Karachi and again at Rawalpindi, during which they exchanged views on a wide range of subjects affecting the interests of this region generally and their two countries in particular. These talks were held in an atmosphere of understanding and deep fraternal goodwill. The Presidents were gratified to note that relations between Iraq and Pakistan were moving ever closer and were based on complete mutual trust and understanding. They expressed their belief that the ties of faith, culture and history that bind their two peoples would become increasingly stronger. The visit of the President of Iraq to Pakistan had helped cement those ties.

"The two Presidents noted that both Iraq and Pakistan were engaged in a common struggle for the economic betterment of their respective peoples. They considered that the maintenance of international peace was a vital need for the survival and progress of mankind; it was a most important prerequisite for the success of their own endeavour in national reconstruction. In their view, international peace and progress could be maintained only if international disputes were not allowed to fester but were solved peacefully in accordance with the dictates of justice and equity with all possible speed.

"Both Presidents expressed their firm faith in the justice of the cause of the people of Palestine. They welcomed the resolutions adopted by the recent Arab Summit Conference to protect the rights of the Arab people to the waters of the Jordan River. The President of Pakistan expressed gratification at the spirit of unity shown by the Arab States at that Conference.

"The President of Pakistan explained the current situation in regard to Kashmir. The President of Iraq evinced a deep understanding and expressed the hope that the dispute will be resolved early in accordance with the spirit of Afro-Asian solidarity and in conformity with the principles of the United Nations resolutions.

"The two Presidents welcomed the proposals to hold a second Conference of Afro-Asian countries. They agreed that the Conference would serve to strengthen solidarity among the Governments and peoples of Asia and Africa and further the cause of international harmony and peace.

"Warmly welcoming the emergence of new independent States in Asia and Africa, the two Presidents agreed on the need to continue to oppose colonialism and racialism wherever and in whatever form it existed. They considered that there was a need also for continued vigilance on the part of the emergent nations against likely inroads by neo-colonialism in different guises.

"The two Presidents agreed that further consultations should be held between their Governments to devise measures that would promote trade and cultural relations between the two countries.

"The President of Iraq extended an invitation to the President of Pakistan to visit the Republic of Iraq at a time convenient to him. The President of Pakistan accepted the invitation with pleasure."

B. Pakistan Day Celebrations: Ceremonial parades by armed forces, prayers in mosques for the solidarity of Pakistan, scout rallies and illuminations formed the highlights of the Pakistan Day celebrations throughout the country on March 23.

In a message on the occasion, President Ayub Khan said: "We celebrate Pakistan Day once in 12 months. What we need is to make every day of our life, in thought and action, something of a day for Pakistan, so that each day that we live should become a proud heritage for the future generations.

"Our thinking can have meaning and our action can acquire purpose only if they contribute to the advancement of the nation as a whole.

"By the circumstances of our origin and because of the way we are placed today, we must adopt the task of developing a national outlook as a mission in life.

"Parochialism and patriotism are mutually exclusive and incompatible with one another. The evil consequences of parochialism ramify through every level of our society; they lie insidiously at the very root of all our troubles today, and if they are not attacked with vigour here and now will, slowly but surely, weaken our position as free people.

"No small, or even parallel loyalties should be tolerated, no matter what the gains to a group or a section thereby. The national perspective should be basic and all-pervading.

"Without national unity there can also be no socio-economic progress. We must ensure that Pakistan grows from strength to strength, and that the tempo of its advancement is quickened. We do not have time to lose.

"The maxim of historians and theoreticians, who think in terms of centuries and millenia, that a decade or two are nothing in the life of a nation, is not relevant to us. Every day of our life counts, and every week that passes must produce clear and perceptible signs of progress in national life.

"The nabu'at of our Prophet lasted only for 23 years; but within that short span of time, it brought about a momentous change in the minds and the life of his people. Those who were low and degenerate before his time were able, soon after him, to break out into the world, and to change the whole course of history. We have the Prophet's life and teachings before us to inspire us to greater effort.

"We are living in a time when no country lives in isolation. There are events that are none of our making, and yet they impinge upon us sufficiently to impel us to take cognizance of them.

"Also, not all our neighbours are our friends. One such neighbour has enormously aggravated our difficulties, especially recently. There may be more trying times ahead of us. This makes it all the more imperative that we develop our own resources as fast as possible.

"What use we make of our freedom will, in the end, be our choice. It will be easy to be carried away by catch-phrases, by slogans, and by emotional evocations of what has only a specious relevance to our conditions or our time. It is comparatively difficult to be realistic, to weigh things and reach conclusions on merit. I shall, however, commend the latter course.

"Whenever things seem unhappy as sometimes they well may, and you feel impatient, it will only be fair if you ask yourself whether you yourself are making an honest effort in your own field, whether you are doing your own bit for the good of the nation."

C. Franchise Committee Report Presented To National Assembly: The report of the Franchise Committee, which was presented to the National Assembly in Rawalpindi on March 21, called for giving the provision of indirect election in the Constitution a fair trial.

Of the 17 members of the Committee, seven belonging to the Opposition submitted a note of dissent. The rest of the nine members, belonging to the ruling Party, signed the report. The Chairman of the Committee was Ch. Zahur Ilahi.

The report signed by the nine members said: "We, the undersigned members of the Special Committee to which the report of the Franchise Commission was referred to have given our very serious consideration to the various aspects of the recommendations made by the Franchise Commission and have the honour to submit this report.

"The provision in the Constitution with regard to the election of the President and the members of the National and Provincial Assemblies is contained in Chapter 2 of Part VII which prescribes the method of election in an indirect manner by dividing each Province into not less than 40,000 territorial units and for the creation of an electoral college consisting of persons elected by each of these units on the basis of adult franchise. This electoral college of Pakistan is to elect the President of Pakistan and the members of the National and the two Provincial Assemblies.

"The Constitution also provides that the members of the electoral college shall in addition to their functions under the Constitution have such other functions as may be conferred on them by law, in particular provision may be made by law for conferring on the members of the electoral college functions in relation to matters of local Government.

"The provision for indirect election provided for in the Constitution became the subject-matter of comment both in the Press and on the platform. Therefore, the Government appointed a Franchise Commission in August, 1962.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The Franchise Commission inter alia, was of the view:

"(a) That the electoral system prescribed by Chapter 2 of Part VII of the Constitution is not an efficacious and appropriate instrument for a realistic representation of the people.

"(b) That universal adult franchise, should be the basis of election of the President and members of the National and the Provincial Assemblies.

"(c) That the next presidential election alone may be held indirectly through an electoral college but all successive presidential elections thereafter should be held direct on the basis of universal adult franchise.

"The Government presented the report of the Commission to the National Assembly and on December 13, 1963 the report of the Franchise Commission was referred to this Special Committee, consisting of 17 members, for suggesting suitable legislation. The Special Committee held several meetings. Some of the members, at one stage, refused to participate in the proceedings of the Special Committee and abstained from the meetings.

"The Special Committee, however, after giving anxious consideration to the report of the Franchise Commission have come to the conclusion that the provision of indirect election made in the Constitution should be given a fair trial.

"In a direct election the electors choose their representatives by actually voting for them. Whereas in an indirect election the electors choose an intermediary body which chooses the representatives. This body is called the electoral college. Under the transitional and temporary provisions of the Constitution the electoral college for the first election of the members of the National and Provincial Assemblies was constituted by the members of the Union Councils. Union Committees and Town Committees elected under the Basic Democracies Order, 1959. The election of these members under the Basic Democracies order took place during the Martial Law regime when no political parties were functioning. Now the political parties are functioning and the persons who will be elected as members of the electoral college of Pakistan will come with clear mandate from the people for election of the President and the members of the National and Provincial Assemblies.

"The system of election of the President and the members of the Legislatures by electoral college is favoured in some modern democracies.

"The philosophy on which electoral college system provided in the Constitution is based is that it provides a simple and effecitve electoral machinery, best suited in the circumstances and conditions of our country to ascertain the will of the people.

"The indirect elections as provided in the Constitution are not only administratively better manageable and comparatively less expensive for the public exchequer but also less costly and troublesome for the candidates.

"The cost in the last General Elections of the members of the three Assemblies was only Rs. 12,00,000 compared with the estimated cost of Rs. 2 crores under the direct system.

"Apart from these, the cost of printing the voters list on adult franchise basis for direct election would require crores of rupees whereas under the present system each electoral unit will have a separate electoral roll which will not be of any interest or value to the neighbouring electoral units. Such electoral rolls, therefore, do not require printing in large number because under Article 158(I), the persons enrolled on the electoral roll for an electoral unit are required to elect from amongst themselves a person who shall be known as 'elector' of that unit.

"This Committee, after giving its anxious consideration to report of the Franchise Commission, has come to the conclusion that the system of electoral college as provided in the Constitution be given a fair trial and recommend that the Government should bring suitable legislation, which would, inter alia provide for:

"(a) Election of the members of the electoral college, election of the members of the National and Provincial Assemblies, election of the President and conduct of referendum. The life of the electoral college should be co-extensive with the tenure of the President and the National Assembly but it should come into existence six months earlier.

"(b) An electoral roll shall be maintained for each electoral unit in manuscript form. To safeguard against tampering, a copy may be kept in the office of the Union Council, Tehsil, Thana Council, District Council, Divisional Council, Collector and Commissioner. Such copies be made available for purchase for 25 paisa. Provision may be made for insertion of new names and for deletion of those who have become ineligible.

"(c) Maximum expenditure to be incurred at an election by a candidate should be fixed at Rs. 10,000 in the case of a Provincial Assembly and Rs. 15,000 in the case of National Assembly. The power to conduct elections should be delegated by the Central Government to the Provincial Governments.

"(d) Certain prescribed principles are to be observed for the delimitation of the electoral units.

"(e) Provision for ensuring secrecy of the ballot in election should be made.

"(f) In the case of a joint sitting of the three Assemblies under Article 167 for selecting three candidates for the Presidential election, each member of the Assembly attending the joint session shall have only one vote and the three candidates securing the highest number of votes shall be considered to have been selected.

"(g) Article 169 should be suitably amended to provide that the members of the National Assembly can elect three members from each Province to the seats in the National Assembly reserved exclusively for women."

Dissenting Note:

Six Opposition members in a Note of dissent supported the direct system of elections, but showed their readiness to accept the recommendations of the Franchise Commission as a compromise measure.

The dissenting members in a joint Note said that the direct system of franchise was the undisputed system prevalent in all those countries where representative democratic form of government was in existence.

Tracing the history of the franchise question in the Indo-Pakistan subcontinent, the Note said that Minto-Morley Reforms of 1909 inaugurated partially the system of direct elections in India, but after the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms in 1919 elections to all legislatures became direct and they were a great success.

The members, in their Note, said: "But we cannot help remarking that it is such a tragedy that the people of Pakistan should be deprived even of those rights which they had been enjoying under alien rule."

Of the present system the Note said that it had been given a trial in 1962 and in the numerous by-elections and it proved that the system had been found disastrous and wanting.

In the light of past experience it would be a fraud on the people of this country to persist in the present discredited system of indirect elections.

The report said that during the course of the Special Committee's meetings, the Opposition members were informed that the Government did not intend to bring about any change in the present system of indirect elections and that it could not accept the recommendations of the Franchise Commission and wanted to maintain status quo.

The announcement of the Government produced a complete deadlock but in order to resolve the constitutional impasse they showed their readiness to accept the recommendations of the Franchise Commission as a compromise measure, but the Government spurned their offer summarily. In view of the diametrically opposed and unbridged views, they decided to walk out of the meeting and boycott future meetings of the Committee.

The report said: "It appears to us totally superfluous to enumerate the advantages of direct system of election on the basis of universal adult suffrage, for this is the demand of the people. Moreover, this is the undisputed system prevalent in all those countries where representative democratic form of Government is in existence."

It added that in fact "we cannot do anything better than to refer any one who wants to convince himself of the excellence of that system of direct elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage to the report of the Franchise Commission where the whole issue is discussed exhaustively. But we cannot help remarking that it is such a tragedy that the people of Pakistan should be deprived even of those rights which had been enjoyed under alien rule.

"The majority report of the members of the Special Committee again and again pleads for a fair trial for the present system, forgetting that the system was given a trial in 1962 and in the numerous by-elections held during this period and that the system has been found disastrous and wanting.

"The widespread corruption prevalent in these elections have become a nightmare and what is more this system makes it an ideal one for an unscrupulous executive who can and wants to corrupt and intimidate the electoral college.

"The existing electoral college does not perform only the functions of an electoral college as they have been also entrusted with numerous other duties of local self-government. The members of electoral college have been clearly defined as public servants under Article 97 of the Basic Democracies Order. This makes any election by them a mockery of representative institutions. They are an appendage of the Government and it is almost impossible for them to say 'no' to the Government at the time of election.

"We are firmly of the opinion that the present system is a denial of the rights of the people and that it would only perpetuate a thinly veiled dictatorship in the country. For these reasons we cannot agree with the views expressed in the majority report."

Maulvi Farid Ahmad (Cox's Bazar Islamic Democratic Front) in a separate note of dissent supported the direct system of elections, but also entirely agreed with the unanimous recommendations of the Franchise Commission.

He said that universal adult franchise was the concept of free men all over the globe and had been adopted almost everywhere (excepting a couple of South American States) where the Government of the country was run by the elected representatives of the people.

B. Baluchaung Project: The stage is set for work to begin on the second stage of the Baluchaung project.

The first stage covers construction of:

(1) A hydro-electric power station at Lawpita Falls in Kayah State with a capacity of 84,000 kw (three generators each with a capacity of 28,000 kw).

(2) 250 miles of 230 kw transmission line from Lawpita to Rangoon, a primary sub-station near Hlawga Lake, and a sub-station at Toungoo;

(3) 223 miles of 132 kw transmission line to Mandalay, and sub-stations at Kalaw, Thazi, and Mandalay.

Work on the project began in 1953-54. The total cost is estimated at K25 million, including K137 million received in yen from Japanese reparations. On completion of the transmission line, the power station at Lawpita, and the primary sub-station at Hlawga Lake, hydro-electric power was brought to Rangoon and Pegu Division in April, 1960. Under consideration is the building of a transmission line to Kalaw and a sub-station there.

Increase in power supply will be of immense help in the Government's efforts to build industries for producing consumer goods and utilizing indigenous raw materials. The second stage of the project is designed to meet such a call for more power, as well as to provide for the annual increase of 10 per cent in power consumption.

The first part of the second stage is the building of a dam at Mobye, 19 miles upstream from Loikaw. The Mobye Dam will supply more water power as well as irrigating about 20,000 acres of agricultural land in the Kayah and Shan States. The second part will be the building of three more generators each with a capacity of 28,000 kw at the Lawpita power station.

The estimated cost stands at K28 million for the Mobye Dam and K17 million for the three generators. Work on the Dam begins this year and the second part will be implemented according to the demand for power.

From the Baluchaung project alone a production of 240,000 kw is possible. When the two stages of the project are completed, all towns and villages between Rangoon and Mandalay will have enough power at low cost. But those places beyond the hydro-electric power grid will still have to depend on diesel generation, which is more expensive. Preliminary investigations are being made to explore the possibility of establishing small hydro-electric power plants in these areas also.

Meanwhile, a diversionary weir, the first of its kind in Burma, is to be built across the southern part of the Man River in Minbu District, at a cost of K5 million.

Work is to be started by the Irrigation Department during the current financial year and the project is to be completed in three years.

When completed, the weir will help bring more than 20,000 acres of land in Sagu township under cultivation by means of irrigation.

Under the project, water from the left bank of the Man River will be diverted to the right bank by means of a flume to be constructed across the river.

BRUNEI

A. Legislation On Petroleum Leases: The Legislative Council has passed the Petroleum Mining Enactment and the Income-tax (Petroleum) Enactment, providing legislation to govern the terms of leases that may be granted to oil companies, and to bring into effect new arrangements that benefit the economy of the State.

An approved company, according to the new law, will be required to make fixed yearly payments calculated on the basis of the acreage held by the company from time to time.

The enactment also provides for the payment of royalties on crude oil won by the company, casing head petroleum, and all natural gas obtained from land leased by the company. In each case the amount of royalty has been fixed at 12½ per cent.

Provision is, however, made for the State to elect to take a proportion of each type of crude oil not exceeding 12½ per cent of the total volume in lieu of royalty.

The enactment provides for a variation in the rate of royalty on oil won from the State's territorial waters, to allow for the higher cost of drilling in deep water.

During the agreement period the company will be liable to pay to the Government a tax on income, and this is provided for in the Income-tax (Petroleum) Enactment. During the last few years there have been significant changes in the oil industry; several new arrangements have been concluded during the post-War period in various countries between oil companies and Governments. The Bill is designed to bring into effect new arrangements that will benefit the economy of the State.

The enactment provides for the payment by every company engaged in petroleum operations in the State of a tax on the chargeable profits. The tax on income has been fixed by the enactment at 50 per cent of the chargeable profits of the company.

Provision is made in the enactment that in ascertaining chargeable tax payable by the company, deductions be made from the assessable tax of royalties paid or payable by the company to the State, and of sums paid or payable by the company by way of taxes, rates, Customs dues, imposts, fees, and rents.

Provision is also made in the enactment for the company to employ and train suitable Bruneis in every phase of its operations and management.

A. Prorogation Of Parliament: Parliament was prorogued at midnight on March 12 until July 10 under a proclamation issued by the Governor-General, Sir William Gopallawa.

This set off a wave of rumours about the instability of the Government and possibility of Cabinet reshuffles or a coup d'etat.

Commenting on these reports, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, said on March 28: "I shall allow no one to overthrow the duly elected Government of the people. I shall allow no one to establish dictatorships, and, what is more, I shall allow no one to dictate to me."

She was speaking at a co-operative rally in the hill town of Nuwara Eliya.

She said: "I shall not run away from my obligations to the people whatever difficulties I am called upon to face, even though I am a woman." She added that rumours began after the prorogation of Parliament and remarked that it was both lawful and customary for Parliament to be prorogued. In 1963 she had prorogued Parliament for 2½ months, and this year she had prorogued it for four months.

She was aware that there was a great deal of parliamentary business that required attention, but she felt that even if Parliament were continuously in session during these four months there was little or no chance of the work being done, considering how little had been done in the last session. She mentioned a law for the control of prices which had been debated inconclusively for several days, even though most of the political parties favoured it, and said: "I am well aware of the limits of the law and the Constitution, and shall do nothing that is contrary to the law or the Constitution.

"In July, 1960, I was given a mandate by the free votes of the people to govern this country for a term of five years, and until the people are called upon once again to exercise their free choice I mean to exercise that trust."

She had assured Mr. Dudley Senanayake, the leader of the Opposition, immediately after prorogation that she had no intentions of doing anything unconstitutional, but Mr. Senanayake did not seem to have accepted that assurance, as he had appealed more than once to his party youth leagues, and even to the people generally, to get ready to fight a dictatorship. She asked people not to be stampeded by such false stories.

B. Monetary Board's Report: The monetary board of the Central Bank of Ceylon, in its annual report published on April 1, drew attention to a significant change in the relationship between the country's subsidies, Budget deficits and price levels.

"As long as external assets were plentiful and imports flowed in freely", it said, "expansionist financing of Government Budgets, whether for the maintenance of subsidies or otherwise, had no impact on consumer prices or living costs. The cost of subsidies, in other words, was not borne by consumers through increases in other prices but by the decline in external reserves.

"In the present situation, on the other hand, although the prices of subsidized items remain low, excessive expansionary financing results in a sustained increase in other consumer prices as well as in shortages of several categories of goods."

The report said that in the final analysis it was only an acceleration in the pace of economic growth that could provide a solution to Ceylon's basic problems. "It is because such an acceleration will prove difficult in a context where the monetary expansion is excessive and inflationary pressures too severe that there is need for a reduction in the fiscal and monetary imbalance in the economy."

In 1963, the report said, Ceylon's gross national product increased at current prices, according to provisional estimates, by 4.8 per cent. In real terms, however—namely, at constant prices—the increase was only 1.8 per cent. When allowance was made for the increase in population, real product for each person declined by .8 per cent and the rate of increase in the total gross national product in real terms was smaller last year than in the previous year.

"This was the result of a decline in production in the export sector and a smaller rate of increase in production in the domestic sector. Industrial production, however, continued to expand significantly last year. Domestic rice production also increased during the year, but the rate of increase in production was 2.3 per cent as against 11.3 in 1962.

The monetary board observed that the monetary expansion of the earlier years and the consequent decline in external assets resulted in the need to maintain extensive restrictions on imports so as to ease the pressure on Ceylon's balance of payments. These developments were accentuated by a deterioration in the terms of trade during the year on account of a rise in import prices. Since increases in food prices were not passed on to the consumer, there were further pressures on Ceylon's balance of payments and on the Government's budgetary calculations.

At the end of 1963, Ceylon's external assets, exclusive of those set apart in sinking funds for the redemption of sterling loans, were Rs. 358 million. The decline in the international reserves was particularly steep towards the end of 1963 and was largely associated with high payments for food and the drop in exports accounted for partly by the port strike.

The report added: "Ceylon's problems are, however, by no means intractable. Despite the adverse developments in the monetary sphere, the relatively slow rate of economic growth, and the weakened position in respect of the external assets, in Ceylon economy has a substantial potential for future progress.

"Standards of living or income a head of population are higher in Ceylon than in many other developing countries. Ceylon receives substantial earnings of foreign exchange through an export sector which is large in relation to national income, and which has shown a capacity (especially in the case of tea) for sustained expansion in recent years. There have also been welcome signs of a growth in the productive capacity of her domestic agriculture where the potential for further development remains great.

"Most evident of all, a significant beginning has been made in the process of industrial development which, if effectively carried forward, could signify a transformation in the basic structure of the Ceylon economy. All these and other advantages provide an opportunity for rapid progress. But its full utilization could be jeopardized by an excessive imbalance in the monetary field, which, if allowed to persist too long, could gain in momentum and give rise to tendencies which could hamper the productive process itself."

CHINA

A. Attack On Soviet Party Leadership Resumed: The Chinese Communist Party on March 29 called upon the international communist movement to repudiate the leadership of the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev.

It asserted that the Soviet leader had assumed "the mantle of Trotsky." Peking urged all communist parties to abandon the Soviet "revisionist quagmire" and adhere to a line of the Chinese Communist Party, which was described as Marxist-Leninist.

The declaration, according to Western Press reports, was an obvious summons to communist parties throughout the world to follow the lead given the previous week by a pro-Peking faction of the Australian Communist Party. The faction there split away and announced the establishment of a separate organization to be known as the "Communist Party of Australia (Marxist-Leninist").

The resumed attacks on Soviet leadership came on the eve of the arrival of Mr. Khruschev in Budapest for celebrations of the 19th anniversary of the liberation of Hungary from Nazi occupation.

The Peking statement was issued in the form of the eighth comment on an open letter of July 14, 1963 from the Soviet Communist Party, (see page 5376) which accused the Chinese communists of shattering communist unity and risking world nuclear war.

It was published in Red Flag, theoretical organ of the Chinese Communist Party and People's Daily, the party newspaper. The text was transmitted abroad by the New China news agency.

It described Mr. Khruschev as the most pernicious of revisionists and the "greatest capitulationist in history" in the face of capitalism. "Now is the time—now it is high time—to repudiate and liquidate Khruschev's revisionism".

The article declared: "Here we would give leading comrades of the Soviet Communist Party a piece of advice; since so many opportunists and revisionists have been thrown on the rubbish heap of history, why must you obdurately follow in their wake?"

The article declared that "Khruschev's revisionism is leading the Soviet Union along the road" back to capitalism.

It discussed in detail what it described as a "gross error" of Mr. Khruschev in expounding at the 20th Party Congress of the Soviet Union the theory that in certain conditions there could be a peaceful transition from capitalism to communism.

Peking insisted that the platform of a Parliament could be used only for tactical purposes and that violent revolution was the universal law of revolution.

"To realize the transition to socialism the proletariat must wage armed struggle, smash the old state machine, and establish a dictatorship of the proletariat."

The Chinese Communist Party said it was willing to accept criticism for compromising with the Soviet party on this question in the formulation of statements at the Moscow Conferences of 1957 and 1960.

It said that its delegation had met the wish of the Soviet party, "for the sake of the common struggle against the enemy", but now the parties must rule out acceptance of the "parliamentary road to socialism".

Soviet Indictment Of Chinese Leadership: Relations between the Soviet and Chinese parties came nearer to breaking point on April 3 as a result of the publication of the sharpest and most comprehensive Soviet indictment of China's leadership so far.

Pravda published for the first time a speech made on February 14 by Mr. Mikhail Suslov, one of the secretaries of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party, in which he called for a new meeting of world communist parties.

He said that such a meeting would "hold the broadest possible exchange of opinions in the interest of surmounting the difficulties which have arisen in the communist movement". Observers in Moscow pointed out that the meeting would not necessarily bring about a complete breach between the Soviet and Chinese parties.

Pravda also printed an editorial article saying that the latest intensification of Chinese propaganda attacks against Russia was a "terrible insult to our party, and the entire Soviet people". It indicted the Chinese leadership for "passing all limits in their political struggle against the world communist movement".

He said matters had now reached a stage where the Chinese Press and radio were calling upon the Soviet people to oppose the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the Soviet Government.

The editorial article said that the Soviet Central Committee had decided to publish Mr. Suslov's speech because of Chinese attempts to "blackmail" Marxist-Leninist parties with the threat of a split.

Mr. Suslov said Peking was openly combating the agreed line of the socialist countries in the world arena and was bent on discrediting economic relations between members of the Council for Mutual Economic Aid (COMECON).

All the indications were that China's leaders "would like to be able to give orders in the socialist commonwealth as in their own estate, to impose their will on other countries, and to dictate the terms on which they would either admit parties and peoples into the socialist system or 'excommunicate' them at will".

While criticizing Russian trade moves with the West, Peking was making feverish efforts to establish relations with Britain, France, Japan, West Germany and Italy. From the 1960 Moscow meeting the Chinese leaders had been trying to make the differences of opinion more acute, instead of trying to eliminate them. The "love of peace" now emanating from Peking was nothing but an ostentatious screen masking their real intentions which had received a rebuff and had been censured by world public opinion.

The Chinese had concentrated their fire on Mr. Khruschev, trying to isolate him from the rest of the Soviet party leadership and from the Soviet people. "This dirty attempt is adventurist and hopeless, and doomed to complete and shameful failure."

The Chinese leaders had suggested to the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America that a policy of peaceful economic competition was against their interests. In fact, the growing economic potential of the socialist countries was in their best interest, since it enabled socialist countries to help the developing nations.

"The peoples of the newly free countries... are in a position to see for themselves what the Chinese leaders are really driving at and what they really want, and will reject a policy aimed at subordinating them to the selfish plans of the Chinese leaders."

Mr. Suslov's report also gave figures showing the "tremendous" economic aid that Russia had given to China, and said that in giving it Russia had "never sought any advantage or profit". Such co-operation had reached its peak after 1953, "when elements of inequality in the relations between our countries, imposed during the Stalin personality cult, were removed on the initiative of the CPSU and Comrade Khruschev".

He quoted Mr. Mao Tse-tung as saying in 1957 that "the credit for removing the disagreeable and the extraneous belongs to N. S. Khruschev".

Mr. Suslov said that ever since 1958 the Chinese Government had taken various measures undermining Soviet-Chinese friendship. Chinese propagandists had tried to blame Russia for reducing its aid and creating serious difficulties for the Chinese economy, and at the same time had spread rumours that Soviet aid was insignificant. "Yet if it were granted that our assistance was 'ineffective and insignificant', then how could its cessation hurt China's economy?"

The curtailment of economic and cultural exchanges with Russia had only one explanation. "The Chinese leaders want to fence their people off from the Soviet Union. They are afraid their people will learn the truth about the selfless fraternal Soviet proposals for the development of relations... and that then their vicious slander... will explode in their faces."

Russia had suggested consultations to establish the borders between the two countries at certain points. "We do so in the belief that no territorial issues exist between the Soviet Union and the Chinese People's Republic".

The Chinese leaders were attacking the Soviet party because it wanted to improve peoples' standard of living. "They say that the improvement of the standard of living is making the Soviet people 'go bourgeois'. Behind these cowardly words is a deep-seated contempt for the vital requirements of men, for the principles and ideals of the Socialist society."

In their attacks on Soviet communist theory "the Chinese theorists ignore the new phenomena of social life and refuse stubbornly to see that the new conclusions and propositions of the Soviet Communist Party programme were not framed arbitrarily and that they express what has become part of life. As they attack the course charted by the 20th and 22nd (Soviet Party) Congresses, they go to the length of questioning the very right of our party and people to build communism".

He said the Chinese conception of socialism was far removed from Marxist-Leninist theory. Neither Marx nor Lenin had anywhere even remotely hinted that the rock-bottom tasks of socialist construction might be realized by the method of "leaps" and "cavalry charges".

"If the Chinese leaders want to impose their practice on us as a 'universal truth', if they want us to accept for a 'model' a society in which violence is idealized and democracy restricted, in which the personality cult thrives and care for the working people is neglected, we shall say bluntly: Such a 'universal truth' and such a 'model' do not suit the Soviet people and, we are sure, will not suit other peoples either."

The Chinese leaders had apparently decided to carry through to the end their subversive activity against the Leninist unity of the world communist movement. They had spoken of a split as inevitable, but only those who were breaking with the principles of proletarian internationalism could say this, because a split would inevitably undermine the world socialist system.

The policy and activity of the Chinese leaders were at present the main danger to the unity of the world communist movement. The Chinese leaders had been the first among the "opportunists and splitters" in world communism to put forward the thesis that the existence of several communist parties in the same country was normal. "From what they say, these parties should fight not so much against the enemies of the working class as among themselves."

The Chinese position on the communist parties in the capitalist countries was particularly outrageous. "To date, anti-party groups of renegades and splitters have been set up, with help and support from Peking, in Belgium, Brazil, Australia, Ceylon, Britain, and some other countries."

The Chinese leaders had "abolished" the central committees of the Belgian and certain other parties. "We must say plainly that there has never been anything like this in the history of the communist movement."

Such splitters' groups were outside the world communist movement, and he noted that their rise had been "very well received by the ruling circles of the capitalist countries, which see them as a gratuitous 'fifth column' in the working class movement."

At present the Chinese leaders plainly intended to form a "block of their fellow-thinkers which will have its own platform and group discipline and will centre on Peking". This block was being set up to fight against the world communist movement for the benefit of the Chinese leadership.

The entire range of the Chinese party leadership's theoretical and political views was in many ways a re-hash of Trotskyism.... "Small wonder that the Trotskyites openly link up their hopes for a revival of their long-withered movement with the present political line of the Chinese leadership".

Nationalism was inexorably gaining the upper hand in the entire policy of the Chinese leaders and it was becoming the mainspring of their actions. The "Great Leap Forward" had obviously been planned as an attempt to overtake all the socialist countries in one bound and to occupy a dominating position in the world system.

These nationalistic tendencies had later begun to gain even greater momentum, showing in such actions as the artificial fanning of nationalistic passions around frontier issues, the behaviour of the Chinese party leaders during the Caribbean crisis, and the stand of the Chinese Government in the nuclear problem.

Chinese propaganda reduced the entire struggle against imperialism solely to a struggle with the United States, by-passing its allies, the Japanese, West German, and French imperialists. The nationalist policies of the Chinese leaders had nothing in common with the actual national interests of the Chinese people.

The Mao Tse-tung personality cult was having an increasingly negative effect on the activities of the Chinese Communist Party. It was obviously the Chinese idea to spread this cult to the whole world communist movement, so that Mao, "like Stalin in his day, should sit aloft like God above all the Marxist-Leninist parties."

Stalin had turned the sword of the dictatorship of the proletariat against officials of the communist party and the socialist State. It was evidently this aspect of Stalin's activities that the Chinese leaders liked most. "That is why they identify this incorrect method of leadership with the dictatorship of the proletariat."

The policy augured no good to the Chinese people. The Soviet anti-party group banished from power after Stalin's death had been responsible for the whole-sale persecution of guiltless people during the Stalin era. "Is it to restore such inhuman practices that the Chinese leaders are so concerned?"

Mr. Suslov added: "The world communist movement faces a tangible danger of petty-bourgeois nationalist deviation that disguises itself with 'left' phrase-mongering. The danger of this deviation is all the greater because we are dealing with leaders of a party in power which disposes of a large machinery of state and of means of mass ideological indoctrination.

"It is clear that the Soviet Communist Party, like all the other Marxist-Leninist parties, cannot but take measures in order to accentuate as much as possible the harm that this petty-bourgeois deviation may inflict on the world communist movement."

Russia had done everything in its power to overcome the differences, but each time the Chinese leaders had mounted fresh attacks. "They are concentrating their assault most of all on Nikita Ser-geyevitch Khruschev. To be sure, they cannot fail to see that it is Nikita Sergeyevitch Khruschev who stands in the van of the wonderful processes that have sprung up in our party and country....

"That is why they would like to isolate Comrade Khruschev from the central committee for their subversive ends and to oppose our central committee to the party and the Soviet people.... The Chinese leaders, and not they alone, should put it in their pipes and smoke it that our central committee, headed by Nikita Sergeyevitch Khruschev, that loyal Leninist, has never been so united and monolithic as now."

Nearly 24 hours after Moscow had published the long indictment, Mr. Khruschev spoke in Budapest of the reasons for the Russian decision.

He said that in view of China's persistent "disruptive policy" the Soviet leaders had no choice but to make their views public. He called upon the communist parties to strengthen their unity and find new organizational forms to correlate their policies.

He said that the Soviet Communist Party was constantly striving for unity, especially now that the Chinese were openly trying to revise the policy documents which the communist parties had jointly signed in Moscow in 1957 and in 1960.

Peking's "disruptive activity" was a serious danger to socialism and it was necessary for the communist parties to strengthen their unity in this struggle against Chinese distortion. He was sure that the struggle would lead to new historic victories and that the ranks of the communist movement would emerge even stronger.

He did not indicate what he had in mind when he spoke of new effective forms whereby unity would be strengthened.

Hungary came to the support of Russia earlier in the day (March 30) with a document accusing China of organizing factions within communist parties, of political adventurism and of wanting to impose its policy upon others.

The Hungarian resolution, which was approved by the central committee two months earlier, was the first of its kind to come from a Soviet bloc country. It was a strong defence of the Soviet party and of Mr. Khruschev personally.

Cultural Agreement With USSR:

It was announced in Moscow on March 24 that Soviet and Chinese Army song and dance groups were to make exchange visits to Peking and Moscow under a Cultural Agreement recently reached between the two countries (see page 5748).

Mr. Sergei Romanovsky, chairman of the Soviet State Committee on cultural contacts with foreign countries, said the Agreement covered a wide field of cultural links, including the exchange of 100 Russian and Chinese choreographers. The new Agreement was considerably bigger in scope than last year's programme.

Mr. Romanovsky told a news conference that Russia had Cultural Agreements with 43 countries and cultural contacts with more than 100.

B. Cultural Exchanges With Britain: The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler, told Parliament on March 23 that the Chinese Academy had agreed to a programme of exchanges with Britain's Royal Society.

He gave no details, but an authoritative source said that under this programme a number of Chinese professors and scientific research workers had come to Britain.

The source said that the fields from which the Chinese were being drawn included organic chemistry, quantum electronics, optics, physical chemistry, physiology, mechanics and communications.

The number of Chinese coming and the timing of their visits was not known.

The source said that reciprocal arrangements for British scientists to go to China had not yet been finalised. Five senior Chinese scientists had come to Britain on short visits during the past year. Five junior research workers were studying at British universities as part of the programme.

INDIA

SUMMARY: UN Security Council Meeting On Kashmir Issue; President Arif's Visit; Steps To Prevent Corruption; Import Policy; Steel Targets For Fourth Plan.

A. UN Security Council Meeting On Kashmir Issue: The UN Security Council met in New York on March 17 at Pakistan's request to resume the discussion on Kashmir.

After a two-hour session, the Council suspended further debate for 48 hours to decide whether to go on with the debate or meet India's request for six weeks' adjournment.

India's Permanent Representative, Mr. B. N. Chakravarty, had sought the adjournment on the ground that only after the Budget session of Parliament could Mr. M. C. Chagla, the Education Minister (who had been representing India in the debates) go to New York to participate in the debate.

He said that Pakistan could not ask the Council to take up, then adjourn, and again resume the debate just to suit her convenience, and in complete disregard of India's own convenience. Scant heed had been paid to the fact that the last adjournment was opposed by India and that it had been a sine die adjournment.

The Czechoslovak proposal backing India's request for a long adjournment was supported by the Soviet Union.

It was at the suggestion of Brazil that the Council took 48 hours off to decide on the proposal. The Czech delegate readily agreed to the Brazilian suggestion and did not insist that his proposal be put to vote itself as he had a right to under the Security Council rules.

At the outset the Council President, Mr. Liu Chieh of Kuomintang China noted that Pakistan had made the request for a resumption on March 8 and that India had expressed objections on the same day to the holding of an early meeting.

He added: "Faced with these conflicting views of the interested parties, I felt obliged to consult the members of the Council on the matter and, as a result, the meeting is convened this afternoon".

The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto and Mr. B. N. Chakravarty were at the Council table for the debate in which Mr. Bhutto was the first speaker on the substance of the matter.

He said that during the interval since the Council's last meeting on the question, there had been "no mitigation of the gravity of the situation between India and Pakistan."

He said there had been important developments since the last Council session. Among these was that on February 2, the Indian Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda had told Parliament that the provisions that differentiated Kashmir from other States of the Indian Union "would soon disappear". A "new puppet Premier" was installed despite warnings from "some elements" in India. He had been nominated because he had been demanding complete integration of Jammu and Kashmir with the rest of India. The "Indian-sponsored regime" had proposed such moves as replacing the flag of Kashmir by the Indian flag.

"India's new agent" had called for the appointment of the Governor of the State by the Indian Government instead of being elected. Key police and other posts had been turned over to non-Kashmiris. These measures were designed to carry out the annexation of Kashmir into India "designed to destroy the identity of the people of Jammu and Kashmir."

The question now was whether India intended to help the people express their will or was working to prevent it. India was attempting to present UN with a fait accompli. Protests had been made about the imprisonment of the "accredited leaders" of Kashmir.

He added: "Now we are witnessing the wholesale imprisonment of a whole people." Nothing could be more provocative to Pakistan and more defiant of UN than India's recent actions.

He asked how else could these steps be understood than that India intended "to bring matters to a head and stage a showdown?"

India was proceeding with "greater speed" to integrate Kashmir into the Indian Union. She was also threatening stern measures against any one in Kashmir who stood in the way. When the Government of India threatened dire consequences for the people of Jammu and Kashmir taking a stand that they were entitled to, to decide their own destiny, it brought out the explosive nature of the situation more clearly than it could be described.

But there were other disquieting factors. "The situation on the cease-fire line always uneasy, is to-day more troubled than ever before. Serious incidents have taken place in recent weeks leading to heavy exchange of fire, resulting in several deaths."

"No international agency but the Security Council could meet the situation and avert the danger which was being augmented daily.

"The danger to peace was indicated in the statements of responsible Indian statesmen". On March 15, the Indian Minister of Works and Rehabilitation had said that "Pakistan was India's enemy No. 1" and had urged students to follow the path of Shivaji and Guru Gobind Singh, the "warlords of Indian history who fought Muslims and were defeated by Muslims". The Defence Minister of India had stated that India would be Pakistan's "graveyard".

Pakistan remained unafraid of these threats, Mr. Bhutto said, but it was obvious that they could not be disregarded in an appraisal of the present situation. The Council's consideration of the question in February helped to bring out again those aspects of it which must not be obscured if a just and peaceful settlement were to be achieved.

The pronouncements of the members showed that UN was not insensitive to those principles on which alone the structure of peace could be enduring built. Those pronouncements had to be "brought concretely on the situation that confronts us."

After Mr. Bhutto's speech the Indian delegate, Mr. B. N. Chakravarty replied to the Pakistani charges. Then he made a request that the Council meeting be adjourned until May 5.

Professor Jiri Hajek of Czechoslovakia supported Mr. Chakravarty's request for the adjournment of the Council for six weeks.

He said he regretted that no progress had been made to bring India and Pakistan together since the last meeting. In February it was Pakistan which had asked for an adjournment. Now it was the Indian delegate who said that his delegation was not at present in a position to continue the discussion but was ready to do so at some forthcoming date.

In a desire to contribute to the utmost to creating an atmosphere for better understanding, Czechoslovakia saw only one way out. He, therefore, proposed that the Council adjourn until May 5.

Mr. Carlos A. Bernardes of Brazil suggested that the Council might adjourn until March 20 so that members might consider the proposal for a longer adjournment.

He appealed to India and Czechoslovakia to consider this suggestion. Any decision should be made "after sober discussion." An adjournment for six weeks might have a bearing on the situation in Kashmir and he was sure all members of the Council would do everything they could to "alleviate" the situation.

Dr. Nikolai Fedorenko of the Soviet Union urged the Council to accede to the Indian request for a postponement. This would be only "logical and just".

He hoped the Council would show the necessary "appropriate objectivity" by adopting an equally equitable attitude towards both India and Pakistan. The Council could not fail to take into account the Indian request, just as it had agreed to the Pakistani request for a postponement the previous month.

Professor Hajek said that taking into account the "good intentions" of Brazil, to facilitate the consideration of the item, he would accede to the request for an adjournment until March 20 on the understanding that his own proposal be put to the vote immediately upon resumption.

Mr. Chakravarty said the Brazilian request did not meet India's requirements.

Mr. Bhutto said he understood the proposal as meaning that a short period was required for the Council to consider whether "in view of the fast deteriorating situation in the sub-continent and the uneasy cease-fire line," it would be appropriate for the Council to have a long adjournment or a short one.

Mr. Bernardes said he thought his suggestion was "quite clear."

The President adjourned the meeting until March 20.

Debate Adjourned:

On March 20, the Security Council adjourned further debate on the Kashmir issue until May 5 as desired by India.

The Council as a whole agreed to a Czechoslovak motion to this effect, but the nine non-communist members joined together in an appeal to both parties "to refrain from any action, or threat of action, capable of endangering peace and security or likely to make this already complex and delicate problem still more intractable".

Brazil which coined this appeal on behalf of her eight colleagues, left no room for doubt that the appeal was mainly directed against India. She said she considered May 5 only as a target date and that should "new developments of a political or military nature alter or worsen the situation in Kashmir", that would be ample justification for an earlier meeting of the Council.

The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia dissociated themselves from this attempt by the nine members to make the adjournment conditional.

Mr. B. N. Chakravarty, Permanent Representative of India, declared that Kashmir was an integral part of India and that therefore India was not prepared to recognize any right on the part of Pakistan or the Security Council to put an injunction on her sovereign rights to make whatever constitutional changes she considered necessary in a part of her territory.

The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, on the other hand, tried to rub in the point contained in the nine-member appeal by saying that he had "carefully noted the conditions under which the nine members were agreeable to an adjournment." He said that he would be forced to ask for a meeting earlier than May 5, if India "increased tensions in Kashmir." He challenged India to give an assurance that she would not make any judicial, administrative or constitutional changes in Kashmir between now and May 5.

Mr. Chakravarty replied that India refused to do any such thing. India had not started any military incidents and never would. It had always been Pakistan which had engineered incidents in order to justify her requests for periodic Council meetings. He told the nine members that by attaching conditions to their order of adjournment they were only giving a handle to Pakistan to precipitate new incidents. Their appeal in this context was superfluous.

The Soviet Union drove home this last point by telling the Council that it was hardly fair to try and attach a condition to an adjournment when India sought it and not doing so when Pakistan asked for one as she did in February.

Both the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia also pointed out that the debate was to have been confined to a procedural issue, namely, the Czech motion to adjourn. But several members had imported substantial questions into the debate.

A despatch from UN Headquarters said the appeal itself was only an expression of a common sentiment held by nine of the eleven members. It did not have the validity of a unanimous appeal from the Council as a whole. Nevertheless it amounted to a majority of the Council members setting a price for granting India's request for adjournment to a date convenient to her. Also, it was once again made apparent that but for the Soviet Union's unqualified support, India might have faced the prospect of a unanimous directive issuing from the Council telling her what to do and what not to do in Kashmir.

The despatch added that Pakistan, meanwhile, was going away with the satisfaction that even though she could not prevent an adjournment she could bank on the support of nine members for an earlier meeting should she want to get one convened.

The Indian delegate's forthright statement as also the statements earlier by Soviet and Czechoslovak delegates that the motion for adjournment was a purely procedural one and could not attempt to force any conditions for it on India, frustrated a Western move on behalf of Pakistan to give the six-week adjournment India had asked for at the price of tying Indian hands, in going ahead with the constitutional changes in Kashmir.

Cease-fire Line Might Be Crossed—Mr. J. Nehru's Warning:

The Indian Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru told the Lok Sabha on March 18 that Indian troops would cross the cease-fire line in Kashmir if it became necessary in the defence of Indian territory.

He added, however, that this was not a policy.

He was answering a question from Mr. Hem Barua (P-SP) after the Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan had made a statement on Pakistani raids on March 15 and 16 in the border village of Bhulwal Mulo in Jammu, killing four persons including a boy of 11 and seriously wounding three.

Mr. Barua asked if the Government was prepared to tell the United Nations observers that if they could not defend the cease-fire line, it would be India's painful duty to cross the cease-fire line and occupy the "so-called" Azad Kashmir.

Mr. Nehru replied: "No, sir. We are not prepared to do all that."

He added that obviously it was the duty of the people to defend Indian territory. That was being done. But Pakistanis did occasionally come over and create mischief.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Letter To Security Council:

The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, in a letter to the President of the Security Council on March 19 said that Pakistan considered the statement by Mr. Nehru that Indian troops would cross the Kashmir cease-fire line if necessary for the defence of Indian territory "as an unmistakable threat of the renewal of India's aggression on Kashmir."

The letter said: "I have the honour to draw the attention of the Security Council to the statement made by the Prime Minister of India yesterday in the Indian Parliament. Mr. Nehru is reported to have said: 'While we are not prepared to go across the cease-fire line and attack the territory occupied by Pakistan, obviously, if it becomes necessary for the defence of our territory to cross the line, we will cross it'.

"It needs to be pointed out here that the qualifying clause in Mr. Nehru's statement (about India not being prepared to go across the cease-fire line) is of no significance because it does not detract from the categorical assertion that India (A) regards Kashmir as its territory, and (B) considers it within its right to cross the cease-fire line under the pretext of 'defence' whenever, according to India's own judgment, it becomes necessary to do so.

"Since the cease-fire arrangement in Kashmir stems from, and is based upon, the resolutions of the UNCIP of August 13, 1948, and January 5, 1949, the statement of the Prime Minister of India is the most forcible indication yet given of India's determination to violate these resolutions.

"The Government of Pakistan considers the statement as an unmistakable threat of the renewal of India's aggression on Kashmir.

"My Government desires to inform the Security Council that we consider it our urgent duty to take whatever measures may become necessary to counter this threat promptly and effectively. It is our obligation to protect Azad Kashmir from the danger of armed attack to which it has now clearly become exposed."

Indian Reply:

In a letter to the President of the Security Council, India refuted the Pakistani distortion of Mr. Nehru's remarks in Parliament on crossing the cease-fire line in self-defence.

The letter said: "In Parliament the Prime Minister made it clear that it was not India's policy to cross the cease-fire line into Pakistan-occupied Kashmir. The obvious meaning of the Prime Minister's answer to interpellations in Parliament is that India will observe scrupulously the cease-fire line contrary to what Pakistan has been doing. But if India is attacked by Pakistan from across the cease-fire line, then in exercise of her right of self-defence, it may become necessary to cross the cease-fire line.

"What the Prime Minister said was nothing new. It had been said many times in Parliament in the past and is a wholly defensible proposition in international law. On the other hand, Mr. Bhutto's assertion in his letter to the President of the Security Council that 'we consider it our urgent duty to take whatever measures that may become necessary to counter this threat promptly and effectively' shows clearly Pakistan's aggressive intentions."

Pakistan To Accept Chinese Help:

At a luncheon meeting of the UN Correspondents' Association in New York on March 20, Mr. Bhutto said that his Government would accept the help of China if it thought such assistance would be necessary to repel Indian aggression across the Kashmir cease-fire line.

Quoting remarks made in Parliament by Mr. Nehru, that Indian troops would cross the cease-fire line if it was necessary to defend Indian territory, Mr. Bhutto emphasized that "if India embarks on such an adventure, we will vigorously counter the aggression and crush it." He thought that Pakistan would be able to resist such an aggression alone, and expressed confidence that the world conscience would come to Pakistan's help in the form of UN support.

However, when asked directly about assistance from China, he answered that Pakistan "would take all measures it would deem necessary to repel Indian aggression."

In answer to another question he said he did not exclude the possibility of granting independence to "Azad" Kashmir, adding that one had to wait for events and that all avenues for a solution had not been explored.

He said Pakistan would attend a new Bandung Conference if one was called, but not a conference of non-aligned nations of the Belgrade type "since Pakistan had not yet mastered the art of being at the same time aligned and non-aligned."

Moroccan Stand:

On March 20, Morocco assured India that she would not take any initiative on Kashmir which might be prejudicial to her interests.

The Moroccan Ambassador in New Delhi, Mr. Alarabi Bennani, met the Commonwealth Secretary, Mr. C. S. Jha, to present a statement clarifying his country's position in the Security Council debate on Kashmir.

He requested Mr. Jha to release the statement to the Press to remove the misunderstanding, if any, in the minds of the Indian people that Morocco was siding with Pakistan.

The following is the text of the Moroccan statement:

"In the Indo-Pakistan conflict, Morocco does not intend to part with its impartiality and has no wish to support one party against the other. India and Pakistan are equally our friends. We only wish to help them in finding the best solution of their conflict.

"In United Nations, Morocco would not take any initiative prejudicial to one or the other.

"His Majesty the King while receiving, a few days ago, the Pakistani delegation now touring Africa did not omit to mention to them that India is also a friendly country and that the course of justice and peace alone will inspire our action. His Majesty's instructions to our delegate to the UN have always been to this effect."

B. India To Recover Territory From China—Mr. J. Nehru's Assurance: The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru told the Lok Sabha on April 6 that India intended to recover from China "all the territory that is supposed to be ours."

He said there was no change in India's policy of engaging in negotiations with China only on the basis of China's total acceptance of the Colombo proposals.

He was replying to supplementaries on a question addressed to the Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan about China's increased defence build-up on the frontier and India's preparations to face it.

Mr. Nehru assured the House that India's defence potential was growing. The purpose of this was "to face Chinese aggression and the Chinese menace", he said.

Earlier, Mr. Chavan said, in answer to the main question, that the Chinese defence build-up on the border was now bigger than that during 1962, and posed a threat to the country's security.

He said he had seen the threatening statement of China's Defence Minister that while earlier the Chinese soldiers had outnumbered Indian troops by three-to-one, now they were five-to-one.

India had taken note of all this. The main thing was to give logistical support to troops and the Defence Ministry was paying attention to it and the proper training of the Army.

Mr. Kapur Singh asked whether "for all practical purposes" Aksaichin and other occupied areas had become an integral part of the Chinese empire and whether they could not be reclaimed without an all-out war with China. "Does Government propose to go to the country with this state of affairs?" he asked.

Mr. Nehru replied: "It is rather difficult for me to answer this question, that Aksaichin is part of the Chinese empire. Certainly it is occupied by China at present and how and what will be its fate in the future, I cannot say. I cannot say what the future would bring, but we intend to try our best to get back all the territory that is supposed to be ours."

A few members took exception to Mr. Nehru using the expression "supposed to be ours."

One member said: "It is ours."

Mr. Nehru replied to Mr. Barua: "So far as Aksaichin is concerned, we consider it as our territory and so we claim it."

Mrs. S. Bandaranaike's Letter To Mr. J. Nehru:

The Ceylon Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike has written to Mr. Nehru to ascertain whether India would be willing to start border talks with the Chinese if the latter were to vacate the seven posts in Ladakh. The seven posts are: Shensenwian, Tienwentian, Hot Springs, Kongka Pass, Nyagzu Pass, Khurnak Fort and Spanggur.

In her letter, Mrs. Bandaranaike was believed to have said that the offer to vacate the seven posts was not that of the Chinese Government, but of certain quarters close to it. She said Peking's condition for vacating the posts was that India should thereafter sit with China at the conference table and hold talks until such time as a settlement was reached.

This was regarded as quite a departure from the stand of China which had so far insisted on occupying the posts exclusively and not letting India set up similar posts in the area as the Colombo proposals had suggested.

On this point, the Colombo proposals say: "Pending a final settlement of the border dispute, the area vacated by the Chinese military withdrawals will be a demilitarized zone to be administered by civilian posts of both sides to be agreed upon...."

The possibility of China's vacating the seven posts in the hope of India's agreeing to begin talks was a major topic of speculation at the time of the Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai's visit to Ceylon in February (page 5747).

At that time, Mr. Chou was reported to have told Mrs. Bandaranaike that he could not commit himself to the proposal of vacating the seven posts till he had discussions with his colleagues in Peking.

Since then, he had presumably intimated to Mrs. Bandaranaike, at least indirectly, his Government's readiness to vacate the seven posts if India were to start talks on the over-all issue of the Sino-Indian border.

C. Peking-Rawalpindi Highway—Indian Objections: The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, told the Lok Sabha on March 23 that India's objections to the reported move by China and Pakistan to construct a highway between Rawalpindi and Peking had been repeatedly stated and every foreign country was aware of these objections.

He was replying to Dr. L. M. Singhvi and several others who had asked about the "dangerous implications" of the proposed move to the security of India.

Dr. Singhvi inquired whether India had communicated its objections to friendly Powers.

To further questions, Mr. Nehru replied that work on the road had not yet started. The proposed road would have to pass through Indian territory at present in the illegal occupation of Pakistan. But the concept of a road project between Rawalpindi and Peking was beset with practical difficulties and it would not be easy for Pakistan or China to build the road, but nevertheless they might try to build it.

D. President A. S. Mohammed Arif's Visit: President A. S. Mohammed Arif of Iraq was given a warm welcome on his arrival in New Delhi on March 26 on a week's visit.

The President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, the Central Ministers, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Sardar Swaran Singh and Mr. H. C. Dasappa, the Mayor of Delhi, Mr. Nuruddin, diplomats and others received the Iraqi President at the airport.

President Arif came at the conclusion of a visit to Pakistan. The 22-member presidential party, including the Iraqi Foreign Minister, Mr. S. A. Hamid, and two other Ministers, flew from Dacca in a Pakistan Air Force plane. As President Arif stepped down from the aircraft bedecked with the Indian tricolour and the Iraqi national flag, he was greeted with a 21-gun salute.

In his welcome speech, Dr. Radhakrishnan said: "In Iraq you have introduced stability and consolidation. It is our earnest hope that under your administration things will settle down and people will prosper. We welcome your speech as President of the Arab summit conference in January. Your declaration that you will not resort to military force while dealing with the problems that confront you is something that gratifies us also."

In his reply President Arif said he was happy to be in India, "a friendly land which has contributed so much to culture." He recalled the ties between India and Iraq in olden times when, he said, Indian scientists used to visit Baghdad, the haven of learning. He hoped that his visit would strengthen ties between the two countries.

State Banquet:

At a State banquet in his honour on March 26, President Arif said that there was need for peoples and countries to come closer to one another.

Relations between peoples did not depend on proximity or good communications. "If we come closer to each other now, we are building on surer foundations, for our objects are cultural and commercial. We desire to promote peace and serve humanity."

Dr. Radhakrishnan said that the world was "still in its infancy. We should try to see to it that when we become adults we behave well towards other human beings."

Great civilizations in this world had come to trouble because of lack of probity in the administration. "Many civilizations in this world have crashed because they did not attend to conditions which make for peace.

"It is our duty, therefore, to see that essential conditions are preserved by us and that the people who are entrusted to our care get real conditions for peaceful living."

He stated that President Arif had been doing his very best to develop industrial progress, educational reform and social advancement in his country. "Your one idea seems to be that the people must become happy. Democracy is a commitment to hope, to the advancement of the human race and to the future development of human beings."

Civic Reception:

At a civic reception at Red Fort on March 27, President Arif expressed the hope that his visit would promote mutual understanding between Iraq and India.

He said that India and Iraq had a common policy based on peaceful co-existence and active contribution towards non-alignment, universal prosperity and world peace.

He said that the objectives of both Indian and Iraqi Governments were to establish economic and social justice. No effort should be spared to establish a social structure which would fulfil the hopes and aspirations of the people of the two countries.

He said that his visit had brought back to his mind a long and eventful historic period in which cultural co-operation and contacts between scholars of the two countries had developed.

The Mayor, Mr. Nuruddin Ahmed, urged President Arif to persuade Pakistan not to squeeze out the minorities from the country. He hoped that President Arif would ask other Arab nations to use their good offices to dissuade Pakistan from committing atrocities on the minorities.

Departing from his printed welcome address, the Mayor said that 50 million Muslims in India were enjoying "full citizenship rights in their own beloved country." They did not want any interference in their affairs by Pakistan.

Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Minister without Portfolio, diplomats, members of Parliament and Delhi Corporation and a large number of distinguished citizens were present on the occasion.

President Arif earlier visited the National Physical Laboratory and the Indian Agricultural Research Institute.

He attended prayer at Jama Masjid. Over 5,000 Muslims participated. He attended a reception given by Khwaja Pir Zamin Nizami, Head Priest of Dargah Hazrat Khwaja Nizamuddin Aulia. Addressing the gathering, President Arif said that the influence of Khwaja Nizamuddin Aulia had spread far and wide in Arab countries. The people in Iraq held the Aulia in great esteem.

Joint Communique:

In a joint communique issued on April 1 at the end of his visit, President Arif supported India's view that "differences" between India and Pakistan should be resolved by reducing current tensions and creating the necessary atmosphere for "direct negotiations" between them.

The communique showed a wide area of agreement between India and Iraq on various subjects of mutual interest. These included the India-China border dispute, the treatment of 50 million Muslims in India, the Jordan waters dispute between the Arab nations and Israel, and the rights of the Palestinian refugees wishing to return to their homes.

The communique was interpreted in New Delhi as the best denial of the Pakistani claim that during his recent visit to that country President Arif had supported Pakistan's stand on Kashmir.

It was pointed out that all that he had said in Pakistan was that he had fully understood the Kashmir problem and that it should be resolved in the context of Afro-Asian solidarity and the UN resolutions.

President Arif's stand is a departure from the policies of his predecessor, President A. K. Kassem, who had supported a plebiscite in Kashmir. President Arif did not formulate his view during his brief stay in Delhi but had given a clear indication of it in a message he sent to Mr. Nehru through Mr. Hasheed, Governor of the Reserve Bank of Iraq, in February when the Security Council was meeting to discuss the issue. The message, which was delivered to Dr. Zakir Hussain, the Vice-President, as Mr. Nehru was ill, had said that the Kashmir dispute should be tackled in a brotherly manner by India and Pakistan and without international intervention.

In the communique issued on April 1, President Arif expressed "gratification" at the fact that India was the homeland of 50 million Muslims and millions of people belonging to other faiths who "enjoyed the fullest freedom of religious faith and worship on a basis of complete equality under law".

During his week-long stay in India, he said he had opportunity to meet Muslim leaders in the country and attend prayers at Muslim shrines.

On the India-China dispute, he expressed appreciation of the Colombo proposals and expressed the hope that China would do "everything necessary" to facilitate direct negotiations.

The communique also said, without naming any dispute, that "all disputes between States, including boundary disputes", should be settled by peaceful means and not by resort to force. If aggression was committed in pursuit of territorial aims, "its fruits must be denied to the aggressor".

In keeping with India's "traditional friendly relations" with Arab countries, Mr. Nehru expressed his support for the "just claims" of the Arab countries to the waters of the Jordan river and for the rights of the Palestinian refugees wishing to return to their homes.

The communique envisaged greater trade and technical co-operation between India and Iraq.

Farewell Messages:

In a farewell message to Mr. Nehru from aboard his aircraft as he left for Baghdad, President Arif said:

"While leaving your great country I thank you on behalf of myself and party for giving the opportunity to meet you and acquaint ourselves with the progress achieved by your country under your wise leadership. I wish you good health and wish the people of India progress and wealth for more fruitful co-operation between our two countries, for the happiness of humanity and peace of the world."

He also sent the following message to the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, at the conclusion of his visit to India:

"I have the honour to convey to Your Excellency on behalf of myself and party our thanks for inviting us to visit your beautiful country and for the opportunity to meet Your Excellency and the esteemed members of your Government. We feel our visit has achieved benefits for mutual interest between our countries, the result of which, may I proudly say, shall be for the betterment of our people and all the people of the world, whom we wish all progress and prosperity."

F. Parliament Committee Recommendations On 17th Amendment Move: The Joint Committee of Parliament on the 17th Constitution (Amendment) Bill has recommended that personally cultivated lands within land ceiling limits should be compensated if they are to be acquired under any land reform legislation.

The Committee has recommended that compensation should be fixed at not less than the market value and be paid not only for the land to be acquired but for buildings and other structures standing on it.

The proposed amendment seeks constitutional protection to land reform laws affecting ryotwari settlements and others lands in respect of which provisions are normally made in land reform enactments.

The Committee in its report, presented to the Lok Sabha on March 25 made the following observation about the major change it has proposed in the amending Bill:

"The Committee feels that where any law makes a provision for the acquisition by the State of any estate and where any land comprised therein is held by a person under his personal cultivation, it should not be lawful for the State to acquire any land as is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under any law for the time being in force or any building or structure standing thereon and appurtenant thereto, unless the law relating to the acquisition of such land, building or structure provides for payment of compensation at a rate not less than the market value thereof."

The Committee, to which the Constitution Amendment Bill was referred in September, 1963 proposed that only 44 land reform enactments be added to the Ninth Schedule of the Constitution which puts those legislative measures above litigation.

The Bill originally sought incorporation of 124 legislative Acts in the Ninth Schedule.

The report of the Committee, headed by Mr. S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, Deputy Speaker of the Lok Sabha, said 83 Acts had been struck off the original list because the Government had informed that a number of them had been fully implemented without being challenged in courts of law, and that several others had stood the test in courts, while others did not raise any major controversial issue.

The Committee added to the Ninth Schedule eight enactments not in the original list of the Bill.

The Committee proposed that the Bihar Land Reforms (Fixation of Ceiling Area and Acquisition of Surplus Land) Act be included in the Ninth Schedule with the exception of its Section 28.

It expressed the view that this Section of the Bihar Act was not in accordance with its recommendation governing compensation.

It recommended constitutional protection to the Rajasthan Tenancy Act of 1955 on condition that no acquisition was made under it without payment of compensation as fixed by the 17th Amendment to the Constitution.

Of the eight new enactments included by the Committee in the Ninth Schedule, three were meant to validate with retrospective effect the Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act of 1950 which was struck down by the Andhra High Court on the ground that it had not received the assent of the President.

These three enactments are the Andhra Pradesh (Telengana Area) Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Validation) Act of 1961 which validates the Hyderabad Act in respect of the Telengana area of Andhra Pradesh, and the corresponding Maharashtra and Mysore Acts for the Marathwada area of Maharashtra and "Karnatak area" of Mysore.

Three others—Gujerat Surviving Alienations Abolition Act, Kerala Land Reforms Act and Orissa Merged Territories (Village Officers Abolition) Act—were enacted after the Constitution Amendment Bill was introduced in May, 1963 in Parliament.

The remaining two—Jemmikaram Payment (Abolition) Act and Kerala Land Tax Act of Kerala—were struck down by courts but considered by the Committee as requiring constitutional validation.

G. Steps To Prevent Corruption —Santhanam Committee's Recommendations: The constitution of a national panel by the President, on the advice of the Prime Minister, to deal with corruption charges involving Central or State Ministers has been recommended by the Santhanam Committee on Prevention of Corruption.

The Committee's report, running into 302 pages, which was presented to the Lok Sabha on April 2 by the Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda, said that there was no need for a permanent tribunal for this purpose.

It said that public belief in the prevalence of corruption at high political levels had been strengthened by the manner in which funds were collected by political parties, especially at the time of elections. "Such suspicions attach not only to the ruling party but to all parties, as often the Opposition can also support private vested interests as well as members of the Government party."

If even one family in three paid a rupee a year to a political party, the total annual contribution would be more than what was needed for all legitimate purposes of all political parties in India. It was the reluctance and inability of political parties to make small collections on a wide basis nd the desire to resort to short-cuts through large donations that constituted the major source of corruption and even more of suspicion of corruption.

In conditions prevailing in India, companies should not be allowed to participate in politics through donations. Nothing but a total ban on all donations by incorporated bodies to political parties and purposes would clear the atmosphere.

Another essential step was for all political parties to keep a proper account of their receipts and expenditure and to publish annually an audited statement of such accounts, giving details of all individual receipts. Failure to do so should debar a political party from recognition by the Election Commission, the postal authorities and banks.

The Press could do a great deal in creating a proper social climate for the public services. It was certainly the privilege of every free newspaper to expose or condemn corruption on the part of public servants or their failure to perform their duties properly.

While responsible newspapers should be encouraged to assist the public against corrupt officials, drastic action should be taken against irresponsible newspapers which made reckless allegations. It should become an invariable practice to prosecute such newspapers unless they could establish the truth of their allegations. It should not be left to individual officers or Ministers to take such action. The existing law and procedure would have to be reviewed from that point of view.

The Committee suggested that the Chief Justice of India, in consultation with the Chief Justice of the High Courts should arrange for a thorough inquiry into the incidence of corruption in the judiciary, and evolve in consultation with the Central and State Governments, proper measures to eliminate it.

The report contained exhaustive recommendations in regard to methods of combating corruption among officials.

It said that the existence of large amounts of unaccounted black money was a major source of corruption in the country.

There was no justification to treat income-tax returns and assessments secret. It recommended the lifting of the security provisions of the income-tax law—a proposal that has already been anticipated in the Finance Bill passed by Parliament.

It recommended that in order to strike a blow against black money, a corporation be set up to acquire at stated value properties deliberately undervalued in conveyance deeds—a common method of "cheating the Central Government of income-tax and other taxes and the State Government of stamp duty, and a convenient method for transferring black money."

It recommended a system of accreditation business house representatives to keep a check on persons who seek interviews with business matters. It said that officers authorised to deal with business representatives should be required to maintain a diary of all interviews, and companies and businessmen be obliged to keep detailed accounts of their expenses money.

It said that the Indian Penal Code did not deal in any satisfactory way with "social offences", and suggested that special enactments against such offences as tax evasion, profiteering, adulteration, trafficking in licences, and misappropriation of public funds be brought together under a new chapter of the IPC. This would put all social offences in a prominent place in the general criminal law of the country.

Bribing and attempts at bribing should be made "a substantive offence" and not regarded as just abetment of corruption.

The Committee suggested a number of amendments to the Prevention of Corruption Act, the Criminal Procedure Code and related laws to make action against corrupt officials effective.

It suggested a number of measures designed to prevent corruption; some of the general suggestions were:

(1) Only members of recognized trade organizations should be eligible for licences and permits. The trade organizations should screen their members and also help authorities in investigating misuse of licences.

(2) Administrative delays should be reduced since these delays were often deliberately contrived to seek illicit gratification.

(3) To eliminate touts and intermediaries, a serious attempt should be made to educate the citizens about honest ways of securing help of the administration.

(4) Low-paid Government servants should be provided housing and medical facilities and assistance for education of their children.

The Committee said it was difficult to make a precise estimate of the extent of corruption among Government servants in India.

It, however, gave a number of statistical tables about complaints received by the Government between 1956 and 1962, the vigilance cases disposed of, and the complaints received and investigated by the Delhi Special Police Establishment. It also classified according to rank the gazetted officers whose conduct was investigated between 1947 and 1962.

The Committee's conclusion was: "It is clear that corruption is not confined to lower ranks of public servants and that the number of gazetted officers whose cases had to be investigated is disturbingly large."

H. Import Policy For 1964-65: Imports for defence and small industries will be substantially liberalized during 1964-65 under the import policy announced in New Delhi on March 31.

Explaining the policy, a spokesman of the Ministry of International Trade said that maintenance imports for industry may also be larger. But this would be entirely dependent on the availability of additional non-project assistance from foreign countries and was not part of the import policy.

Apart from these increases, he explained, the overall import picture remained the same as in the previous year. Slight increases had been allowed in the interests of export promotion and development. But they had been offset by equivalent decreases in some non-essential imports or in spheres where the imported items could be substituted by indigenous materials.

Except for the additional needs of defence and small industries and the possible increases in non-project assistance, the foreign exchange outlay on imports during the year would remain the same as in the previous year.

Established importers would "broadly speaking" get the same amount of exchange as the previous year, that is, around Rs. 8 crores for six months.

Though the import policy announcement covered the whole year, licences would be issued for the year with the condition that only goods worth 50 per cent of the licence value would be imported during the first six months. The remaining half would be imported after October 1.

Small importers with annual licences up to Rs. 5,000 could, however, import their quota any time they like.

Under the new policy, cuts have been imposed on items like highly polished zinc sheets, component parts of knitting, hosiery and embroidery machines, dental instruments, filter paper, silk or artificial silk goods needed for medical use and rubber chemicals.

The import of a number of motor vehicle parts will also be further restricted.

Quotas have, however, been increased for items like steel belt lacing, drugs and medicines, machine cloth, grinding rollers, surgical instruments, arms and ammunition and certain motor vehicle parts.

I. Progress Of Joint Enterprises —Indo-Kuwait Commission To Be Set Up: India and Kuwait have proposed to set up a joint commission which will review the progress of proposals for joint enterprises and diversification of trade between the two countries.

The commission will meet every six months alternatively in Bahrain and New Delhi.

This was disclosed in a joint communique signed in the last week of March by Mr. Manubhai Shah, India's Minister for International Trade, and Mr. Jabir Ahmed Al Jabir, Kuwait's Minister for Finance and Industry.

Now, following the understanding reached between the two countries, investment institutions and businessmen of Kuwait are likely to invest Rs. 50 crores for developing a wide range of industries in India.

The investment, which may be in share capital and credits, is likely to cover 30 industries. Among these are food products, the hotel industry, steel tubes and pipes, fertilizers, ready-made garments and sugar and cement machinery.

Kuwait, which is now nearing the final planning stage of its vast petro-chemical industries, can look forward to India as a natural market to absorb the by-products of its oil refining industry.

Mr. Shah said that India could become a regular buyer of sulphur, expected to be produced in the proposed refinery in Kuwait.

J. Steel Targets For Fourth Plan—Steering Group's Recommendations: The steering group on steel has recommended the production targets of 17 million tonnes of steel ingots, four million tonnes of pig-iron and one million tonnes of alloy and special steels for the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

This was stated in the annual report of the Department of Iron and Steel released on April 5.

The steering group has stated that the Fourth Plan targets should be achieved by expanding the existing mills in the public and private sectors and establishing four new mills in the public sector in addition to Bokaro. One of the four mills would be the proposed plant in South India based on Neyveli lignite.

Two of the four mills would produce ordinary steel, the third to produce tool and alloy steel, and the fourth ferro alloys.

The steering group has also recommended the setting up in the public sector of five or six blast furnaces to produce pig-iron for sale.

It said that action was being taken to manufacture steel-making equipment by expanding machine-building capacity.

Steel production during 1963-64 was estimated at 4.4 million tonnes which, despite the import of 1 million tonnes, is short of the total demand by 0.2 million tonnes. Pig-iron production was estimated at 1.2 million tonnes, 0.8 million tonnes short of the internal demand.

The report said that the expansion programme of the public sector steel mills was gaining momentum. Considerable progress had been made to increase the capacity of the Bhilai steel plant from 1 million tonnes to 2.5 million tonnes.

The expansion of the Durgapur plant, from a million tonnes to 1.6 million tonnes capacity, and of the Rourkela plant, from 1 million tonnes to 1.8 million tonnes capacity was under way and likely to be completed by 1966.

The report said that trial production in the 60,000-tonne capacity alloy steel plant at Durgapur would commence by the end of this year.

The capacity of the Mysore Iron and Steel Works at Bhadravati was being raised from 35,000 tonnes to 85,000 tonnes of finished steel. The expansion scheme was being converted into an alloy steel plant of a capacity of 77,000 tonnes in collaboration with an Austrian firm at an estimated cost of Rs. 10.7 crores.

About Bokaro, the report said that the technical report prepared by Messrs Dastur and Co. was being considered by the board of directors of the newly constituted company, Messrs Bokaro Steel Limited. Equipment for the plant would be purchased from the world market on the basis of "competitive prices and available credits" after making a careful assessment of the equipment which can be fabricated in the country.

The Government had approved in principle the expansion of the Tata Iron and Steel Works from 2 million tonnes to 3 million tonnes capacity and of the Indian Iron and Steel Company from 1 million tonnes to 2 million tonnes.

Steps were also being taken to train more steel technicians. The training institutes at Bhilai and Rourkela had been expanded and the expansion of the institute at Durgapur was being considered. The number of trainees at the three institutes at the end of 1963 was about 30,000.

A total of 529 foreign technicians were working in the three public sector steel mills at the end of 1963.

The Rourkela plant had 253 technicians, the Bhilai plant 216 and the Durgapur plant 57. These foreign technicians were working both on the operational side and the expansion programme, and were also training Indian engineers.

K. Two Central Loans: The Central Government announced on March 30 the first phase of its market borrowings programme for 1964-65 with two new conversion loans—(i) four per cent loan, 1970 to be issued at Rs. 99 per cent and (ii) 4¾ per cent loan, 1989 to be issued at Rs. 100 per cent. Subscription was received from April 15 to 22.

Conversion facilities have been offered for holders of 3½ per cent National Plan loan, 1964 (amount outstanding Rs. 158.17 crores) and three per cent loan, 1964 (amount outstanding Rs. 30.33 crores).

The yield on the six-year loan works out at 4.16 per cent and for the 25-year loan at 4.75 per cent which is much higher than the rates of securities of similar periods.

The interest rate at 4¾ per cent offered on the 25-year loan is the highest ever offered by the Government in its market borrowings. For gold bonds, 1977 the interest offered was 6½ per cent but the valuation of gold offered was done at international price which was nearly half of the ruling market price.

The 25-year maturity period of the 4¾ per cent loan is the longest for any loan floated in the current Plan period.

Among the current loans, the longest is the three per cent 1986 floated as a conversion loan of 1964.

It is expected that in time with the current policy the interest rates on State loans may also go up.

The Government's borrowing programme for 1964-65 is Rs. 295 crores. The 3½ per cent National Plan loan matured on April 18 and the three per cent loan matured on April 14.

L. Oil Output At Ankleshwar: The Ankleshwar oilfield in Gujerat has rigged out for itself the pride of place in the oil map of the country.

Of the 115 wells dug in the 12-square-mile area, 107 produced high quality oil which, according to Mr. R. L. Sarna, director of the oil field, is a world record. Normally only 10 to 15 per cent of the wells dug produce oil.

Drilling in the Ankleshwar oil-field is expected to be completed by this year-end when about 125 oil wells are expected to produce 2.4 million tons of crude annually. At present Ankleshwar is supplying 2,250 tons of crude a day to the Burmah-Shell and ESSO refineries at Bombay. The gross value of the crude sent to refineries so far amounts to Rs. 8.50 crores.

The estimated oil deposits in the Ankleshwar field is 80 million tons, of which only 60 per cent—50 million tons—can be recovered. This field is expected to supply oil to the Gujerat refineries for 20 years.

The Cambay structure, which has proved to be a gas field, would shortly start supplying gas to the Dhuvaran thermal power station. Gas from the 41 wells drilled in this region so far would be carried through a 26-kilometre-long pipeline which is now nearing completion. Crude oil from the Ankleshwar field will be transported to the Gujerat refinery at Koyali by a 98-kilometre-long pipeline.

Till the Koyali refinery is commissioned, Ankleshwar crude is being carried by two special trains daily to the private refineries at Bombay.

The Oil and Natural Gas Commission is employing about 9,000 persons in Gujerat State alone and the experience of several thousand young Indian technicians will be useful for drilling oil in other parts of the country. Mr. Sarna said that from the experience gained in Ankleshwar, he was hopeful of oil finds in Jwalamukhi in Punjab and the Cauvery basin in Madras.

He said that the real impact of the achievements of the Commission and the discoveries made by it would be felt in the next few years, when major industries and a petro-chemical complex based on refined by-products of the crude oil come up in Gujerat.

M. LIC Enters General Insurance Business: The Life Insurance Corporation (LIC) entered the general insurance business in April as a non-tariff insurer in the eighth year of its being set up as a public sector organization.

The public sector in general insurance covers at present about 12 per cent of the business. The entry of the Corporation with a field personnel of 1,75,000 and assets worth Rs. 800 crores may, therefore, mark the beginning of a significant expansion of the public sector in the next few years.

The Corporation has evoked about two dozen risk covers under fire, marine and miscellaneous sections. It would consider proposals for other types of covers if approached by concerned interests.

In the first year of its working as a general insurer, the Corporation is expected to write business with a premium income of over Rs. 1 crore. Among nearly 156 general insurers, including about 70 non-Indian insurers, there are hardly half-a-dozen companies writing business with a premium income of over Rs. 1 crore per year.

Initially, the Corporation proposes to follow tariff rates in respect of business like fire and motor insurance, workmen compensation and certain types of marine business for which tariff rates have been laid down.

In respect of business for which no tariff rates have been laid down, the Corporation is adopting rates more or less at par with those followed by Oriental Fire and General Insurance Company.

The Corporation will evolve in due course its own rating structure based on statistical data.

N. Progress Of Panchayati Raj —Ministry Of Community Development's Annual Report: Panchayati raj has now been fully established in 10 States and legislation for its introduction has been passed in three others, according to the annual report of the Department of Community Development, Ministry of Community Development and Co-operation for 1963-64.

Panchayati raj legislation has been passed in 13 States, i.e. Andhra Pradesh, Assam, Bihar, Gujerat, Madras, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Mysore, Orissa, Punjab, Rajasthan, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal. Bihar, Madhya Pradesh and West Bengal have yet to implement the legislation.

In Kerala, a draft Bill was introduced in the State Legislature in February; in Jammu and Kashmir a committee has been formed and it has yet to submit its recommendations.

During the year under review, three study teams made detailed reviews of specific aspects of panchayati raj. A study team on Gram Sabha suggested various measures to activize the institution, which is now statutorily recognized in nine States. Another team studied panchayati raj finances; its recommendations are being examined. There was also a study group on budgeting and accounting procedure of panchayati raj institutions.

For 1964-65, an outlay of over Rs. 51 crores for community development programme has been proposed.

The report revealed that the Khadi and Village Industries Commission had agreed to promote four village industries as a minimum target for each block.

During October, 1962-September, 1963, 46,703 adult literary centres were started, in which 772,254 adults were made literate, bringing the total number of adults made literate till now to about 7,800,000.

The Village Volunteer Force scheme has been introduced in all the States. By the end of January, over 14,600,000 volunteers had been enrolled in the Force. The donations amounted to over 107,000,000 man-days and about Rs. 19,00,000 in cash. Of this about 22,000,000 man-days had been utilized.

O. Central Government's Stand On Suits Against Former Indian Rulers—Supreme Court Ruling: The Supreme Court observed on March 23 that the Central Government should not attempt to assume the jurisdiction of a civil court and decide whether a claim was well-founded before according consent to a suit against former Indian rulers.

The Court accordingly granted a declaration to Maharajkumar Tokendra Bir Singh of Manipur that an order passed by the Central Government "is an order which accords consent to the institution of the suit which he proposes to file against Maharaja Okendrajit Singh." The petitioner had challenged the validity of Section 87-B of the Civil Procedure Code under Article 32 of the Constitution and the order passed by the Government of India according partial consent to a suit which the petitioner proposed to file against the minor Maharaja, Mr. Okendrajit Singh. The proposed suit was for partition of property.

As required by Section 87-B the petitioner had applied to the Government for its consent to the proposed suit against the Maharaja. The Central Government gave consent for the suit in respect of certain properties only.

The Supreme Court judgment, read by the Chief Justice, Mr. P. B. Gajendragadkar, said that the relevent Section was intended substantially to save the rulers of former Indian States from harassment which would be caused by the institution of frivolous suits.

The petitioner had contended that the relevent Section imposing a condition was unconstitutional and had urged that there was no jurisdiction with the Government of India to accord consent in respect of some others.

INDONESIA

A. Relations With Holland—Dr. R. Subandrio's Visit: It was announced in The Hague on April 3 that "a sound foundation has been laid for new relations between Indonesia and Holland."

The statement was issued at the end of a three-day visit to Holland by Dr. R. Subandrio, the Indonesian Foreign Minister.

The statement announced the following "most satisfactory" results of the "most cordial" talks:

Ambassadors will be exchanged "as soon as possible within this year."

The two Foreign Ministers, Dr. Subandrio (Indonesia) and Dr. J. Luns (Holland), have signed an Agreement for technical co-operation. This provides for an exchange of "knowledge and experience in the broad sense, possibly accompanied by material aid".

Commenting on the new Agreement, the statement said: "The Ministers regard this agreement as constituting an important general basis for the development of future co-operation in the promotion of scientific and economic progress."

The two Foreign Ministers agreed that Dutch and Indonesian delegations will meet within three months, either in The Hague or Djakarta to discuss outstanding financial problems.

Diplomatic relations between Indonesia and the Netherlands, which were broken off in August, 1960, were restored in March, 1963 after the New York agreement of August 15, 1962, by which West Irian was handed over to Indonesia.

Although Indonesia expelled most Dutch citizens in 1958, when practically all Dutch property was expropriated, personal relations between many Indonesian leaders and their former friends in Holland remained cordial. These feelings of mutual affection had never died out completely, but after the West Irian settlement the first contacts between Dutch and Indonesians were not altogether successful.

When the Dutch left, the railways, the ports, the roads, the oilfields and the mines were already in a bad state. This situation has worsened considerably. Some factories have come to a standstill for lack of maintenance and a few spare parts, obtainable only in Holland. In the tin mines alone £3 million worth of new equipment is needed. The Dutch trade mission has asked the Government for a long-term credit for Indonesia. A sum of £50 million is mentioned.

When an Indonesian trade mission paid a return visit to Holland a number of contracts were made.

ISRAEL

A. Zionist General Council Meeting: The problem of the future of the Jewish people was the central theme in the deliberations of the Zionist General Council, which opened in Jerusalem on March 16. The session was the last before the 26th World Zionist Congress in December, 1964.

Mr. Yaakov Tzur, Chairman of the Zionist General Council, opened the session.

On the day before the opening session, a joint communique of the Israeli Government and the Zionist Executive declared that the Government pledged its "full moral, public and economic support" for the educational and cultural activities of the World Zionist Organization.

The communique said: "The members of the Executive expressed the determination of the Zionist Movement, whilst continuing to discharge its functions in the spheres of immigration, absorption and settlement on the land, as provided for in the Covenant, to concentrate, intensify and invigorate its efforts in the Diaspora in the fields of the education of children and the youth, as well as by active participation in the activities of Jewish communities and Jewish international organizations.

"It was explained that the purpose of these endeavours will be to strengthen the attachment of Jewish communities in the Dispersion to the State of Israel as a centre of their spiritual life; to enlist their effective co-operation in responsibility for the further development of the State and the safeguarding of its future; to intensify among them the consciousness of the unity of the Jewish people, the solidarity of its various parts and its efforts for self-preservation through organized effort; to assist in the extension and development of Jewish education with a view to imparting to the young generation the values of Judaism and its spiritual heritage; to spread the knowledge of the Hebrew language and Israel's renascent Hebrew culture; and to awaken and cultivate the mental readiness and active desire to settle in Israel.

"On behalf of the Government of Israel, the Prime Minister expressed his agreement with this analysis of the situation and the programme of action entailed thereby.

"It was agreed that the effort aiming at the enhancement of the Zionist spirit in Jewish life is a matter of joint concern for the State of Israel and the World Zionist Organization."

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, President of the World Zionist Organization, declared at the opening of the Council that Jewish survival was the greatest problem confronting the Jewish people today.

Dr. Goldmann, who had taken up residence is Israel as an immigrant the previous week, said: "For all the positive changes in our position as a people—equality of rights, economic affluence, the establishment of the State of Israel—the problem of Jewish survival is, in my opinion, more serious and more difficult than it was when Zionism first brought its revolutionary message to the Jewish people."

Asserting that the sense of Jewish unity was a sine qua non for Jewish survival, he listed a number of factors that undermined it. In some countries, "because of extreme State nationalism, no citizen or group has the right to belong to international organizations". There were other countries where "public opinion and Governments regard it as an act of disloyalty for Jewish communities to participate in world Jewish conferences or organizations."

There were also "great communities—the most important of which is the American Jewish community—where the majority is far from accepting the principle of united international Jewish action... and shies away from joining international Jewish organizations."

Another symptom of disintegration, he said, was the effort to define Jewish peoplehood in terms of one factor to the exclusion of others. He emphaiszed that "it would be a complete distortion of our history to eliminate the religious element" in such a definition, but that it would be a similar distortion to "limit Jewish world to a purely religious conception."

A third symptom was the fear of many Jews "to insist on the unique and specific character of our people." The task of the Zionist Movement, in the days ahead, was to lead the "fight for Jewish survival in the Diaspora," in defending the rights and positions of the Jewish people, developing Jewish culture, and fighting tendencies to assimilation.

He described the American Zionist Movement as the "weakest link" in the world movement. "There is no greater task, none as decisive for our future as a movement, than regaining our leading position" in American Jewish life.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol greeted the delegates "for the first time not as a member of the Zionist Executive." The Zionist Movement, he declared, "must be young and fresh in thought, in its way of doing things. While it is good to see old comrades here, if the Movement, the Jewish people and the State of Israel are to be rejuvenated the Movement needs masses of youth."

He said that in the Zionist Movement's new campaign to "conquer the communities" of the free Diaspora, the Government would give "every moral and political support. And if it should happen that the Movement and the Jewish people cannot bear the material burden alone, the Government will also lend a hand here—if asked and to the limits of its capacity."

A I£340 million budget for the coming year was submitted by the Jewish Agency Treasurer, Mr. Arye Pincus. It was about I£35 million less than the current one. Fifty-one per cent of the new budget was earmarked for immigration and absorption, as compared with an average of 38 per cent in the budgets of the past 15 years. Agricultural settlement will take 25 per cent of the total (as compared to a 45 per cent average), while activities in the Diaspora will account for eight per cent (4 per cent average in past 15 years).

Mr. Pincus stressed that budgetary difficulties in the current year were greater than contemplated, because immigration and absorption costs were higher, and income from campaigns had not reached the level expected.

JAPAN

A. Road Construction Programme: Japan has embarked on some major highway construction plans which are tied up with her commercial and industrial development programme.

The World Bank is lending money for this development.

The World Bank has approved a loan of $75 million to help finance the continuing construction of a total express highway that will become one of the principal commercial arteries of Japan. It will finance a 100-mile section connecting Tokyo and Shizuoka; earlier loans have financed parts of the same highway, which ultimately will extend 335 miles from Tokyo to Kobe.

The expressway will relieve the serious shortage of transport capacity in the most heavily industrialized and populated region of Japan; it will lower operating costs of highway users, of which more than half are trucks, will speed up travel time, and should sharply reduce the high accident rate now prevailing.

Vereinsbank in Hamburg is participating in the loan, without the World Bank's guarantee, to the extent of $50,000, representing part of the first maturity which falls due on May 15, 1969.

The Tokyo-Shizuoka region is Japan's most important centre of commerce and industry, as well as the centre of national government. More than a quarter of the country's businesses are located there, and nearly a third of its production originates there. The region accounts for nearly half of all passenger-cars, about a quarter of all trucks, and a fifth of all buses. About 80 per cent of freight tonnage through the region is moved by truck, and since 1955 bus traffic has doubled. The area is served by the railways, but only one highway traverses its entire length. The existing highway is heavily congested and completely inadequate to handle the rapidly growing vehicular traffic.

The loan was made to the Nihon Doro Kodan (Japan Highway Public Corporation), a Government corporation responsible for the construction, operation, and maintenance of toll roads and related facilities in Japan.

Designs, plans, and specifications of these toll roads are prepared by the corporation, assisted by outside consultants when necessary. Construction work is executed by contractors on a unit price basis under the supervision of the Corporation; operation and maintenance of the facilities are carried out mainly by its own forces.

This project includes heavy earthworks, construction of bridges, tunnels, viaducts, interchanges, service areas, bus stops, toll stations, traffic-control facilities, and connecting links with the existing road network. Almost one-quarter of the expressway, extending from the south-western suburbs of Tokyo, will be bi-lane, the remainder four-lane.

The total cost of the project, including construction, land acquisition, engineering, and interest during the construction period, is estimated at the equivalent of about $630 million. Although no bids were received from non-Japanese firms on the sections of this highway that were previously financed by the Bank, Nihon Doro Kodan will continue to provide opportunity for international competitive bidding on major contracts.

The 114-mile section of the expressway between Kobe and Nagoya, being built with the assistance of two earlier Bank loans totalling $80 million, is partly open to traffic, and all of it should be finished by the end of this year.

The Tokyo-Shizuoka section now being financed is scheduled for completion by March, 1969. Construction of the remaining 121 miles of the expressway from Shizuoka to Nagoya will proceed concurrently with the Bank project.

JORDAN

A. King Hussein's Visit To UAR: King Hussein arrived in Cairo on March 10 on a four-day visit to UAR.

He was welcomed at the airport by President G. A. Nasser and other members of the UAR Government.

Some hours after the King's arrival, the two Heads of State had their first formal meeting. Present at the talks were Field-Marshal Abdul Hakim Amer, Vice-President and Deputy Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces, and Mr. Kamal Eddin Rifaat, member of the Presidential Council and head of the King's Mission of Honour.

President Nasser gave a banquet in honour of King Hussein the same night.

Display At Air Base:

On March 12, King Hussein and President Nasser visited an air base.

King Hussein inspected a heavy bomber and a modern jet fighter. He also had a discussion with a number of pilots before going onto a rostrum to watch a big air formation.

He saw a number of demonstrations. A group of fighters launched their rockets on a fixed land target. The first rocket succeeded in hitting and destroying the target.

A heavy bomber, escorted by two fighters, flew close to the reviewing ground and bombers followed.

The parade was concluded by the appearance of a number of supersonic aircraft.

King Hussein and President Nasser and the reviewers afterwards visited a rocket launching station where they were met by the Commander of the Artillery, leading officers of the Artillery and the Commandant of the Station.

A mock air raid was staged to demonstrate the efficiency of the ground-to-air rockets. When a supposed enemy jet fighter approached, the warning system announced its appearance. In a few seconds, the rockets were ready to work and the first rocket succeeded in scoring a direct hit on the target. All were able to see the target blown up.

President Nasser and King Hussein left Cairo early on March 13 for a visit to Hurghada on the Red Sea coast.

From Hurghada airport, President Nasser saw the King off for home.

Farewell Message:

Immediately after his arrival in Amman, King Hussein sent the following message to President Nasser:

"Brother President Gamel Abdul Nasser ... At the very moment of my return to Jordan, it gives me pleasure to convey to Your Excellency the most profound feelings of cordiality and gratitude for the kind feelings and welcome expressed by Your Excellency and the brotherly people of the UAR. During my visit to the UAR, I felt at home."

The message said that "these days would be as immortal" as the links that would realise the unity, freedom, dignity and glory of the Arabs.

The progress in UAR would remain a source of pride and security for the Arab nation. "Through our co-operation and by closing our ranks, we will realise our hopes, praying Almighty God for further co-operation towards the building of a better future for our nation and the coming generations."

PAKISTAN

A. US Report On Salinity: The US President, Mr. Lyndon B. Johnson, on March 25 sent a detailed report to President Ayub Khan on "land and water development in the Indus plain".

In a letter presenting the 454-page report, President Johnson hoped that the data and conclusions contained in the report would be of practical help to Pakistan. He said that the report was "a good example of how sharing of scientific and technical knowledge can contribute to the welfare of our people and to the cause of peace and understanding."

"Our people learned much from your people in working on this challenging project. I hope the future will draw us closer together as together we solve the common problems."

The Indus land and water development report is a greatly modified version of the interim draft submitted to Pakistan in September, 1962. It is more comprehensive and contains an embracing plan for agricultural development in West Pakistan.

The report was finalised under the guidance of Dr. Jerome Wiesner, formerly special White House Assistant for Science and Technology. He set up a task force under Dr. Roger Revelle, formerly scientific advisor to the US Interior Department which went into the entire land and water problems of West Pakistan, rather than concentrate on waterlogging and salinity problem which was originally raised by President Ayub Khan with the late President J. F. Kennedy during his official visit to Washington in July, 1961. President Kennedy had responded by creating a panel of American experts to study the problem.

Authors of the report believe that waterlogging and salinity problem was only one of many problems in West Pakistan agriculture and could not be effectively solved in isolation. They suggest that existing cultivable land in West Pakistan should be cultivated on a planned basis using modern methods. American scientists estimate that some 6½ million acres of land is either actually or potentially affected by waterlogging and salinity. They do not think this rate is accelerating more than 0.2 to 0.4 per cent of irrigated area per year, at least in former Punjab.

The report holds that by properly irrigating the existing areas, waterlogging and salinity problems can be controlled. Although American scientists do not suggest that a vigorous attack should not be made on the problem of waterlogging and salinity problem, they do not share the fear commonly expressed that West Pakistan agriculture faces an early catastrophe. They emphasize the need for a broad assault on the many problems that depress agricultural production in West Pakistan. What is needed and what can be accomplished in the Indus plain is a large, rapid, continuing and economically beneficial increase in agricultural production.

The panel of scientists was convinced that within a generation West Pakistan's agriculture can be revolutionised to achieve standards of Japan, USA and other advanced countries.

The report recommends a plan of action to be spread over 25 years. It suggests that there should be a re-orientation of strategy to concentrate efforts on limited project areas.

It is proposed that the major part of cultivable lands of the Indus plain be divided into some 25 to 30 project areas of roughly a million acres each. In each project area tubewells or other means of drainage would be constructed to control the level of groundwater and soil salt content and, where possible to increase the supply of irrigation water. The timetable for a typical project area would include a two-year preparatory period during which tubewells and drains would be constructed; a five-year period of intense development during which a target increase of 15 per cent per year would be set or 100 per cent during the five-year period.

This would be followed by a growth rate of about seven per cent indefinitely. After 25 years, the American scientists predict per capita yields would be twice the present ones, even with a population increase of 3 per cent per year.

The report estimates that capital costs for 16.4 million acres in former Punjab and former Bahawalpur and for 9 to 10 million acres in former Sind would be Rs. 11 billion. If this expenditure were spread over the next 25 to 30 years, the annual average investment would be Rs. 380 to Rs. 430 million. It was pointed out that during Pakistan's Second Five-Year Plan the average annual expenditure for water and agricultural sector projects was Rs. 735 million. Experts say "this required expenditure for the Plan constitutes a major fraction of the total allocations to these sectors. However, they do not appear excessive in terms of the entire Five-Year Plan."

Some 625,000 tons of nitrogen fertilizer would be needed each year for 25 million cultivated acres, annual cost of which to farmers being Rs. 600 million.

The main idea behind the American scientists' report is that West Pakistan should concentrate more on exploiting fully and mechanically the existing 30 million or so acres of cultivable land rather than embark upon an expensive reclamation project for five or six million acres of land affected by waterlogging and salinity.

In an interview, Dr. Roger Revelle, chairman of the panel of scientists, admitted that their report would not be popular. But he was convinced that if existing lands available were cultivated to increase per capita yield to even three times the existing yields, West Pakistan could support twice the present population. He pointed out that in UAR with only 7 million acres of cultivable land the country supported nearly 30 million people.

TURKEY

A. Foreign Trade In 1963: Trade figures for the calendar year 1963 by the State Institute of Statistics show that exports in 1963 fell by 3.5 per cent, while imports rose by 10.8 per cent.

Total exports were valued at $368,100,000 compared with $381,300,000 in 1962 and imports amounted to $690,700,000 against $622,200,000 the previous year.

The trade gap has thus considerably widened to $322.6 million from $241 million in 1962 and $162 million in 1961, but even so, the value of exports has exceeded the figure of $348 million estimated for the first year of the Five-Year Economic Plan (1963).

The exports which showed the sharpest decrease were tobacco, which fell from $96.2 million in 1962 to $66.7 million in 1963, and minerals which decreased from $20.6 million to $12.4 million. Exports of cotton and cotton goods, however, rose from $64.5 million to $81.2 million.

The largest category of imports was, as in the previous year, machinery, imports of which rose to $189.7 million from $180.4 million in 1962. Wheat imports rose from $50.6 million to $57.8 million but, as anticipated, imports of petroleum products fell from $77.3 million to $66.7 million. Imports of transport materials and equipment also fell from $95.9 million to $79.9 million. The USA and Canada supplied Turkey with 30.8 per cent of her total imports last year, $212.8 million compared with $181.6 million in 1962 and purchased from her goods to the value of $59.7 million, compared with $75.8 million the previous year. Combined exports to the Common Market countries were $139.9 million or 38 per cent of the total 1963 exports.

ADEN

A. Federal Government Takes Over Maintenance Of Army: It was announced in Aden on April 1 that the South Arabian Federal Government had taken over from the British War Office financial control and responsibility for the maintenance of the Federal regular Army.

This step was part of the Arabization of the Federal Army raised in November, 1961 from the old Aden Protectorate levies.

British officers command and staff four battalions of the Federal Army and a fifth battalion is in process of formation.

The Federal Government has no navy or air force.

In the 1964-65 financial year, the Federal Government will spend over £4,000,000 on its 250,000-strong, well-trained Arab force. It was understood that the British Government would pay this amount.

B. Development Of Fishing Industry—FAO Aid: A message on March 27 said that the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) was sponsoring a £400,000 fisheries project in conjunction with the South Arabian Federal Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries with the object of increasing the supply of fresh fish.

The size and distribution of fish stocks along the Federation's 750-mile coast line is to be examined, fishing crews are to be trained, and advice given on the possible mobilization of domestic and foreign capital to accelerate the growth of the fishing industry.

C. Port Activities During 1963: There has been an increase in the activities of the Aden Port Trust during 1963, as follows:

	1962	1963
Number of ships calling (Ships)	5,929	6,206
Tonnage of dry cargo discharged (Tons)	522,524	553,564
Tonnage of dry cargo exported (Tons)	202,987	170,945
Oil bunkers supplied to ships (Tons)	3,621,522	3,721,398
Oil cargo exported (Tons)	3,297,107	3,868,675
Fresh water supplied to ships (Tons)	376,183	432,134

The Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Duncan Sandys, gave the following figures in the House of Commons on March 18, for the annual value of the entrepot trade of Aden from 1953 to 1963 (in £'000):

1958	18,960	1961	17,935
1960	17,499	First half of 1963	8,882

Mr. Sandys stated that no direct revenue accrues to the Aden Government in respect of the entrepot trade as Aden is a free port, and duties on tobacco, alcohol, perfume and petroleum products are levied only on imports used in Aden itself, and, since January, 1963, in the South Arabian Federation.

He added that it was not possible to assess with any accuracy the value of indirect revenue accruing from entrepot trade.

Recommendations On Future Of Port:

The Commission set up in October, 1963 under Colonel T. F. Hood to inquire into the present and future position of the port of Aden recommended on March 25 that the port should be run as a commercial enterprise and should fully co-operate with the British forces stationed in the area.

The Commission was appointed at a time when it seemed possible that the Aden Government intended to take over control of the port, one of the economic pillars of the British-protected South Arabian Federation.

In its report the Commission said the port should be free of Government control over both its day-to-day activities and its long-term development and finance. It added that the presence of British forces in the area made "a substantial contribution to the area's economy in many ways; stability and security from outside interference is ensured, which is basically essential for the continued prosperity of the port. The port should therefore fully co-operate with the Royal Navy and give whatever assistance it can to all three services."

The port of Aden has been a trust since 1889 and the Commission recommended its conversion into a port authority (which should in no way be regarded as a Government department), with members drawn from the Government and users of the port. It also recommended modernization of the port to bring it into line with general conditions in other large ports—but said this should be carried out gradually in order not to disturb trade and commerce with the South Arabian Federation, the Eastern Aden Protectorate, and southern Yemen on which the future prosperity of the port depends.

BURMA

A. One-Party State Proclaimed: The Government promulgated on March 28 a law setting up a one-party State and confiscated the property and assets of the banned parties.

The sole party allowed is the Government-sponsored Burma Socialist Programme Party.

The new law, called the Law to Protect National Solidarity, said in a preamble that political parties and other organizations were working against the interests of the Burmese Union and solidarity.

A Revolutionary Council announcement said: "The Government has formed a Burmese way to socialism, i.e., a one-party system of government along the lines of Nasser's UAR and Tito's Yugoslavia".

The major parties thus outlawed were the Pyidaungsu of the deposed Premier, U Nu, the Anti-Fascist People's Freedom League, many of the leaders of which are in detention, and the Leftist National United Front.

On April 2, the Government directed all organizations in the country, other than political organizations and their affiliates, to apply for registration to the authorities by April 30.

The directive said that organizations formed strictly for the purpose of carrying on religious activities did not come under the purview of the Law.

It, however, added: "As it is necessary to prevent the use of religious name or religious reason for carrying on other activities, all such organizations also must register themselves with the Government."

B. Control Of Libraries: The registration of libraries, required by the Control of Libraries, Museums and Exhibitions Law, promulgated on February 5 (see page 5783) has been enforced.

It is estimated that there are more than 700 reading rooms and public libraries, including those run by the British Council and the United States Information Service, in Rangoon and Mandalay. With the exception of the few libraries maintained by municipalities in principal towns, the remaining are just reading rooms organized and maintained by groups of private individuals. At one time there were no fewer than 2,000 such reading rooms, mostly housed on encroached public or Government lands. In 1958, with the clearance of encroachments of roadside areas, most of them disappeared.

In promulgating the control law, the Government announcement said that it was the duty of the Government to promote the educational and cultural standards and patriotic spirit of all citizens in line with the Revolutionary Council's programme and policy. There had been no knowing how many libraries and reading rooms were functioning in Burma under the sponsorship of foreign organizations, what reading matter was being kept in these libraries, how many showrooms and exhibitions were being organized by foreign agencies, and in what kind of activities the so-called cultural groups were engaged.

C. Take-over Of Timber Shops: The Government extended its policy of nationalizing private shops to yet another sector on March 25 when it nationalized the timber shops in Rangoon.

An official announcement said: "The capitalists, who own these shops, are enjoying monopoly in hardwood trade and are selling at exorbitant profits."

There are about 300 timber shops in Rangoon city.

It said that checking of stocks and accounts of these nationalized shops by Army personnel, who had been posted to guard them, was in progress.

[The Revolutionary Government had nationalized on March 19 all privately-owned shops, warehouses and brokers establishments—excepting small retail shops in Rangoon city.]

D. Minister Relieved Of Post: It was officially announced in Rangoon on April 2 that Col. Chit Myaing had ceased to be a member of the Burmese Revolutionary Council as also the Minister for Trade Development.

Brigadier Tin Pe has taken over the portfolio for Trade Development.

CAMBODIA

A. Chinese Offer Of Help: The Cambodian Press Agency reported on April 7 that China had promised to come to Cambodia's help in case it was attacked.

The Agency said this assurance was given by the party leader, Mr. Mao Tse-tung, when he received a Cambodian military delegation headed by Gen. Lon Nol, the Defence Minister.

It quoted Mr. Mao as saying: "I admire the attitude of Cambodia in cutting off imperialist United States aid and in preparing to face the imperialist reactions in all forms."

CEYLON

A. Emigration Inducement Scheme: The Department of Immigration and Emigration has announced details of the "inducement" scheme under which persons of Indian origin who would be willing to leave Ceylon for good will be paid ex-gratia payment not exceeding Rs. 1,000 per family.

The announcement, which applies mainly to plantation workers, who applied for Ceylon citizenship but failed to obtain it, was made in the form of advertisement in a Tamil daily in Colombo.

Though the idea of inducement was raised at the time of the Nehru-Kotelawala Agreement in October, 1954, this was the first time the Government had taken definite action on it. It has provided Rs. 5,00,000 for the purpose in the current year.

Offer of payment will apply to: (1) those who had applied for Ceylon citizenship under the Indian and Pakistani Citizenship Act and had failed to obtain it; (2) those who registered themselves as Indian citizens at the Indian High Commission in Ceylon; (3) those who were in employment in Ceylon on October 10, 1954 (date of Agreement); and (4) those whose assets had to be taken out of Ceylon did not exceed Rs. 5,000.

Wives of married persons applying for this concession should also have registered themselves as Indian citizens and their minor children should also be taken with them.

The amount of payment offered for every such individual ranges from Rs. 100 to those of 55 years and above and Rs. 400 to those below 45.

Those between the ages of 50 and 54 will get Rs. 250 and those between 45 and 49, Rs. 350.

The amount payable to wives and up to three children will be at the rate of Rs. 150 per head. Thus a person above 55 with wife and three or more children will be entitled to a maximum of Rs. 700. A person below 45 with wife and three or more children will be entitled to Rs. 1,000.

CHINA

A. Sino-Indian Border Conflict—Russian View: The report by the Secretary of the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee, Mr. Mikhail Suslov, to its plenary meeting held in Moscow on February 14 contained severe criticism of China in respect of her border conflict with India. [An account of other points contained in Mr. Suslov's report appeared on page 5784 under CHINA].

The report said: "It is a fact that when the Caribbean crisis was at its height, the Chinese Government extended armed conflict on the Sino-Indian frontier.

"No matter how the Chinese leaders try belatedly to justify their behaviour at that moment, they cannot escape the responsibility of the fact that by their actions they essentially helped extreme reactionary circles of imperialism, thereby aggravating an already complicated and dangerous situation in the world".

On the genesis of the Sino-Indian conflict arose over the possession of frontier territories in the Himalayas which had not been disputed either by China or India in the course of many centuries.

"However, inasmuch as this problem arose, everything should have been done to settle it peacefully by negotiation. The Soviet Government has repeatedly advocated such a settlement of this frontier dispute.

"Hostilities broke in the region of the Himalayas. The pernicious consequences of this conflict have now manifested themselves fully. It has rendered a great service to imperialism and inflicted grave harm to the national liberation movement, the progressive forces of India and the entire front of anti-imperialist struggle. Utilizing the Sino-Indian conflict for their own purposes, the imperialists and their supporters are seeking to undermine the trust of the people, of young nations, of States in socialist countries, draw India into military blocs and strengthen the positions of extreme reaction in the country.

"Can any one believe that a rapprochement with Pakistan has been dictated by interests of development of the revolutionary struggle of the peoples of Asia against imperialism that the Chinese leaders talk so much about?"

In a sarcastic reference to Mr. Chou En-lai's visit to Africa where he had made a complete volte face, the report said the "Chinese leaders felt that they had gone too far and in order to extricate themselves from this situation they made a complete volte face in their propaganda. Lately, a stream of "peace-loving statements suddenly gushed from Peking while representatives of the Chinese Government hasten to sign documents concerning the struggle for peace and fidelity to a policy of peaceful co-existence. Such was the vein of many of the statements made by Mr. Chou during his tour of Africa and Asia".

The report said the Chinese leaders were "saying plainly in Peking only yesterday" that a "world war cannot be averted".

"Today they are trying to persuade people to believe that the thesis on averting of war was put forward by none other than the leaders of the Chinese Communist Party. Yesterday they abused peaceful co-existence; today they are posing as practically its only and most zealous supporters.

"Yesterday they declared that disarmament was a deception of peoples; today they sign statements in which they undertake to work for disarmament.

"This volte face could only be welcomed if there had been signs that the Chinese Communist Party leadership really perceives its mistakes and is taking a correct stand. Regretfully everything points to the fact that the aims and objectives of the Chinese leaders have not changed".

The report warned those who might fall for Chinese falsehoods and said: "Their 'love of peace' is nothing but an ostentatious screen masking their real intentions which have received a rebuff and been censured by world public opinion. One cannot fail to see that the 'love of peace' emanating from Peking is in glaring contrast to actual deeds, to the concrete policy of the Chinese Government."

The report said Chinese leaders had stooped to tactics of blackmail and lies to further their "Great Power egotistical interests". It was being done as a "blind arrogance of Chinese leaders who wanted to order others about and to impose their will on other countries and parties."

The report added that the Chinese leaders were using racist tactics and slogans like "East winds will triumph over West winds" to exploit the feelings of some Asian and African peoples against the white people who exploited and ruled them. They were doing it for Chinese hegemonic aspirations.

Kashmir Premier, was released on April 8 from Jammu jail after the court had acquitted him and his 14 colleagues of the charges of conspiracy on a petition by the State.

Thus, the "conspiracy trial," which had been dragging on for the past 5½ years, ended after Additional Sessions Judge M. K. Tikoo had accepted a petition by the State's Advocate-General for withdrawing the case "in the best interests of the State."

Sheikh Abdullah, who was dismissed as Premier and arrested on August 9, 1953, spent 10 years and five months in detention. He was released unconditionally on January 8, 1958, but re-arrested after about three months.

Before the court adjourned, the judge permitted the defence and the prosecution to make brief statements.

This provided Mirza Afzal Beg, a former Revenue Minister, with an opportunity to make a public statement after his detention. Speaking on behalf of Sheikh Abdullah and others, Mr. Afzal Beg said: "We are stepping out of prison to what is called the world of freedom. We have been out of touch and shut out from the world of reality for 11 years. I hope that the withdrawal of the case will be a first step towards a greater goal of giving the subcontinent...." Here he was interrupted by the judge who told him not to make any observations of a political nature inside the court premises.

He agreed and continued his speech. He said this would be a step towards "ushering in a happier, nobler and peaceful Kashmir with a place of honour it deserves."

He said that the Kashmir issue was not difficult of solution and if an effort was made to solve it, "we will not be found lacking in sincere co-operation. Our trial has ended. The real trial has begun." He did not elaborate.

The Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, informed the Lok Sabha on April 1 that the Jammu and Kashmir Government had on its own decided to release unconditionally Sheikh Abdullah and others from detention.

Mr. Shastri, who was replying to a call-attention notice by Mr. Jaswant Mehta (P-SP), caused some surprise in the House when he said that the Government of India had been taken by surprise by the announcement of release by the Jammu and Kashmir Premier, Mr. G. M. Sadiq. They had not known that a decision had been taken.

The House greeted the announcement with mixed feelings, Jan Sangh members and some Independents crying 'shame, shame' and Swatantra and P-SP members shouting "hear, hear."

Self-determination Not Exercised By Kashmiris—Sheikh Abdullah's Allegation:

Addressing a public meeting in Jammu on April 9, Sheikh Abdullah said that Kashmiris had not exercised their right of self-determination.

He said that India did not deny the Kashmiris' right of self-determination. But India had declared that this right had been exercised by the people through the Constituent Assembly and the elections held in the State from time to time.

"We differ with this," he said, adding: "Elections have been held in the State but all opposition parties, including the Jan Sangh and Socialists have described them as fake." Even Parliament, he said, had expressed its resentment at the way these elections had been held.

He said he was not convinced that this right of self-determination had been exercised by the people of Kashmir and added: "I am prepared to be convinced of this."

He expressed the desire that the two major issues—communal strife and the future of Kashmir—that confronted the people today, should be settled during Mr. Nehru's lifetime. "We must bury communal strife once for all. This is important if India is to live. It is also possible to settle the Kashmir issue when Mr. Nehru is amongst us."

He said the Kahmir issue could not be settled through force or compulsion. "We have to win hearts and if we fail in this regard we cannot rule by force. Britain ruled us with force. Because it failed to win our hearts it had to depart from India. One can rule by force for some time and not for all time."

He asked his audience to remember how this State had been ruled during the last 11 years. "We stand where we were on August 9, 1953 (when Sheikh Abdullah was dismissed as Premier and arrested). Our disputes continue and our problems remain despite our declarations to the world to the contrary."

He said the Kashmir issue could be settled only through love, honesty and patience.

Sheikh Abdullah's News Conference:

At a news conference on April 9, Sheikh Abdullah said that he needed to test his ideas against the experience of those who had a comprehension of changes in the world situation, and nobody had a greater comprehension of these than Mr. Nehru.

During his remarks on the need for a dispute between India and Pakistan, he made a number of important points:

(1) The only alternative—a clash of arms between the two countries—would be suicidal, especially for Kashmir because "bombs will fall here, not in Madras or Karachi".

(2) He emphasized that most of the great Indian leaders had departed one by one. Mr. Nehru alone was left who was big enough to attempt a peaceful solution and he was in failing health. It was essential that a settlement should be reached during his lifetime or else it might become doubly difficult.

(3) He argued that apart from other irritants, the continuance of the Kashmir dispute was a source of bitterness which lay at the root of every communal conflagration which threatened to destroy both countries.

He said that the people of Kashmir were the direct sufferers as a result of the uncertainty which had not disappeared by slogan-shouting.

He regretted that some people in Jammu and Kashmir had mortgaged their thinking to India, and some others to Pakistan. Both were wrong. While Kashmir could not exist in isolation from the subcontinent, any suggestion coming from either India or Pakistan should be judged entirely by the criterion whether it served the poor and hungry people of Kashmir or not.

Both Sheikh Abdullah and Mr. Afzal Beg spoke at length on the conspiracy case and effectively ridiculed the charges proffered against them as well as the tactics of the previous Kashmir Government to harass them and their families.

Sheikh Abdullah also cleared himself of the charge that he had anything to do with Mr. Shyama Prasad Mookerjee's death in a Kashmir jail a decade ago. He clearly implied that the question might be directed to the man who was then Home Minister.

Referring to the charge against him that he was a Pakistani agent, he declared: "I am neither a Pakistani agent nor an Indian agent. I am a servant of the people of Jammu and Kashmir, the area where God gave me birth."

He prefaced his remarks by the declaration that although he had been out of touch with events for 11 years, he felt called upon to answer the question which was understandably uppermost in the minds of his audience. "I have been acquitted by the court, but I am facing the bigger and more important court—the court of the people, the final arbiters. I am grateful for your welcome and affection but I want to make sure that you consider me as innocent."

He told a questioner that fair and free elections could be a possible mode of ascertaining the people's wishes, provided the people were confident that their views were recorded correctly; in reply to another question he added that any fair method of determining popular wishes would do.

A correspondent asked Sheikh Abdullah if as a person with an open mind he would accept Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's invitation to Pakistan to discuss Kashmir with President Ayub Khan. The Sheikh replied that he would say nothing on the subject, because it might come up during his discussions with Mr. Nehru.

Another important question put was whether in any settlement of Kashmir he considered the Kashmir Valley, Jammu and "Azad Kashmir" as indivisible or whether these areas could be divided. He replied that he would never countenance a solution which would sacrifice the right of Jammu for the sake of Kashmir or vice versa.

He told a questioner that the atmosphere in Jammu and Kashmir now was much better than at the time of his last release six years ago, but he would not comment on the Sadiq Government.

He said that it might have been possible for him to go to Delhi immediately to meet Mr. Nehru had the Prime Minister's letter been delivered in time. Surprisingly, Mr. Nehru's letter, dated April 2, had reached him only on April 7, by which time he had made arrangements to go to the Valley.

He made a prepared statement stressing his need for time to think things over before speaking.

In this statement he said, however: "After more than 10 years of my enforced absence from public life our problems in this part of the world remain basically the same. Indeed, they have intensified. Yet I am convinced that a breakthrough will come."

Later, discussing the possibility of a negotiated settlement between India and Pakistan, he said it would involve give and take. Neither party should have a sense of defeat.

There had been great changes during his imprisonment, some of them "in the right direction" and some others which "have put us back and distressed all".

He added that Mr. Nehru had a clearer idea of changes in the world situation and could therefore give him a wider perspective. "For me," he said, "as one trial ends another, a far bigger one, begins. I feel encouraged by the trend towards a friendlier atmosphere."

Asked how long he would take to make up his mind about an appropriate solution of the Kashmir problem, he said: "Obviously not years." But he could not say exactly how long.

Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's Comment:

The Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri on April 11 cautioned Sheikh Abdullah against giving unbridled expression to his views which would complicate the Kashmir problem internally and internationally.

"There is, of course, complete freedom of expression," he said, intervening in the Lok Sabha debate on the demands for grants of the External Affairs Ministry, "but there can be no freedom for preaching some kind of independence or secession from the Indian Union."

No Government could allow that kind of propaganda, he declared amid cheers and added: "I hope the Sheikh will not create further complications."

He assured the House that the Government was not frightened of any situation that might arise and was strong enough to deal with it.

His declaration, which came towards the end of his 45-minute speech, set at rest the misgivings that had been growing over Sheikh Abdullah's speeches.

"I must admit," he said, "that I am surprised that he should have made such categorical statements in regard to various matters.

"What has pained me most is that he (Sheikh Abdullah), without meeting others or getting in touch with various people, should have expressed views which are very controversial.

"It clearly shows that he has not fully assessed and understood the situation in the country. If he had come here, as he wanted to, he would have got a feel of the situation. I do not want to say anything which might add to the difficulties.

"I still feel that Sheikh Abdullah should carefully express his views on important matters which are closely connected with Kashmir as well as India."

The Security Council was meeting on May 5. He hoped the Sheikh would not create further complications, Mr. Chagla had made it clear to UN that Kashmir's accession to India was irrevocable.

The decision to release Sheikh Abdullah was correct. "It is not that we did not know the risks involved in it. The Prime Minister himself had described it as a calculated risk. We knew that the Sheikh holds certain views."

Mr. M. C. Chagla's Criticism:

The Central Education Minister, Mr. M. C. Chagla, said in Patna on April 12 that the "law will take its own course if Sheikh Abdullah does not maintain his loyalty to the Constitution and the country of which Kashmir is an integral part."

He told a news conference: "We have done the right thing in releasing Sheikh Abdullah and are prepared to discuss with him anything in the context of Kashmir's irrevocable accession to India."

He said that though the Constitution gave a great deal of freedom to a citizen, "there is no freedom to preach secession or sedition."

Certain views expressed by the Sheikh, he stated, had caused concern among the people. He expressed the hope that these views were only tentative and that Sheikh Abdullah would revise them after his meeting with Mr. Nehru.

He asked Sheikh Abdullah to realise that the "peace and security of Kashmir would be best guarded by its remaining in India." Kashmir was "a symbol and guarantee of secularism of India."

Despite propaganda to the contrary, the release of the Sheikh by Mr. G. M. Sadiq as Premier of a democratically constituted Government had amply proved that there was peace and security in that part of the country.

He said the release of Sheikh Abdullah no doubt marked a shift in Kashmir affairs; so had Mr. Sadiq's coming into power. But this did not amount to any change in India's basic policy in relation to Jammu and Kashmir.

Replying to a question, he said a confederation of India and Pakistan appeared at present to be a difficult proposition. "But some day in future, when men are wiser, when passions cool down and statesmanship prevails, there is bound to be some sort of a confederation in this part of the world". Ultimately "the entire world will have to function as a family if it is to survive."

He considered the "hate India" campaign launched by Pakistan as a great hurdle in the way of closer relations between the two countries.

A newsman asked: "Now that Sheikh Abdullah is released do you foresee any change in the attitude of the UK and the USA over the Kashmir issue?"

Mr. Chagla replied: "I cannot say about the UK but there might be a change in the attitude of the USA because it had pointed out to us that Sheikh Abdullah's continued detention was weakening our case."

Asked if he thought that the US Assistant Secretary of State for Asian affairs, Mr. Phillips Talbot had a hand in the release of Sheikh Abdullah, Mr. Chagla's reply was an emphatic "no". He said: "No, no, Mr. Talbot was nowhere in the picture. He had nothing to do with the release. The decision was Mr. Sadiq's own."

Sheikh Abdullah's Rejoinder:

In a sharp rejoinder to Mr. M. C. Chagla in Doda on April 13, Sheikh Abdullah said that the Indian Constitution recognized the provisional character of Kashmir's accession.

By questioning the finality of accession he was not guilty of violating the Constitution of which he was one of the founding fathers.

Describing Mr. Chagla's interpretation of the Constitution as defective, he said Article 370 only confirmed his statement that Kashmir had acceded only in respect of Defence, External Affairs and Communications and had not surrendered residuary sovereignty to the Centre. Kasnmir had its own Constitution unlike other States and the State's accession would become final only when people had decided so after a plebiscite.

Being a signatory to the Constitution, he said, his understanding of its provisions was perhaps better than Mr. Chagla's. He maintained that the condition of plebiscite was attached by India and repeated by Indian representatives in the Security Council.

It was a strange way to interpret the Constitution by threatening action against him and his colleagues for stating the truth. A strange type of democracy, he said, was being projected by India which denied people their fundamental rights.

He said he still failed to understand under what provision of the State's Constitution had the Sadar-i-Riyasat dismissed him in 1953. The democratic way was to move a no-confidence motion against him, but India instead chose to set up a puppet regime under Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed with the help of bayonets.

He reminded Mr. Chagla that to preserve the prestige of democracy and the sanctity of the Constitution he should desist from making such statements. He emphasized that plebiscite did not mean that the State should join Pakistan or India or remain independent.

The solution of the problem, he said, was possible only when leaders of Kashmir as well as 'Azad Kashmir' sat together because the same must apply to Kashmiris in areas under Pakistan's occupation.

B. Mr. Jigme Dorji Assassinated: Bhutan's Prime Minister, Mr. Jigme Dorji, was shot dead by an assassin on April 5.

He was shot in his back through a window at the dak bungalow in Phuntsoling where he was staying with his wife and younger brother. The town is on the Bhutan-India border.

The shooting took place soon after Mr. Dorji had returned after seeing off the Indian Political Officer, Mr. Avtar Singh, at Samchi, a town near the West Bengal border. Mr. Avtar Singh had paid a courtesy call on Mr. Dorji.

According to details available, Mr. Dorji, after seeing off Mr. Singh, was joined by his wife who had earlier returned from Calcutta. They went to Phuntsoling.

The assailant fired one bullet and Mr. Dorji was wounded. He died two hours later.

Mr. Avtar Singh had sought the immediate despatch of a medical team from India, but before its arrival Mr. Dorji died.

The assailant escaped.

The offices of the Indian Political Officer at Gangtok remained closed on April 6 as a mark of respect to the memory of Mr. Dorji.

Mr. Dorji, who was 45, was well known in Calcutta as "Jigme". He was of an extremely amiable nature and was easily approachable to the common man.

In December, 1963 at a news conference at Gangtok he had expressed his sincere appreciation of India's aid to Bhutan for her development.

Mr. Avtar Singh, who reached Gangtok on April 5, said: "India has lost an extremely good friend in the death of Mr. Dorji. I am very much stunned by this tragic occurrence. This morning when I left I found Mr. Dorji hale and hearty. I offer my condolences to Mrs. Dorji and members of the bereaved family".

Arrests:

It was announced on April 14 that 41 persons had been arrested on suspicion of complicity in the assassination of Mr. Jigme Dorji.

Mr. Avtar Singh, India's Political Officer in Sikkim and Bhutan, now at Thimpu, told newsmen at Gangtok, linked by radio-telephone, that among those arrested were Brig. Namgyal Bahadur, Deputy Commander-in-Chief of the Bhutan Army, and Mr. Tasho Pafho, retired Quarter Master General.

Lt-Col. Thangpi, at present Chief of the General Staff, Bhutan Army, had taken over the duties of Deputy Commander-in-Chief.

Lt.-Col. Thangpi supervised the arrests of 17 officers, three non-commissioned officers and 18 other ranks at the Bhutan Army Training Centre, about seven miles from Thimpu. One Lama was also arrested.

Chinese Implication In Murder:

The alleged assassin of Mr. Jigme Dorji is a Chinese accomplice, a Government of India official indicated to newsmen in New Delhi on April 15.

While declining to spell out more details at present, as the case is sub judice, the official explained that the Bhutanese investigators had gathered evidence to show the connexions the assassin (Jambey Dukpa) had with Peking agents.

Jambey himself gave all details of the plot and his Chinese connexions in a remorseful confessional statement directly to the Bhutan Maharaja.

About the first thing the Maharaja did on his arrival at the border town of Phuntsoling was to summon Jambey for direct questioning. At this meeting, Jambey laid bare the entire plot which, had it succeeded, would be a virtual coup d'etat plunging the Himalayan Kingdom in a bloodbath of unprecedented magnitude.

At Bhutan's request, the Government of India has deputed a few expert crime investigators from Calcutta and New Delhi to assist Bhutanese officials. It was disclosed that the Indian and the Bhutanese Governments were alarmed about the stability of the Kingdom following disclosures by Jambey of the well-laid-out plot of the Chinese-backed conspirators.

The counteraction by the Maharaja's loyal officials and armed contingents had to be carefully planned and kept a guarded secret till it was executed. The arrest of Bhutan's small but well-trained and modernized Army's Deputy Commander-in-Chief and the Quarter Master General along with 39 officers and men was carried out with utmost skill and precision.

Reports from Bhutan have shown that the critical phase of the turmoil is over. Nearly 2,000 army-trainees who were at Thimpu, the royal capital, under direct command of the Deputy C-in-C have been disarmed. The Maharaja's loyal forces were now in complete command of the situation.

Mr. Avtar Singh, India's Political Officer in Bhutan and Sikkim went to Thimpu about a week earlier, ahead of the Maharaja's return from Europe. He has since been in closest touch with the Maharaja.

On instructions from New Delhi, Mr. Avtar Singh was understood to have assured the Maharaja of India's fullest support to him and its readiness to rush whatever help was needed. (New Delhi is on wireless contact with Thimpu via Gangtok, the Sikkim capital.)

C. Mr. Mahavir Tyagi Appointed Central Rehabilitation Minister: Mr. Mahavir Tyagi, a senior member of the Congress was appointed on April 14 as Minister for Rehabilitation in the Central Cabinet.

He was Minister for Defence Organizations till 1956. He has now been given full Cabinet rank.

The decision to separate Rehabilitation from Works and Housing and raise it to a regular Cabinet portfolio suggests the Government's awareness of the enormity of the rehabilitation problem on the one hand and recognition of Mr. Tyagi's standing in the party on the other.

On April 13, while replying to the Lok Sabha debate on grants to the External Affairs Ministry, the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru had indicated that a "special" Ministry for Rehabilitation would be created soon.

The decision to set up a separate Ministry was actually taken nearly a week earlier. Mr. Mehr Chand Khanna, Minister for Works, Housing and Rehabilitation, had submitted to Mr. Nehru that the current exodus from East Pakistan had created a situation with which a truncated department of Rehabilitation could not cope. He had pointed out that rehabilitation once again was a task for a separate Ministry.

The decision to create a separate Ministry to deal with the refugee problem was, however, not announced earlier in view of the Indo-Pakistan Home Ministers' talks in New Delhi.

Mr. Tyagi is a front-bench member of the Lok Sabha and a prominent member of the Congress Parliamentary Party Executive. He is a speaker of some note and usually expresses himself in a blunt and forthright manner.

During his previous term in the Government he was Minister of State for Revenue and Expenditure, and later became head of Defence Organizations while Mr. Nehru held the Defence portfolio.

D. Pakistan Guilty Of Violating Cease-fire Agreement In Jammu And Kashmir—UN Observers' Verdict: The United Nations observers' team in Jammu and Kashmir has held Pakistan guilty of violation of the Cease-fire Agreement in connexion with the Karen incident of February 21.

The Government of India and Pakistan have been informed of this verdict. India is expected to address a communication to the President of the Security Council drawing his attention to the fact that this is one more instance of Pakistan's provocative activities in Kashmir in defiance of the Cease-fire Agreement.

At Karen, about 40 miles from Baramulla, an Indian police party on routine patrol duty was ambushed by troops from Pakistan-occupied Kashmir.

There was also heavy firing from across the Kishenganga river which forms the cease-fire line in this region. The UN observers have blamed Pakistan for this too.

Karen is in the Chaknot region where Pakistan had concentrated troops a few months earlier. The UN team's finding then also was that Pakistan had violated the Cease-fire Agreement.

E. Pakistani Violations Of Air-space—Mr. Y. B. Chavan's Statement In Lok Sabha: The Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, informed the Lok Sabha on April 13 that the Indian Air Force had been instructed to keep fighter planes always ready to chase any foreign aircraft violating Indian air-space.

He disclosed that Pakistani jet aircraft had violated Indian air-space over Jammu and Kashmir twice, on April 9 and again on April 11. In one case, the plane penetrated 30 nautical miles into Indian territory. These planes were on a reconnaissance flight and had presumably taken photographs.

His statement led to several angry questions. Opposition members were greatly agitated over the frequent air violations and made a searing attack on the Government for its "failure" to shoot down the intruding planes.

Giving details of the two violations, Mr. Chavan said that on April 9 a twin-engined jet aircraft was observed over Udhampur. It flew at a height of 32,500 feet and at a speed of 300 knots an hour. It penetrated 30 nautical miles. On the same day, another single-engined Pakistani jet aircraft was seen flying over Jammu. The aircraft climbed from 7,000 feet to 30,000 feet.

On April 11, another twin-engined jet reconnaisance aircraft flew over Jammu area at 09-24 hours. The aircraft which penetrated two to three miles into Indian territory was flying at a height of 10,000 to 15,000 feet and at a speed of 350 knots and hour.

Immediately after this plane was sighted, IAF fighters were directed to chase it. The hostile aircraft withdrew into Pakistani territory.

Mr. Chavan also referred to reports regarding flights by unidentified aircraft over Jammu on April 12 and said they belonged to the Indian Air Force.

F. Democratic Decentralization In N-EFA: The Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, announced in the Lok Sabha on April 11 the Government's intention to introduce democratic decentralization in N-EFA.

The Governor of Assam would announce the personnel and terms of reference of a committee that would be set up for drawing up a scheme in that regard.

Mr. Shastri added that administrative posts now covered all the areas in N-EFA which had been vacated by the Chinese.

Mr. Shastri, who was intervening in the debate on the demands for grants of the External Affairs Ministry, also referred to the impending talks for the restoration of peace in Nagaland.

At a convention of non-official Nagas, the names of Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan, Mr. Shankarrao Deo, Mr. B. P. Chaliha and Rev. Michael Scott had been suggested to hold discussions with the hostile elements. Mr. Chaliha and Mr. Narayan had agreed to the proposal. The Rev. Scott was already in Nagaland and was willing to participate in the negotiations. Mr. Deo was indisposed.

It had been made clear that the participants in the discussions would keep in mind the present set-up of Nagaland. There could be no demand for anything like independence for Nagaland. The Rev. Scott had agreed to this position.

G. Communal Disturbances—Indo-Pakistan Home Ministers' Conference: The Indo-Pakistan Home Ministers' conference opened in New Delhi on April 7 and the two delegations pledged themselves in general terms to eradicate the evil of communal hatred and violence from the two countries.

The Home Minister of India, Mr. Gulzarilal Nanda, spoke with great feeling—and without rancour or recrimination—about the imperative need for communal harmony; and the Pakistan Home Minister, Khan Habibullah Khan, responded with a touching reference to Mahatma Gandhi's struggle for the freedom of the sub-continent.

While Mr. Nanda pleaded eloquently for steps to create conditions of security and confidence among the minorities, the Pakistani leader's main theme was that the so-called eviction of Muslims from Assam, Tripura and West Bengal should be stopped before any purposeful measures could be taken to restore communal peace in the two countries.

Among the suggestions made by Mr. Nanda was a proposal for a joint appeal by the two Home Ministers for communal harmony in the sub-continent. A draft of the proposed joint appeal was handed over at the afternoon session to the Pakistan Home Minister who promised to study it carefully and give a reply at a later stage of the conference.

Mr. Nanda also suggested that they should try to revive the spirit of the Nehru-Liaqat Agreement of 1950 and re-establish friendly and good-neighbourly relations between the two countries on the basis of complete equality of citizenship and a full sense of security in respect of life, culture, property and personal honour for the minorities.

The two Home Ministers agreed to conduct their discussions, through two committees of their advisers, under three heads:

(1) Question of restoring communal harmony and establishing conditions of security and confidence for the minorities in each country;

(2) Migration and movement of refugees from one country to the other; and

(3) Question of eviction of Indian Muslims, according to Pakistan; of illegal infiltration from Pakistan, according to India.

The Indian team on the first committee dealing with the question of restoring communal harmony was headed by Mr. L. P. Singh, Special Secretary in the Home Ministry. The other committee, which was entrusted with the second and third items on the agenda, had the Home Secretary, Mr. V. Viswanathan, and the Commonwealth Secretary, Mr. C. S. Jha, on it.

It was agreed that the two Home Ministers would make detailed statements on the minorities problem as they saw it and thereafter the two delegations would decide how best to process and regroup the proposals put forward by them for discussion during the conference.

Mr. Nanda made the following suggestions for restoring communal harmony in the two countries.

(1) Proposals for security:

(A) Issue of joint appeal by the two Home Ministers to maintain communal harmony and peace.

(B) Periodic meetings of representatives of India and Pakistan at agreed places to discuss the question of promoting and furthering communal harmony, to bring to each other's notice any deviation from the objectives agreed upon by both sides, and to review the working or agreements concluded by India and Pakistan.

(C) Joint machinery to tour different areas in the two countries periodically and report on the implementation of measures agreed upon at this conference.

(D) Minorities Commissions as contemplated under the Nehru-Liaqat pact to be revived.

(2) Adequate administrative arrangements to ensure full protection to minorities in the two countries:

(A) To impress upon the officials concerned that it is their foremost duty to look after the security of the minorities.

(B) Immediate steps and effective measures to be taken to prevent a breach of the peace.

(C) Adequate force at every point where there is apprehension of communal trouble.

(D) Slackness or failure on the part of officials to be dealt with severely.

(E) Severe punishment to be meted out to miscreants through courts.

(F) Recovery of looted property.

(3) Representatives of minorities to be associated with agencies for the recovery of abducted women.

(4) Exercise of restraint by the Press in both countries in dealing with news of communal disturbances, and free circulation of each other's newspapers in either country.

(5) Proper rehabilitation of members of minority communities affected or displaced by riots.

Mr. Nanda stressed that the primary task of the two Governments should be the creation of conditions of security and confidence so that many of the intending migrants might change their minds and stay on in their respective places of origin. But he insisted that if some of them still wanted to leave, they should be permitted to sell their immovable property and take away their cash, jewellery and other personal effects with them. They should also be assured of full protection during transit.

He mentioned some long-range ideas, such as the utilization of media of mass communication to promote communal harmony, exchange of cultural delegations, joint celebration of important festivals of all communities, observance of communal harmony weeks or days, and the appointment of citizens peace committees in the two countries.

Khan Habibullah Khan agreed with many of the suggestions made by Mr. Nanda, but he harped on the familiar Pakistani theme that until the so-called eviction of Muslims from Assam, Tripura and West Bengal stopped, it would not be possible to restore communal peace in the two countries. Mr. Nanda did not mention even once in his speech the question of illegal infiltration from East Pakistan, which the Pakistani delegation insisted on calling "the question of eviction of Indian Muslims."

No Agreement Reached—Joint Communique:

The conference ended on April 11 with no agreement whatsoever on the issue of evictions and migration of minorities, but with a broad understanding that the two countries should take all possible steps to maintain communal peace in the subcontinent.

The two Home Ministers agreed to meet again in Karachi or Rawalpindi in the near future to continue their discussions. The date of the next meeting will be settled soon.

A joint communique issued at the conclusion of the conference stated simply that the two delegations were in "full agreement" over the necessity of promoting communal harmony and creating a sense of security and confidence among the minorities.

But it did not spell out the points of agreement reached for this purpose. Though the two Home Ministers were agreed on the administrative measures necessary to ensure full protection to the minorities and the need to mete out deterrent punishment to the miscreants, they could not reach any agreement on the corresponding political steps proposed by India for the maintenance of communal peace.

Mr. Gulzarilal Nanda had suggested a joint appeal for communal harmony, joint tours of the affected areas, joint machinery to supervise and report periodically on the implementation of the agreements reached, and the appointment of minorities commissions in the two countries. The Pakistan Home Minister, Khan Habibullah Khan, did not formally reject these suggestions, but he showed little interest in them.

On the question of evictions, there was no progress at all. Pakistan stuck stubbornly to her fantastic theme that a great majority of illegal infiltrators evicted by India were really Indian citizens. India emphatically repudiated this mischievous allegation with a detailed explanation of the administrative and judicial procedures laid down for screening Pakistani infiltrators in Assam, Tripura and West Bengal.

While rejecting the Pakistani proposal for an international tribunal to investigate these evictions, India had offered to suspend the service of quit notices and deportation of infiltrators for two months to give Pakistan time to study Indian judicial procedures and satisfy herself that there were adequate safeguards against an Indian Muslim being mistaken for an illegal Pakistani infiltrator. The offer was made with a view to getting a quick agreement, if possible, on the other aspects of the communal problem which called for immediate action.

The offer did not imply any unilateral commitment on India's part to suspend the evictions for two months whether there was agreement or not on the other issues before the conference. It was, therefore, made perfectly clear to the Pakistani delegation that the process of investigation to locate illegal infiltrators would go on even during this period.

But the Pakistani delegation argued that before a suspected illegal infiltrator was adjudged a Pakistani national, Pakistan had a right to demand an impartial inquiry into the case under international law. Khan Habibullah Khan submitted a note on the subject to Mr. Nanda citing a number of precedents in support of the Pakistani demand for an international tribunal to investigate the very principle of these evictions.

He referred to the Czech-Hungarian exchange of population during 1946-47, the Turko-Greek Conventions of 1923 and 1926, and The Hague Court judgments in the Tunisia-Morocco nationality decrees case in 1949. In both these cases, Khan Habibullah Khan claimed, the World Court had observed that in international law disputed nationality was not a matter of domestic jurisdiction.

At the concluding session of the two Home Ministers, Mr. Nanda gave a written reply to the Pakistani note saying that these international precedents had no relevance to the steps being taken by India to evict illegal infiltrators from her territory. Apart from the question of sovereignty, it was pointed out, there was no legal basis of any kind for the international tribunal procedure suggested by Pakistan.

The following is the text of the joint communique:

"The Home Ministers of India and Pakistan, assisted by their advisers met in New Delhi from April 7 to April 11, 1964, and discussed the problems of minorities and communal harmony in India and Pakistan.

"During the course of his visit the Home Minister of Pakistan laid a wreath on the Samadhi of Mahatma Gandhi. He also took the opportunity of calling on the President of India, the Vice-President of India, the Prime Minister of India and the Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri.

"The discussions between the two delegations were held in a frank and cordial atmosphere and a free exchange of views took place.

"The Home Minister of Pakistan impressed upon the Home Minister of India the view that eviction of a large number of persons from Assam and Tripura and other Indian States had led to tensions and consequences thereof. The Home Minister of India, on the other hand, explained his Government's position regarding the problems relating to the migration of minority communities from Pakistan into India and the consequences arising therefrom.

"Efforts were made by the two delegations to arrive at a mutually satisfactory solution of these questions.

"The two delegations were in full agreement over the necessity of promoting urgently communal harmony between various communities in each country and the need to establish a sense of security and confidence in the minds of the minorities.

"The two delegations were agreed that the responsibility for the protection and wellbeing of the minority communities and the redress of their grievances lay with their respective Governments. They felt that there was imperative need to ensure that the minorities throughout their territories enjoyed complete equality of citizenship, irrespective of religion, a full sense of security in respect of life, culture, property and personal honour and all other rights which have been guaranteed to the citizens of each country under its Constitution.

"A number of proposals for the promotion of communal harmony, restoration of law and order in affected areas and for taking prompt and effective action against those responsible for crimes against the minority communities and the rehabilitation of the persons affected by the disturbances were considered. The two delegations re-affirmed their respective Government's determination to adopt all measures for the early attainment of these objectives.

"In view of the great importance of the issues involved and the complex nature of the problems, it was agreed that discussions between the two Home Ministers will be resumed at Karachi/Rawalpindi in the near future.

"The Home Ministers expressed their firm determination to take all measures to maintain communal peace in their respective countries and appealed for co-operation in preserving communal harmony."

Mr. G. L. Nanda's Statement In Parliament:

The Home Minister, Mr. Gulzarilal Nanda, placed before Parliament on April 13 the texts of the Indian and Pakistani proposals submitted at the Indo-Pakistan Conference for the restoration of communal peace in the sub-continent.

He said, "a measure of agreement" had been reached on the steps necessary for the restoration of communal harmony and creation of conditions of security and confidence for the minorities in the two countries. A fair measure of agreement had also been reached on the question of the facilities to be afforded to the refugees migrating from one country to another. But there was no agreement of any kind on the evictions issue.

Pakistan had proposed (a) an immediate suspension of further evictions, (b) the setting up of an international tribunal consisting of a Pakistani Supreme Court judge and an Indian judge of the same status and a mutually agreed impartial judge from another country to examine the general claim of the Indian Government that all the evictees deported from Assam, Tripura and elsewhere were Pakistani infiltrators; then a number of subsidiary tribunals each consisting of a Pakistani High Court judge and an Indian judge of the same status with a chairman from a third country should be set up to examine the cases of those who have already been evicted.

Mr. Nanda said that these Pakistani proposals were "totally unacceptable". He, however, offered to suspend the service of quit notices for two months to give Pakistan time to suggest modifications or improvements in the procedures "preceding the issue of quit notices."

This offer was made in the context of a larger agreement covering all aspects of the communal problem relating to the resolution of peaceful conditions and the provision of adequate facilities for the migration of refugees. But it was pointed out at the same time that the other legal processes for the location of the illegal Pakistani infiltrations and the deportation of those who were detected while crossing the frontier illegally into India or those who having come to India with valid passports were found to be overstaying after the expiry of their visas would continue even during this two-month period.

On the question of facilities for the migration of refugees, India merely invoked the Nehru-Liaqat pact of 1950 which provided for various measures to ensure complete freedom of movement for the intending migrants, adequate protection during transit and freedom from harassment by the Customs at the border checkposts, and permission to take away movable property, household effects, jewellery and cash up to Rs. 150 per adult migrant and Rs. 75 per child. But Pakistan repudiated the pact on the ground that it would make migration easier, leading eventually to a massive exchange of population.

H. West German Aid For Chemical Industry—Agreement Ended: An Agreement for West German technical aid to the Indian chemical industry has been terminated owing to the fall in world market prices for the products concerned and the changing requirements of the Indian chemical industry.

This was announced on April 13 on behalf of Bayer, Farbwerke Hoechst AG and Badische Anilin-und Soda-Fabrik, which signed the Agreement with the Indian Government in 1960.

The Agreement—which granted technical aid and 'know-how' to India for the manufacture of basic chemicals and intermediate products—has been "dissolved after talks by all sides."

"It is intended, however, that the aid so far granted should be available to India for the realization of a chemical project adapted to the new situation."

The three companies were prepared to continue talks with the Indian Government to see how they could advise further in the field of intermediate products and their related organic heavy chemicals.

I. Working Of Government Companies During 1962-63: The Central Government Audit Report, 1964 has said that the operations of the 46 Government companies and their two subsidiaries showed a loss of Rs. 12.38 crores during 1962-63 as against a loss of Rs. 10.60 crores in the previous year.

The increase in loss was attributed to a larger deficit of Rs. 23.91 crores during the year in the case of Hindustan Steel as against a loss of Rs. 19.47 crores in 1961-62.

The report was placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on April 13 by the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari. According to the report, an amount of Rs. 71.29 crores was recoverable by these companies from their customers. In the case of 29 companies a sum of Rs. 6.64 crores was outstanding for over a year.

The paid-up capital of these companies increased from Rs. 614.97 crores to Rs. 743.28 crores during the year. The loan taken by these companies rose from Rs. 459.41 crores to Rs. 526.77 crores.

After taking into account the free reserves, the total capital employed in these companies increased from Rs. 1,090.75 crores to Rs. 1,294.11 crores.

The report said that in addition to equity investment and the grant of loans, the Government had granted "interest holiday" on loans amounting to Rs. 357.19 crores in the case of Hindustan Steel up to March 31, 1962. The recovery so waived amounts to Rs. 39.71 crores.

Besides, it had granted moratorium for two years in respect of repayment of a loan of Rs. 3 crores to Indian Oil Company and a moratorium for two to three years in the case of a loan of Rs. 5.92 crores to the National Coal Development Corporation.

Apart from these concessions, subsidies had been granted to some companies to meet operational deficits, organizing fairs in foreign countries, maintenance of hospitals and industrial housing schemes. During 1962-63 six companies received subsidies aggregating Rs. 2.23 crores. The cumulative total of the subsidies paid by the Government up to March 31, 1963 was Rs. 12.01 crores.

Subsidies of Rs. 8.27 crores to Hindustan Shipyard and of Rs. 54,00,000 to the National Industrial Development Corporation were given for meeting deficits. The National Small Industries Corporation got a subsidy of Rs. 2.29 crores for promotional activities and in lieu of concessional rate of interest.

Another assistance was the guarantee of the Government to loans amounting to Rs. 29.79 crores raised by 13 companies.

According to the report, 34 of these companies showed a profit of Rs. 13.66 crores during the year before providing for taxation. Out of these, 11 companies declared dividends amounting to Rs. 1.54 crores, representing 6.4 per cent on their paid-up capital and 0.2 per cent on the total paid up capital of Rs. 743.28 crores of all Government companies.

The remaining 12 companies showed a loss of Rs. 31.04 crores, of which Rs. 29.28 crores was on account of Hindustan Steel, Heavy Electricals and Neyveli Lignite Corporation.

J. Export Trade In Sugar Taken Over By STC: The Government decided on April 6 that the State Trading Corporation (STC) should be solely in charge of all facets of export trade in sugar—from the conclusion of agreements to the actual export of the commodity.

The implication of this is that handling of sugar exports, which had hitherto been the job of the Indian Sugar Mills Association (ISMA), will be taken over by STC.

It is now, therefore, clear that the constitution of the Sugar Marketing Board, decided upon by the Government the previous week, will in no way alter STC's role as exporter of sugar. The Board will concern itself primarily with the regulation of internal distribution of the commodity.

Since ISMA has already made arrangements for the export of 1,00,000 tons of sugar, STC will fulfil the commitment for the rest of the 1,00,000 tons.

STC will soon start negotiations with Malaysia for the export of between 30,000 and 40,000 tons of sugar. At a later stage, the Corporation may negotiate for the export of 50,000 tons of sugar to Canada.

It was stated that STC's take-over of the entire responsibility for sugar exports would help build up permanent and bigger foreign markets in future when, through increased licensing of factories, more sugar will be available for export.

The Government has already decided to license an additional crushing capacity of 8,00,000 tons to ensure enough sugar next season.

Meanwhile, sugar production in the current season is likely to touch three million tons, against the revised official estimate of 2.7 million tons. The target, however, is 3.3 million tons.

JAPAN

A. Support To GATT Declaration: A Tokyo message said on April 2 that the Finance Ministry had instructed the country's representative in Geneva to sign the declaration of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) pledging to abolish subsidies for exports of secondary products.

The Ministry said it had become possible for Japan to support the declaration now that a special Bill revising the taxation system had been approved by the Diet.

The Bill abolishes the export income deduction system, which has been criticized by certain foreign countries as virtual subsidies for exports.

The Ministry said, however, that the Bill provided for the introduction of a reserve for market cultivation and other measures which would largely offset the loss of tax benefit caused by abolition of the export income deduction system. The Government was said to be convinced that the measures do not represent export subsidies.

MALDIVES

A. Attack On British Air Strip: The British air strip at Hulule, which was subject to an attack by "angry Maldivians" on the night of March 27, has been rendered inoperable.

Reports from Male, capital of Maldives, said that food parcels were being dropped at Hulule for the British Representative there with the aid of parachutes.

On April 4, the Maldivian Government Representative had reported "anti-British feeling developing to almost uncontrollable proportions among the Maldivian population."

Meanwhile, the Maldivian Prime Minister has refused to have any discussions with the British Government till the latter reconsidered its decision to remove the rebel leader, Mr. Afif, from Maldives and till the Maldives are given complete independence.

His refusal to have discussions was conveyed to the British Representative in Male, Mr. Arthington-Davy, who had met the Prime Minister with a view to discussing the establishment of a British Broadcasting Corporation relay station on Hitadoo island in Addu Atoll, where the British have established an RAF base.

The Prime Minister suggested to the British Representative that the British Government should submit a draft in writing with regard to the agreement on granting full independence to the Maldive Islands. It would then be possible for the Maldivian Government to state their views in the proposed draft and arrange for a discussion with the British Representative in Male.

The British Government was reported to have removed Mr. Afif, who revolted against the authority of the Maldivian Government in 1958, out of Maldives without the Maldivian Government's consent.

F. Ropeway Built By US Firm: A $5.98 million Khatmandu-Hetauda trial ropeway built by the American firm, Riblet Tramway Company, was formally transferred on April 8 to the Nepal Government.

A formal transfer deed was signed at a brief ceremony by Mr. Bhekh Bahadur Thapa, the Nepalese Economic Planning Secretary, and Mr. Virgil L. Follows, a representative of the US firm.

The 26-mile ropeway linking Nepal's capital with Hetauda town across Mahabharat Range has a capacity to transport 37.5 tons of freight per hour.

It can be used to transport food-stuffs and other goods in either direction at the same time.

G. British Expedition To "Ganesh Himal" Abandoned—Chinese Incursion Alleged: Lord Shaftesbury, who arrived in Khatmandu early in April to lead a four-member expedition to Ganesh Himal (7,406 metres) in the north-eastern Himalayas, has abandoned his plan and is awaiting the Nepal Government's permission to climb some other peak.

The main reason for this appeared to be the recent incursion by the Chinese into Nepalese territory in the region around the summit of Ganesh Himal about which Lord Shaftesbury came to know only after arrival in Khatmandu.

Apparently, the Nepal Government did not also know about these incursions when it granted permission to Lord Shaftesbury in January to climb Ganesh Himal.

It was understood that Lord Shaftesbury gathered evidence after his arrival in Khatmandu that not only the route to his proposed base came in the Chilme valley, but the base camp itself and even the summit would fall in an area where Chinese incursions had taken place and which the Chinese consider as Tibetan territory.

[In this region, a big block of area between 84 degrees and 89 degrees latitude has not been surveyed by Nepal and the Chinese presumably took advantage of this uncertainty to make their incursions].

PAKISTAN

A. Muslim League Programme: The Pakistan Muslim League, in its programme made public on March 17, said that the keynote of the League's policy towards education was widening of the base of free and compulsory primary education and greatly increasing the facilities for technical and vocational education.

The League recognized the need to provide Pakistan with an educational system which, based on the Islamic ideology, would facilitate transition into an era of science and technology and would promote all-round development and bring the country's moral, spiritual and cultural heritage into harmony with the increasing tempo of the modern world.

It aims at providing education to about 15 million children per year for the primary and lower secondary stages by 1970 and to achieve the objective of universal primary education by 1975.

To achieve these objectives, a substantial increase in the number of qualified teachers was necessary and a teachers' training programme was proposed so as to provide 40,000 primary teachers annually by 1970. At the higher college and university levels, the emphasis was placed on consolidation, on quality rather than numbers, and on expanding the teaching of science and technology.

It aimed at providing shelter for displaced persons and low-income groups by increasing investment in housing and settlement. It planned to promote the development and sale of land on easy terms, to encourage employers to provide houses on hire-purchase basis and to promote and patronise co-operative housing societies. To that end, it aimed at provision of tax concession in regard to housing for such groups.

It viewed with appreciation the efforts already made in the direction of rural development through the Works Programme implemented by the system of Basic Democracies and proposed not only the continuance but the expansion of such programmes especially in the rural areas.

It considered that, in consonance with its ultimate objective of a welfare state, the nation should aim at full employment, and it proposed that during the coming years the existing levels of unemployment and under-employment should be appreciably reduced and ultimately eliminated. In particular, it intended to provide for approximately five million new job opportunities during the next five to six years.

Its aim was to create a society wherein full facilities are provided to the Muslims of Pakistan to order their lives in accordance with the fundamental principles and basic concepts of Islam.

It will encourage the use of mosques as a centre of activity by the local community in the religious, social and educational spheres. It considered that Pesh Imams should be provided appropriate facilities, and arrangements should be made for the proper maintenance of mosques. It also considered it necessary to re-organize Madressah education in accordance with modern thinking.

It stands for compulsory religious teaching in schools and intends to extend it up to the Matric standard. In all colleges and universities. Islamic Studies was proposed to be introduced as an optional subject. Proper arrangements for research in Islamic Studies and for the teaching of Islamic Jurisprudence would be made.

The Muslim League believed that all elements in the society should be organized to work together voluntarily for the common good, and that the field of endeavour for community development should not be exploited for political aims. It would endeavour to set up a National Service Corps for providing voluntary national service through a dedicated band of workers who would assist both during emergencies and for social welfare works.

It recognized that healthy social and economic development could be ensured only if the people are enabled to develop a sense of participation in the affairs of the country. This participation could best be attained by establishing a system of Government under which citizens can freely elect representatives of their own choice. As provided in the Constitution, elections of representatives must be based on the right of universal adult suffrage. For the present, such right could be exercised in a meaningful manner only through the system of Basic Democracies.

The Muslim League would ensure that elections to the various Assemblies were held regularly in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

In the international sphere the League would endeavour to develop and strengthen the bonds of unity and friendship among all the Muslim peoples of the world. Simultaneously it would contribute to the promotion of good relations with all neighbouring countries and work for the attainment of international peace and harmony. With this object in view, it would support a policy of peace towards all, malice towards none. It would support the new dimension that had been added to Pakistan's foreign policy.

PHILIPPINES

A. Austerity Measures: Faced with a Budget deficit of at least 200 million pesos, President Diosdado Macapagal on March 4 imposed austerity measures on Government offices.

An executive order endorsed by the Cabinet restricted travel of officials and employees.

The order asked Government personnel to economize in the use of office utilities and facilities such as water, electricity, telephone, postage, motor vehicles and other conveyances.

It banned additional compensation by the hour for overtime service and required presidential approval before any vacant position in the Government could be filled.

Manila Press reports said that the budgetary deficit was estimated by Government experts to be between about 207 million pesos and 325 million pesos.

Rice Shortage:

Meanwhile, the Agriculture Secretary, Mr. Jose Y. Feliciano on March 5 scaled down the country's expected rice shortage this year from 300,300 tons to 200,000 tons.

He blamed adverse weather conditions —typhoons in some places, drought in others—and shifting of land erstwhile planted with rice to sugar and copra production for the impending shortage.

He was addressing the opening of a ten-day meeting of working groups of the International Rice Commission.

Sugar and copra, he noted, drew "relatively higher incomes" than rice.

Uptil now, the Philippine Government had projected the rice shortage this year to come to 300,000 tons, expected to come about in July or August.

President Macapagal had planned to import 100,000 tons from Burma, 50,000 tons from Thailand and 150,000 tons from USA to meet the shortage and set up a limited emergency stockpile.

The Senate Committee on Commerce and Industry, however, decided to use the 68 million pesos sought by Mr. Macapagal for the purchases from Burma and Thailand as local rice subsidy.

The projected 150,000 tons purchase from USA would come under US Public Law 480, under which payments would be made in pesos and the money would be used by USA to finance its aid projects in Philippines.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Prince Feisal Takes Over Power: A message on March 29 said that the fight for power in the Saudi Arabian royal family had ended in success for Prince Feisal Ibn Abdel Aziz, King Saud's brother and successor to the throne. (Prince Feisal holds the posts of Prime Minister and Foreign Minister.)

King Saud, who had wanted to regain first place in the Government with the help of his sons after he had delegated it to his brother on October 31, 1962, had accepted the decisions of a council of his brothers and the Ulemas and signed the decrees leaving Prince Feisal in control.

Following the signature, the King's guard was withdrawn from his personal command and placed under that of the Defence Ministry.

The "White Army" of the Islamic brotherhoods which used to be under the King's command in his capacity of spiritual leader (Imam) came under the Interior Ministry.

The "King's court," created by King Saud in 1961, which had become a source of constant friction between the Crown and the Premier, was abolished and replaced by a court chancellory.

The King's appanage was drastically cut, the sums thus saved being used for the country's development.

of all powers and his brother, Prince Feisal, proclaimed Regent and uncontested ruler of the kingdom.

Prince Feisal's decree naming himself Regent followed a resolution passed by 12 leading Ulemas (religious leaders) declaring King Saud "unfit to conduct the affairs of state".

Approved by 58 Saudi princes, the resolution said that all King Saud's powers and prerogatives would go to Prince Feisal in the light of the dispute between the King and Prince Feisal, which were about to lead the country to insurrection and anarchy.

It gave Prince Feisal, who has been Crown Prince since his elder brother took the throne, all powers to run Saudi Arabia's internal and foreign affairs without consulting King Saud.

Comment:

A despatch to The Statesman, Calcutta on April 7 gave the following implications of the new set-up:

"The 'white' coup in Saudi Arabia that has transferred complete power to Prince Feisal from King Saud can only have beneficial results for that country and for the Arab world in general: but these are apparent only in long-term prospect with the immediate benefits being more doubtful.

"That Saudi Arabia will eventually make the transition from a monarchy to a republic is inevitable; this change in itself makes that outcome the more certain. However, Prince Feisal's assumption of power will delay the process because if he reforms and modernizes his country it is with the aim of making the monarchical system more acceptable and enduring. But since his reforms will consolidate Saudi Arabia and give it the beginnings of a sound administration, acceptance of a delay will be a price worth paying. Even if belatedly, a future republican regime will inherit the foundations of a modern State.
